Senate considers bill
Rhodes Scholars wanted

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A bill being considered by the Senate Education Committee Monday would attract more Kansas Rhodes Scholars back to their native state.

The bill, introduced by Sen. Jack Steineger, D-Kansas City, and Sen. Wint Winter, R-Lawrence, would provide full scholarships for Rhodes scholars to complete a graduate degree from a Kansas university.

"The idea is to attract these scholars back into Kansas institutions," Steineger told the the committee.

The State Board of Regents endorsed the idea of the Kansas Rhodes Scholarship program, but Clantha McCurdy, director of student financial aid, told the committee the bill in its present form needs to be clarified.

"Kansas desperately needs to retain its young scholars," she said. "Their ideas, their energies and talents are definite attributes and resources for the future of the state."

—Clantha McCurdy

But she said the committee needs to specify if the Kansas-Rhodes Scholarship program would include Kansans who are attending out-of-state schools.

The Rhodes Scholarship program offers 32 American students a chance to study at Oxford University for either a second bachelor's degree or a master's degree.

Steineger said the program could include either students attending Kansas schools or bona fide Kansas residents attending out-of-state schools. But the Kansas-Rhodes Scholarship progam would only be offered if the Rhodes scholars attended a Kansas university.

"I think we all agree on the objective," he said. "The question is how do we implement it."

Vet med dean candidate stresses better recruiting

By Chris Wilhelm
Collegian Reporter

E. Dean Gage, one of five candidates for the position of Dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, spoke at an open forum Monday morning in Frick Auditorium.

Among the points emphasized during his hour-long speech was the idea that K-State's veterinary medicine program, as well as most veterinary programs in the nation, must change to meet the changing needs of society.

"The status quo will not get us into the next century in acceptable form," Gage said. "The reason I'm focusing mainly on colleges is because the responsibility for change lies within the colleges."

Gage suggested that the college programs associate more closely with the veterinary profession and that applicant requirements be changed to allow for more "diversity" in the type of student entering the veterinary field.

"We need to see a bold new partnership between colleges and the profession," Gage said. "There are many new career opportunities in veterinary medicine that prospective students should be made aware of.

"Applicant requirements must be changed, broadened," he said. "We need to get students in the school who can read and write and are just good students. We need requirements to be more diversified to include students with broad backgrounds."

Due to a declining number of qualified applicants for positions in the school, Gage said K-State can no longer rest on its recruiting laurels and must begin to recruit more avidly than it has in the past.

"Student recruiting is very important at this time. The number of qualified applicants has dropped 40 percent over the last seven years," he said. "We must stress quality and not foster mediocrity."

Other points addressed by Gage in the forum included a more flexible curriculum that would allow for more career alternatives. He suggested that more specialized classes be offered during the fourth year, while a core of clinical courses be maintained for the first three years of school.

Extra funding and more instructors will be required to improve the department, he said.

"An increase in faculty numbers is needed to protect faculty time (for research)," he said. "The University also can't depend on state allocations for all of its funding. Extramural funding is going to be necessary to improve the curriculum."

Gage ended his speech by comparing the necessary changes to an Eskimo dogsled.

"Unless you're the lead dog on the dogsled, the scenery never changes," he said.

stances, he has done the honorable thing."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said: "Secretary Carlucci is having to make some very difficult adjustments in the Pentagon to accommodate budgetary reductions. Secretary Webb indicates he is unable to operate under these constraints, but I know the president feels he has given very valuable service to the country."

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., chairman of the Senate Armed Services subcommittee that oversees the Navy budget, said in a statement: "I'm sorry to see Jim Webb go. In his brief stint, he impressed the Armed Services Committee as an able secretary."

Three times, Webb said, the Navy developed a plan for cutting its fiscal 1989 budget in such a way that the goal of expanding the fleet to 600 ships could still be reached. And each time, he said, the Navy's advice was "ignored" by Carlucci.

The Navy, like all the services, was ordered in early December to slash its fiscal 1989 budget proposal to comply with a new deficit-reduction plan. Ultimately, Webb said, the Navy ended up being told to cut $12.3 billion from its original spending plan.

In addition to K-State, all state universities will be represented in the film, Ault said.

The stations that will broadcast the promotion are located in in Wichita, Topeka, Great Bend, Garden City, Oberlin, Pittsburg, and Joplin, Mo.

Following its premiere, copies of the film will be available on video cassette through area Dillon's Stores, Southwestern Bell and the Department of Commerce. The film is designed as an educational tool for use by civic and educational groups nationwide.

DECISION 88

By The Associated Press

Sen. Bob Dole scored twin victories Tuesday night in the South Dakota Republican primary and Minnesota presidential caucuses, with Vice President George Bush far back in both states. Rep. Richard Gephardt and Gov. Michael Dukakis swapped Democratic victories as the nominating wars pointed South.

Gephardt outpaced Massachusetts Gov. Dukakis and the rest of the field to win the South Dakota primary. He was gaining 44 percent of the vote to 31 percent for the runner-up in nearly complete returns.

Dukakis countered with a win in Minnesota's caucuses as he demonstrated electoral strength outside his native New England. He had 34 percent of the vote, with Sen. Paul Simon, Jesse Jackson and uncommitted in a tight duel for second place and Gephardt in a distant fifth place.

Long-ago front-runner Gary Hart was trailing in both states and stood in danger of losing his eligibility for new federal campaign funds.

Bush read the writing on the wall and put up little effort in both Midwestern states, focusing instead on the South.

Dole, a loser last week in New Hampshire, said, "It's a lot more fun winning."

Gephardt and Dukakis both pronounced themselves well pleased.

"Tonight is a Gephardt night," crowed the Missouri congressman. "A few days ago we were behind in the polls. I think when you wake up in the morning you'll see it's a great victory," he said.

Dukakis said he had run well "right in the back yard of both Gephardt" and Sen. Paul Simon. "If we can continue to do consistently well as we did tonight, we're going to win this nomination for the presidency," he said.

Simon was struggling to survive and mounted a vigorous effort in Minnesota, as did Republican also-ran Rep. Jack Kemp.

Tuesday's voting gave the field of presidential hopefuls a chance to show electoral strength before the Southern festival of primaries and caucuses known as Super Tuesday on March 8. And Dole, bouncing back from a drubbing at Bush's hands last week in New Hampshire, was making the most of it in his Midwestern home ground.

In returns from 80 percent of South Dakota's 1,151 precincts, Dole had 36,789 or 56 percent of the vote compared to 12,546 or 19 percent for former television evangelist Pat Robertson and 11,943 or 18 percent for Bush. Rep. Jack Kemp trailed with 5 percent.

With 83 percent of the Democratic precincts reporting in South Dakota, Gephardt had 23,849 or 45 percent and Dukakis 15,600 or 30 percent. The also rans were Sen. Albert Gore Jr. at 9 percent, Gary Hart had 6 percent with Jesse Jackson had 5, as did Sen. Paul Simon, fighting for survival in the Democratic race.

In Minnesota, results from 30 percent of the precincts gave Dole 43 percent to 29 percent for Robertson. Kemp was third with 15 percent and Bush was running fourth with 10 percent.

The Democratic caucus procedure there was complicated and returns were expected to trickle in well past midnight.

John Fairman, assistant vice-president for institutional advancement, stands over Mike Tooney at the controls of the video editing suite in Durland Hall at K-State. Fairman is responsible for promoting K-State through radio, newspaper and television commercials.

Campus promos provide funding

By Patrice Macan
Collegian Reporter

Self-promotion is important to the success of any university, and K-State blows its own horn to the tune of about $10,000 annually.

Each year, the University spends about $3,000 on radio spots, $2,500 on newsletters and newspapers, $2,000 on television commercials and about $2,000 on fact sheets and brochures, said John Fairman, assistant vice president for institutional advancement.

"For example, we have in the past two years been using that kind of promotional material to help in the attraction of students to Kansas State University to support our admissions efforts," he said.

All of the promotional materials — such as the commercials, radio spots and newsletters — are used on a statewide basis. None of the promotions are national.

However, the promotions do differ from state to local advertisements. Local promotions usually center around events that will be happening on campus. Statewide advertisements center on academics, Fairman said.

Radio spots for athletic events also tell about academic programs or achievements of the students that would not otherwise be covered, he said.

The latest campaign this fiscal year began Feb. 16 when a year-long celebration of the University's 125th anniversary was begun. Fairman said some of the promotion in the first half of the year will be directed at the anniversary celebration and K-State's history.

"These (promotions) are things or projects that are directed at issues or challenges that face the University in a given period of time," he said.

Promotions, Fairman said, provide the funding that enables the University to address the issues.

One promotion that was undertaken late last year has yet to produce any tangible results. Before Christmas of last year, Student Senate and the administration sent sweatshirts, hats and T-shirts to about 10 celebrities, at a cost of $147, Fairman said. However, neither Fairman nor Senate has heard from any of the celebrities.

"We're not planning to do anything like that this year," Fairman said, adding that the University will wait to see the impact the promotion has before anything similar is attempted.

On Jan. 1, K-State changed its policy concerning the licensing of its logo. Under the old policy, local merchants were able to use the logo free of charge, but they now have to pay to use it. Although the fee could result in extra revenue for the University, Fairman said it is difficult to tell how much money has been made.

Local work unaltered by animal proponents

By Jeff Stead
Collegian Reporter

Burning buildings, smashing cars and stealing research animals is one way of getting a point across, at least in the eyes of ALF. No, ALF isn't the furry TV alien, but the Animal Liberation Front.

The group has claimed responsibility for several acts of vandalism against universities that conduct animal research.

Among ALF's alleged actions:

- Its members allegedly set fire to the University of California-Davis Veterinary Medicine Diagnostic Lab in April 1987, causing $3.5 million in damage;
- The group allegedly broke into buildings at the University of Oregon, destroying lab equipment;
- And most recently, members allegedly stole 13 dogs from the University of California-Irvine.

"They're extremists in that they would like to shut off all animal research," said Samuel Kruckenberg, professor and dean of the Veterinary Medical Center. "They would even like to get to the point where we would use no animals for food."

K-State hasn't had any interruptions of research or teaching, or demonstrations by ALF, but there are people who would prefer there be no use of animals in any campus research, he said.

"This would make it very difficult for teaching and would make it very difficult for progress (to occur)," he said.

Animals are widely used in the testing of new drugs, including those that would potentially combat diabetes and hypertension, he said.

Some animals, such as rabbits, are used extensively in the testing of the effects of cosmetics on the human eye, he said.

"Before a drug is ever tested in humans it has to go through a very long process of animal testing," he said. "Some animals have to be used in testing," to determine if the drug is effective and safe.

K-State uses about 150 dogs per year while teaching veterinary medicine students, he said.

Some of the dogs used are unwanted dogs received from the Manhattan pound, he said.

"We don't want animals anybody else had as a pet," Kruckenberg said.

Most of the cattle and horses used are donated because the animal has some sort of genetic problem, he said.

Some of the cattle that are used in research are bred on campus, and some of the horses used are bought, he said.

Areas of research in which animals are used at K-State include genetic research — including birth defects — and breeding tests.

After research work is completed, cattle having market value as meat may be processed for hamburger, he said.

Any animal that is given a drug or chemical would be disposed of by other means and would never be available for human consumption, Kruckenberg said. Horses and dogs used in surgery teaching are put to sleep before they recover from having surgery performed on them, he said.

This method ensures that the animal suffers no pain that otherwise would result during recovery, he said.

Animals that have been put to death are used for teaching and are disposed of through the autopsy area, he said.

The research facility follows federal regulations and guidelines that are the accepted practices in the care of research animals, Kruckenberg said.

The animal research facility is subject to inspection by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, he said.

The facility is accredited for both animal facilities and animal research facilities, so it has at least two inspections each year by federal officials, he said.

It is also accredited, along with the College of Human Ecology, by the American Association of Laboratory Animal Care, so it is also under voluntary inspection and accreditation, he said.

Soviet Union plans to withdraw troops

Firm timetable not announced

By The Associated Press

BRUSSELS, Belgium — Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Tuesday the Soviet Union has made a "very clear" commitment to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan, even though no firm timetable has been announced.

U.S. sources said the Red Army had begun preparations to leave. Soviet soldiers were sent to Afghanistan in December 1979 and an estimated 115,000 are in the country helping the Communist government fight Moslem insurgents.

North Atlantic Treaty Organization officials who attended a closed meeting with Shultz described him as hopeful of a Soviet withdrawal, but said he did not mention specific evidence that preparations were under way.

Shultz told reporters, when asked why he was optimistic about Soviet intentions: "Their statements are very clear and very public and unequivocal, unadorned."

A senior U.S. official, briefing reporters on condition of anonymity, said Soviet troops are taking up defensive positions and dependents are being sent home. He said this was "solid evidence" that the Soviet military intervention would end soon.

The official also said Soviet soldiers are not being replaced when they finish tours of duty. He spoke on Shultz's flight to Brussels from two days of talks in Moscow.

While Shultz was in Brussels, the Kremlin's Warsaw Pact colleagues were briefed on the Moscow talks by Eduard A. Shevardnadze, the Soviet foreign minister.

After a 2½ -hour meeting with the NATO allies, Shultz flew to Washington to prepare for a trip Wednesday to the Middle East, where he will meet with Arab and Israeli leaders about efforts to revive peace negotiations.

In his remarks to reporters, Shultz said he had encountered "intense skepticism" about the chances of a breakthrough on Middle East negotiations, but the United States has "a few ideas" that could help end the deadlock. He was not specific.

"I believe that if there are chances, even if the chances are small, it's worthwhile trying," he said. "You can't be too afraid of failing."

Europeans who attended the NATO meeting said the allies praised Shultz and the Reagan administration for making an effort on Middle East peace.

Shultz said a complete Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan would boost prospects for resolving other regional issues.

. . "I certainly have the sense ... that they do regard their presence in Afghanistan as counterproductive at this point and they would like to leave," he said.

Violence continues in Israel

JERUSALEM — Police detained a Jewish settler accused of fatally shooting a 13-year-old Arab girl Tuesday in the occupied West Bank, and troops shot and killed a second Palestinian, the army said.

An Arab teen-ager in the occupied Gaza Strip accused Israeli soldiers of burying him and a companion alive on a beach near the town of Khan Yunis last week. The army said it was investigating.

It was the second alleged case of live burial by soldiers. Four Arabs from the West Bank village of Kfar Salem said soldiers used a bulldozer to bury them in mud and sand earlier this month. The army arrested two soldiers and said more would be detained.

The latest deaths brought to 63 the number of Palestinians killed by Israeli gunfire since violence began in the occupied territories on Dec. 8, according to United Nations figures.

FBI investigation disputed

WASHINGTON — Then-FBI Director William Webster was unaware that a terrorism investigation of anti-Reagan activists had been expanded to include their legitimate protest activities, a top bureau official said Tuesday.

Oliver B. Revell, executive assistant FBI director, also told the Senate Intelligence Committee that no one in the administration told the bureau to conduct the investigation.

Revell's testimony offered the first in-depth look at the FBI's investigations of the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador, or CISPES, which began in 1981 and ended in 1985. Leaders of CISPES maintain that the inquiries were politically motivated, but Revell denied that charge.

Monitors turn home into jail

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — Repeat drunken drivers convicted in a new program are being allowed to keep their jobs, but as soon as the whistle blows they must go home, stay home and stay sober. Big brother will be watching, and calling.

Anne Arundel County has invested $15,000 in 30 video monitoring systems, which are installed in offenders' homes and linked by telephone lines to a master control in the county jail.

Under the program launched Jan. 26, offenders are not watched all the time, but they never know when a jail officer will call and ask them to step before the camera.

"A lot of people say I got off easy, but you're stopped in your tracks at the front door," said one of the first four men sentenced under the program, a three-time offender who agreed to be interviewed on condition his name not be used.

Memo may link Meese to payoff

WASHINGTON — Independent counsel James McKay is trying to determine whether a reference to a "quid pro quo" in a memo to Attorney General Edwin Meese III refers to a payoff to the Israeli Labor Party, government sources familiar with McKay's investigation of Meese said Tuesday.

The memo from longtime Meese friend E. Robert Wallach discusses an Israeli commitment not to bomb a proposed $1 billion Iraqi oil pipeline.

"We all recognize that there would be no progress to this point" had Israeli-born Swiss oilman Bruce Rappaport "not been able to obtain the security package which involves the never-to-be-stated but fully understood quid pro quo which helped to produce that commitment," said Wallach's memo. The memo doesn't elaborate.

NEW YORK — A depressed young man unable to control a compulsion to keep washing his hands put a .22-caliber rifle in his mouth, pulled the trigger, and survived with his compulsion cured.

"His I.Q. did not change. There was no change personality-wise. He did not become an automaton. His symptoms are gone," said his doctor, Leslie Solyom, a psychiatrist at Shaughnessy Hospital in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada.

The man, identified only as George, suffered from the psychiatric ailment known as obsessive-compulsive disorder.

George washed his hands as often as 50 times a day. He would take four-hour showers.

Regents to look at Washburn

TOPEKA — Officials from Washburn University said Tuesday they support a proposal that would shift administration of the school's state aid to the Board of Regents.

Gov. Mike Hayden recommended the proposal in his budget for next fiscal year, saying it's the first step toward placing the municipal university under the regents control.

Under the proposal, Washburn would receive its state aid in the form of a grant that would be administered by the regents, said David Monical, Washburn's vice president for planning and governmental relations.

Monical spoke before the House Appropriations Committee, which is considering the proposal.

Now, the Legislature uses a funding formula based on the school's total credit-hour enrollment, the same formula as that used to distribute state aid to Kansas' 19 community colleges. Local property taxes also help support the school and would continue to do so under Hayden's proposal.

Hayden also recommended increasing state aid to Washburn by 5 percent during the next fiscal year, or to nearly $4.6 million.

Under the proposal, Washburn would continue to be administered by its own board of regents, although it would make budget requests to the state regents.

Book studies Indian culture

A 1975 K-State graduate has published a book on the agricultural practices of American Indians.

Douglas Hurt, associate director of the State Historical Society of Missouri at Columbia, wrote the book titled "Indian Agriculture in America: Prehistory to the Present."

In his book, Hurt said white civilization ruined rather than promoted Indian agriculture and that present-day Indian farmers, like their white counterparts, are a minority within their tribal communities.

Navy secretary selected

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan on Tuesday picked a veteran Capitol Hill infighter, William L. Ball III, to step into a simmering dispute over Pentagon budget cuts as his new secretary of the Navy.

The White House said the president will nominate Ball, a former Capitol Hill aide who has been chief lobbyist for both the State Department and the White House, to succeed James Webb, who resigned as Navy secretary on Monday with a blast at Secretary of Defense Frank C. Carlucci.

"We look to Will Ball to continue working aggressively for a strong U.S. Navy," White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, noting Webb's charge that Carlucci had needlessly sacrificed the administration's goal of a 600-ship fleet.

Fitzwater said the administration still seeks a 600-vessel Navy, but now expects that the goal will be reached in fiscal year 1992, more than two years after Reagan leaves office, rather than in fiscal 1989 as originally planned.

Ball, 40, a soft-spoken Southerner who came to Washington as an aide to former Sen. Herman Talmadge, D-Ga., has a reputation for skill at the behind-the-scenes compromises and maneuvers needed to steer legislation through Congress.

Ball has been assistant to the president for legislative affairs since February 1986. Before that he had been assistant secretary of state for legislative and intergovernmental affairs.

Kidnappers of Marine officer caught; officials seek leader

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — The main Shiite Moslem militia has caught three gunmen who kidnapped a U.S. Marine officer serving with the United Nations, but not the mastermind of the abduction, security sources said Tuesday.

The United Nations has approached Iran, Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization, which have influence in Lebanon, seeking help in the search for Lt. Col. William R. Higgins, U.N. spokesman Mario Zamorano said in New York.

Zamorano said the contacts were made by Undersecretary-General Marrack Goulding, who was in the region when Higgins was kidnapped last Wednesday. The 43-year-old Marine from Danville, Ky., is a decorated Vietnam veteran and was an aide to former U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

The relatively moderate Shiite militia Amal has seized 42 suspects in a clampdown on Shiite fundamentalists since Higgins was abducted near Tyre, 50 miles south of Beirut, an Amal spokesmen said on condition of anonymity.

Amal has been the dominant force in predominantly Shiite south Lebanon but is being challenged by Hezbollah, which is loyal to Iran and believed to be an umbrella for Shiite radical groups that hold most of the 25 foreigners missing in Lebanon.

Nine Americans now are among the missing foreigners.

Off-campus organization elects executive members, adopts fee

By The Collegian Staff

"It was kind of a spur-of-the-moment thing (to run for president)," Nick said. "As a student who lives off campus, I know how important it is for us to have our say."

Nick said one of the most frightening things about the job is effectively reaching the large number of people who live off campus and recruiting them for membership in the association.

"One thing I would like to stress is there are people here from all colleges and majors. It is great to see these people come together in an organization where they can have some say on what is happening," Nick said. "I definitely encourage people to come here."

The Off-Campus Association's constitution states that it is open to any K-State student not residing in an organized living group. It shall provide a medium of communication with the community and the Student Governing Association. It will also provide a program of University, philanthropic and social activities for off-campus students.

This year's organization is depending on the enthusiasm of the members to create success, said Doug Folk, junior in electrical engineering.

Marla McDaniel, sophomore in elementary education, was elected vice president. She said she is interested in the organization because people living off campus should still have the opportunity for group activities.

KU should have given KKK chance to speak

"Great universities, such as this one, serve as places where widely divergent views are expressed, debated and analyzed," University of Kansas Chancellor Gene A. Budig said in a statement last week.

However, the expression, debate and analysis of views held by two Ku Klux Klan members — scheduled to appear on a University of Kansas student radio talk show and in a reporting class — will be postponed. Reasons for the postponement of both appearances have been offered by different officials. But the underlying reason seems to be because of pressure from local black leadership.

It would be timely to point out that the guarantee of free speech in the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution applies to everyone regardless of their views and regardless of public support or opposition. In the same statement, Budig said that a suppression of views, however repugnant or bizarre, had no place on a university campus.

Yet by not allowing the scheduled appearances of the Klan members to take place, the officials involved have suppressed their views — and have weakened the educational process by limiting the exchange of ideas. What happens if pressure again surfaces when the appearances are rescheduled?

Will the Klan and its views be postponed away? Why not just supress them outright, saving the various organizations involved time and trouble?

Two of the main groups that have embraced the freedoms contained in the First Amendment are blacks and journalists. It is sad to see how quickly they can forget that the First Amendment applies to everyone and not just specific groups.

Supreme Court correct to uphold textbook law

Supreme Court Justices should be praised for refusing Monday to hear the pleas of fundamentalist Christian parents who wanted to prevent their children from reading "godless" textbooks in Tennessee public schools.

Justices unanimously rejected an appeal from seven families, leaving intact a federal appeals court ruling that declared it constitutional to require fundamentalist Christian children to read the "questionable" books.

The textbook controversy began in 1983 when a Tennessee school board adopted a reading list for grade school students. Parents began to argue that themes in some of the books contradicted their religious beliefs in areas such as evolution, occultism and feminism.

Seven families sued the school board and listed more than 300 objections to the readings. The good witch Glenda in "The Wizard of Oz" and passages from "Cinderella" were two such objections.

A lower appeals court ruled in favor of the schools, declaring that "What is absent from this case is the critical element of compulsion to affirm or deny a religious belief."

The Supreme Court left that decision intact Monday. And well it should have.

School officials, by requiring textbook readings, are not forcing certain beliefs down the students' throats. What kind of education would students be receiving if every "objectionable" subject was censored?

Perhaps those who are concerned that the readings are adversely affecting their children should take a closer look at their own beliefs before drawing negative attention to themselves by calling for "a mass exodus from the public school system." Students have a right to learn.

Denying them that right, or allowing it only under specific circumstances, is an insult to the idea of academic freedom.

Life's changing rules

Survivors must learn to adapt

Commentary

BECKY LUCAS
Collegian Columnist

Life isn't like a game of baseball with set rules. Instead, life is a game where the rules are constantly changing, unbeknownst to the players.

Likewise, as the rules are changing, the paths on which we find ourselves are also constantly changing. Whenever we find one door shutting on us, another door opens; whether we see that door or not is our problem.

As a 22-year-old college graduate, I can feel one door creeping shut even as I type. The door which will clank shut on May 11 will also shut on many exciting memories and wishful dreams. But that door is not only shutting on my college endeavors and dreams, it is also closing on similar dreams and aspirations of students around the world.

Unfortunately, one of the dreams many people — women especially — see closing in on them is the dream of not remaining single for the rest of their life. And at 21 or 22, even five years seems like an eternity.

I just spent two hours on the phone talking to a friend, trying to help her overcome the loss of a boyfriend of six months. She kept asking me why she was feeling such pain when she really never liked the guy all that well in the first place. She also was upset about the prospect of never finding another man in the whole world, especially since she was graduating this May and that once school is done, "Where are you supposed to meet guys?"

She wasn't just upset that she wasn't going to meet guys anymore, but she was also upset that she wasn't getting married.

"But everyone I know from high school is getting married," she said.

"Are you sure that's true — 100 percent of your high school class is getting married?" I skeptically questioned.

"Well, at least five of my closest 25 friends are," she replied.

It was too bad she wasn't the only one I'd heard recently with that opinion. Her remarks mirrored a large percentage of opinions to which I found myself listening with greater frequency than usual from friends and acquaintances. Suddenly, it seems, the jokes between friends about finding a good-looking, wealthy spouse are no longer solely in jest. Some of my friends are doing some serious looking — call it their chosen vocation if you will.

And if you choose to listen to them, these friends can paint a bleak picture of what is still to happen during our lifetimes. Then when rational thought overpowers the emotional nonsense my friends are spouting, I found out something so simple it was scary.

First of all, I learned that a few of the rules of life had changed since beginning college five years ago. I had learned that just because one door was shutting on my life that others were and still are opening. People must learn to live with today instead of rehashing yesterdays or scratching at some closed door which will never open again.

People of all ages must brave the unknown and open their eyes in an attempt to find the doors which have been opened while the others closed. To a college graduate, many doors are opening. That's not to say the doors are swinging wide open, with a red carpet and fanfare. Rather, these doors have been merely unlocked.

Any diligent job-seeker will be happy to testify that some of the unlocked doors took giant shoves to open. And sometimes upon opening, they immediately snapped shut. Something too many people forget, also, is to think first of their own self-worth.

Why do some people think they can't be whole if there isn't another person sharing their life? Or possibly that they are missing out on life if they don't get that $30,000 job straight out of school. The answer is seemingly simple enough: These people do not value themselves as contributing individuals. But how can people overcome this problem that most face at one time or another?

The best solution would have people recognize things in life that they enjoy doing. Not things that someone else enjoys or that society says you should enjoy, but that they enjoy.

After this has been ascertained, people can use this knowledge whenever they feel doors closing faster than they think they can stand.

So next time someone sees life as an eternity of boredom and solutide, or as a lifetime of wasted ambition, remind them that if doors shut on them while they were playing "life," it's only their fault if they can't locate the open doors. And if they claim there aren't any open doors, remind them that sometimes knocking doesn't work and to try dynamite, because there is always a new door.

And when the new doors open, the playing field and rules will undoubtedly be different. So don't be shocked when you're called out before you even try swinging. That's just the nature of the game.

Revealing lecture

Editor,

This Thursday, the Coalition for Human Rights will be sponsoring a lecture given by Melinda Power, attorney and human rights activist, on political prisoners in the United States. In this lecture, Ms. Power will discuss her investigation of human rights' abuses at Lexington Prison Control Unit, a maximum security unit for women in Lexington, Ky.

The American Civil Liberties Union National Prison Project recently conducted an investigation of Lexington, including interviews with its warden, and deemed it an "underground tomb," with conditions that violate the womens' human rights and jeopardize their mental and physical health. For example, the women have limited visiting hours, very limited contact with media or literature from the "outside" and are housed in a basement with no windows and constant flourescent lighting.

Power's lecture will address issues fundamental to the state of U.S. law and justice. It will be held at 7 p.m. Thursday in Kedzie 106 and will be free and open to the public.

Francesca T. Royster
president, Coalition for Human Rights and senior in English

Arrogant critics

Editor,

Criticism leveled by the Collegian editorial board and columnist Wally Brockhoff toward the content and delivery of Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor's Landon Lecture is but another example of a pretentious newspaper trying to legitimize itself as the omniscient critic.

We should be grateful that such eminent national leaders are willing to share snippets of their knowledge from the field in which they have excelled. Justice O'Connor's history of the evolution of the federal judiciary at the Constitutional Convention was timely, coming on the heels of the Constitution's bicentennial and the recent confirmation of a new associate justice, and entirely appropriate, given her extensive knowledge on the subject.

That her remarks were uncontroversial should not be grounds for criticism of her lecture. Americans repeatedly demonstrate a lack of appreciation for, and understanding of, their national heritage. That someone of Justice O'Connor's stature makes herself available to redress this deficiency should be commended.

It is difficult to believe that the editorial board possesses so many experts on American judicial history that its members become bored by such an authoritative and eloquent history lesson. Maybe we ought to have a journalist deliver the next Landon Lecture. Then, perhaps, we can learn why journalists feel so compelled to find fault with every subject they report on.

Fluent banality

Editor,

As I walked from McCain Auditorium the morning of Feb. 16, satirical thoughts provoked images of Sandra Day, as blonde and coy as Olivia Newton-John, properly positioned before a full house, articulating her theme: "Look at me I'm Sandra Dee, fluent in banality." But now, a week later, my callous sarcasm has worn and from beneath, my true feelings of disappointment are calling for expression.

At breakfast the day of Sandra's speech, I busied myself reading Edward Schiappa's guest column, sensing his hopeful expectations, wanting to be there too to judge for myself "whether 'aggressive majoritarianism' is good news or bad." For a college student, those times of hearing the actual spoken word from mouths of the influential are experiences much closer to reality than the common ritual of sponging the textbook.

I arrived at the Landon Lecture open-minded and alert, ready to engage in some critical thinking, prepared to soak in and filter out. But there was nothing to filter. I was cheated. Her lecture played upon not a chord of controversy; it was all fact and non-fiction. Even the freedom of questioning was restricted. The audience was not allowed to explore, nor discover.

In taking her speech literally, I gained nothing but despondency. Looking deeper, though, within her presence and public address, there were unspoken words radiating the hidden message. "Aggressive majoritarianism" was spelled out in the harmony forced upon us. Our individual rights and voices were sacrificed for the sake of the "collective opinion," Big Brother. I felt manipulated for I listened but was not heard; I wanted to understand, but was not given the chance. Controversy was sacrificed for the sake of social equanimity, and arousal for composure.

Sandra, in sacrificing her own voice to become a "conservative clone," may perhaps expect the same from us, the community, the individuals. The trend seems to be clear: Our individual rights are subsidiary to the "compelling interests" of the government. And yet, I hope Sandra Day and those of the Supreme Court remember that the individual makes the community, and the waves make the ocean.

Taste tests cause controversy

By Chris Doll
Special Projects Editor

When the Food and Nutrition Department signed a contract with Consumer Union, it had no idea it would be called a "scab" organization by a labor union.

Consumer Union, a non-profit organization that publishes Consumer Report magazine, hired the sensory analysis center located in Justin Hall after union employees stopped volunteering for the taste tests last March. It hoped the move would increase its bargaining stance in negotiations with management.

"The union asked people not to volunteer for anything. We said we wanted them to 'Do what you are ordered — nothing more,'" said Gordon Hard, assistant editor for the magazine and unit vice chair for the Newspaper Guild of New York.

Before the March boycott, union members volunteered for the in-house taste panel that were held during working hours, he said. The employees were trained and paid for the hours they volunteered for the panels. Their conclusions were used in the food articles in Consumer Report magazine, which is based in Mount Vernon, N.Y.

Magazine employees have been working without a contract since Dec. 31, 1986. Since then, the management has not increased the salaries of union members. To encourage members to the negotiation table, the union has promised to pay the salaries with raises for the past two years when a new contract is signed, said David C. Berliner, associate director of Consumer Union.

A dispute about the type of pay bonuses members should receive is blocking the way to an agreement. The management would like to award bonuses based on quality of work or merit pay. Under its plan, the employees would receive guaranteed salaries which would include a raise, plus a bonus in merit pay.

Union representatives say this would destroy the union because it could not negotiate the total contract of the employees. When a company uses a merit-pay scale, the union does not have the solidarity of all the workers salaries behind it when it negotiates.

"They want all the power. We would like to negotiate, but they don't want to," Hard said.

Berliner said many of the employees had asked for a merit-pay scale, and that an objective appraisal system could work to their advantage.

"Now, there is no opportunity for someone doing better," he said. "Quite a few asked for merit pay before."

The company has a good union contract and the salaries are better than average, Berliner said. The minimum salary for a writer is $900.92 a week.

When the the management needed someone to replace the test panels, it "farmed the job out" to the sensory analysis centers like the one at K-State. Since the management has found someone to do the job, it does not need to settle the labor dispute by making concessions to the union, Hard said.

Elizabeth Smith, manager of the sensory analysis center, said K-State's involvement does not hamper negotiations.

"It is such a small portion of the work they do. The food articles are about 10 percent of the magazine and the sensory analysis is less than that," she said.

Smith said the department viewed the disagreement between labor and management as an "in-house problem" that did not concern the department. She said she had no qualms about working for Consumer Union's management.

"The dispute has been going on for a long time. At a certain point you have to say, 'There's no movement,' and get on with it," she said.

Hard said a boycott asking readers to cancel their subscriptions and members to stop volunteering for taste panels was put in place to draw attention to the labor dispute, and the union hoped the pressure would make management more flexible.

But according to Berliner, this has not been the case.

"The boycott has virtually no effect. Circulation has gone up," he said. "We are between 3.8 million and 4 million issues a month, and we have only had about 1,000 cancellation."

Part of the reason the success of the boycott has not been outstanding is because of sensory analysis centers like the one at K-State. The company did not have problems finding the centers because they were used before in-house testing was introduced two years ago, he said.

Also, he said, even when in-house tests were being conducted, the company contracted some of the tests to other laboratories because they required expertise the in-house test could not provide.

Answers on AIDS

Why is it safe to donate blood?

Before the blood screening programs were instituted in the nation's blood banks in 1985, some people were exposed to the AIDS virus through receiving transfusions of someone else's blood. That shouldn't happen anymore. Because of the long incubation period for AIDS, you may still hear about new cases of AIDS diagnosed in the future resulting from pre-1985 transfusions.

People who donate blood won't be exposed to anything. As a donor, you will be provided with a sterile throw-away needle that will be used only by you. Nothing will enter your body that can do any harm. There is no way for any virus to enter your bloodstream when you are donating blood at a blood bank.

Since some people have the mistaken impression that donating blood is risky, many people have quit donating blood. As a result, the blood banks are running short of blood. Unless you have some reason to think that you might have been exposed to AIDS in the past, and that your own blood might already be contaminated, please help out by donating blood at your local blood bank or blood drive.

What about swimming pools and hot tubs?

Swimming pools and hot tubs do not spread AIDS.

There are at least three reasons why swimming pools and hot tubs are safe. Remember that in order to do any harm, the AIDS virus must get from inside the body of an infected person to inside the body of someone else in sufficient quantity to be harmful and without the virus dying in the meantime.

First, it is unlikely that the virus would be able to get into the pool or hot tub in any dangerous quantity. The infected person would have to bleed into the water in a very large amount. Then, secondly, the virus would immediately spread through the water and be diluted to the point of ineffectiveness. Third, the chlorine in the pool would kill the virus.

Even if the pool were improperly chlorinated or not chlorinated at all, the virus would still not hurt anyone unless significant quantities of the virus were to enter someone's body. How would it do that? You would have to drink huge quantities of the water — probably more than a person is even capable of drinking — and then the virus would have to get into your bloodstream.?

So, the virus doesn't really have a chance in a swimming pool or hot tub. Pools and hot tubs are safe.

Vandalism plagues Goodnow Hall

By Vince Huser
Collegian Reporter

Incidents of vandalism were reported on the rise during the fall 1987 semester in at least one campus residence hall.

"We had more damage in the first semester of this (school year) than we have had in an entire year for the past three years," said Emily Weinacker, director of Goodnow Hall.

"Traditionally, though, we have had a low rate with comparison to other halls," Weinacker said.

During the fall semester, Goodnow had from $300 to $500 worth of expenses due to vandalism.

However, Leslie Steinle, assistant hall director of Goodnow, said incidents of vandalism have declined this semester.

"It doesn't seem like we've had that much in the last four weeks," Steinle said.

The problem isn't contained in a certain floor or corridor. Some of the vandalism Goodnow has encountered are broken windows, ripped carpet, broken chairs and graffiti on the walls.

"Usually (when confronted) people will admit they did it and pay for it," Weinacker said. But when they don't "we will call the campus police and press charges if the damage is serious enough."

In an effort to prevent vandalism, Goodnow is trying to educate hall residents about the effects of vandalism.

"When vandalism occurs, it's the floor that pays if no one comes forward," Weinacker said. The money is taken from the floor's social fund. This may result in a loss of a social function due to a lack of funds, she said.

Goodnow is also trying to establish a neighborhood watch system.

"The Housing Governing Board and the staff sat down and brainstormed the idea for the neighborhood watch," Weinacker said. The idea is to try to get people who see other people vandalizing the hall to report it, she said. However, this is difficult because some people are afraid to get involved.

Goodnow is also trying to sponsor more social activities, since the legal drinking age has increased to 21.

Boyd Hall, Ford Hall, Marlatt Hall and West Hall have all reported only minor incidents of vandalism this year. Edwards Hall, which is primarily for graduate students, has reported no vandalism.

Avoiding tests may be cause of bomb threats

By Nancy Chartrand
Staff Writer

An extortionist trying to avoid a test may have been responsible for the latest bomb threats to campus buildings Tuesday afternoon. Threats made to Calvin and Kedzie halls bring the number of bomb threats made on campus to three since Sunday.

Marlatt Hall received a call Sunday from an individual who said a bomb would go off in 20 minutes. The dorm director decided not to evacuate, and a bomb never went off.

And on Tuesday afternoon, a caller phoned Calvin Hall and said it and Kedzie Hall would "go up in a while."

Richard Herrman, investigator for K-State Police, said typical extortionists are those trying to avoid taking tests.

"There were a lot of tests today in Calvin," Herrman said.

Because of this, Herrman said he doesn't believe Tuesday's threats are related to the Marlatt call.

Herrman said bomb threats are becoming so common that teachers who suspect their test will prompt a threat have begun to schedule back-up rooms in other buildings, Herrman said.

The teacher then posts a note and informs the officers so they can tell students who showed up. Those students who do not show up for the tests are then considered suspects, Herrman said.

While Marlatt Hall wasn't evacuated Sunday, officials from the College of Business Administration and the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications decided to evacuate Calvin and Kedzie halls.

"The decision to evacuate is made by the building manager or whoever is in charge," Herrman said.

In the case of Calvin, the dean was not available so the assistant dean made the decision to evacuate, Herrman said.

Carol Oukrop, head of the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications, made the decision to evacuate Kedzie based on previous experience.

"During my first bomb threat in 1969 when things were really hot, the police asked us (faculty and staff) to look for the bomb," Oukrop said.

"We didn't know what a bomb looked like. We were going through the trash and drawers. We owe it to our families (to evacuate) because you never know," she said.

Herrman said police ask the faculty and staff to help in finding the bombs because they would know better what is suspicious. During the evacuation, campus police respond to assist in evacuating the building and to guard the doors until an all-clear is given.

Evacuation is often difficult for the police.

"We start at the top floor and go from door-to-door," Herrman said.

"I have had professors flat out refuse to evacuate," said Lt. James E. Tubach of campus police.

Herrman said that when someone does refuse to evacuate he takes their name down and turns it in to the person who is in charge of the building.

In the instance that a bomb is found, the actions campus can take are limited, Herrman said. Although many larger police departments have trained dogs that can locate the explosives or bomb squads that can defuse them, the campus police do not have such capabilities.

"If we found a bomb we would remove it, call the (Explosive Ordinance Disposal) at Fort Riley and hope they got here in time," Herrman said.

House committee criticizes flashy license plate design

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The state's new license plates apparently aren't making much of an artistic impression.

Or, at least that's what officials from the state Department of Revenue heard Tuesday from members of the House Transportation Committee, who said the aesthetic value of the new, flashier plate design is lost on most of their constituents.

In fact, they said, most Kansans are from the old school: they're not too pleased with some of the fancy lettering on the plates, and they want the state to bring back the traditional two-letter county designations.

"It's been a topic that's been number one on their priority list," said Rep. Jeff Freeman, R-Burlington.

The committee heard testimony on a bill Freeman and 24 other House members sponsored to bring back the state's old license plate design in five years, when the new plates are expected to wear out.

The plates have blue numbers and letters against an off-white background, a blue border at the top with "Kansas" in ornate letters displayed in the middle. In the upper left-hand corner is a small county-designator decal. The plates' numbering system, called SAM-123, is a series of three letters and three numbers.

Young artists show work

By The Collegian Staff

For the first time, Kansas high school students have been given the opportunity to have their art work displayed in a gallery setting at K-State.

This year, the K-State Art Department sent invitations to Kansas high schools, offering the students a chance to display their work in the K-State art gallery.

"We would have loved to have every school," said Renata Replogle, an art instructor who is in charge of recruitment.

Because of schedule problems, only two schools could participate, she said.

Art from Shawnee Mission Northwest was on display Feb. 3-12, and Shawnee Mission North art will be on display through today.

Some works being displayed have been entered in state competition. The art also has a possibility of being selected for national competition, Replogle said.

"We benefit, and the public benefits (by the showings)," she said. "Often the students apply for art scholarships and already having one's work shown in a gallery reflects well."

This is the first year for this program. After the showing is over, the program will be evaluated and a possible continuation of the program will be sought, she said.

"I like the diversity I see ... there are good compositional skills," Replogle said.

So far, there have been high marks for the high school students with faculty. They are "really impressed with the quality" and finding the "individuality exciting," she said.

"The students are to be commended for their artistic talent and the teachers with (their) quality programs," she said.

The gallery is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and is located in the Art Building.

Fajitas. What are they? This is what most people want to know when they're sitting in a restaurant and out of the kitchen comes a waitress carrying a sizzling hot griddle trailed by steam and smelling of aromatic meat.

Fajitas are a dish that swept Texas quite some time ago but now are gaining great popularity in the Midwest.

"There was a large demand for fajitas about four years ago; that's when it really started out," said Eric Govar, manager of Matts El Rancho, a Mexican restaurant with a long-standing reputation for good Mexican food in Austin, Texas. Govar said this is when most restaurants in Texas began serving fajitas because of the demand.

"Everybody was serving (fajitas) different ways, but everyone had fajitas," Govar said. He added that things now are a little different. "Almost everybody offers fajitas now, even Taco Bell is selling them."

Govar said fajitas are a relatively new dish, probably coming out around eight years ago. He explained that the delay in popularity is because it takes some time to get people accustomed to a new food.

Maybe it's time for you to try fajitas. Even if you have had them in a restaurant, why not try making them yourself. Fajitas are relatively easy to make, they just take a little time

The Meat:

Fajita meat is always marinated, and this is very important to the flavor. Marinade is best if prepared at least eight to 12 hours before the fajitas are to be cooked.

Fajitas marinade

To make two pounds of beef or chicken or can be used twice on one pound amounts.
Ingredients:

- ½ cup Italian salad dressing
- ½ cup soy sauce
- ½ cup apple cider or wine vinegar
- ¼ cup Worcestershire sauce
- ¼ cup brown sugar
- 1 tablespoon garlic (minced or powder)
- ½ squeezed lime

Mix ingredients together in the order listed, stir well. Don't worry when the oil from the Italian dressing separates out after sitting, this is not a problem. Once the meat is added the contents will re-mix. Occasionaly while the meat is marinading in the refrigerator stir the mixture for consisteney.

Fajitas usually come in two varieties, beef and chicken, though other meats are now being used.

Beef fajitas are frequently called steak fajitas simply because that is what they should be made of. This doesn't mean a 16-ounce T-bone steak is necessarily the best meat to use. Usually the best meat for fajitas is not the best steak on the shelf.

Because the beef will be marinated, a cut of less expensive meat works quite well. A skirt steak is normaly recommended, although a rib steak is also a good cut to use.

For chicken fajitas, breast meat is usually preferred. Split chicken breasts that can be filleted or chicken breasts that are already filleted are good choices.

The meat can be marinated either cut into strips or whole. The choice depends only upon the amount of time the meat can be marinated and how heavy the marinade flavor desired.

If there is only a short time to marinate the meat, or if a strong taste is desired, pre-cut pieces will work quite well. If time allows, or if only a light marinade flavor is desired the meat can be marinated whole.

The time for marination should be varied depending upon what type of meat is to be used.

Up to 24 hours is acceptable for a heavy flavor on beef. However, a marinating time between 14 to 20 hours is recommended. Chicken should take less time, eight to 12 hours works well.

The time allotted for marinating should be toward the top end for whole meat and the low end for strips of the meat.

Regardless of how the meat is marinated, before the meat is cooked it should be cut into strips.

Usually these are strips about ½ of an inch wide and three to four inches long, however, as with most cooking, this can vary with preference.

The Fixings:

Most of the preparation for fajitas comes in making the fixings.

As with most Mexican food, shredded lettuce and grated cheese are necessary ingredients, however, this is only the beginning. Green peppers, onions and a special salsa are also in order.

The salsa called "Pica de Gallo" is translated "tail of the rooster," but that is certainly not what it contains.

Pica de Gallo

To make one quart
Ingredients:

- 3 large tomatoes chopped fine
- 2 jalapeno peppers, seeded and chopped fine (after the peppers are seeded they should be washed with water, gloves are recommended for this and the chopping).
- 2 tablespoons fresh cilantro (This may be a hard item to find. If it cannot be found try using one tablespoon dried cilantro and one tablespoon parsley.)

This should be mixed together adding salt to taste. If the mixture is too hot, more tomatoes can be added to lessen the fire.

After the Pica de Gallo is prepared, it is best to be refrigerated until the fajitas are ready to serve. In the mean time, vegetables need to be cut up, guacamole must be made, and cheese must be shredded.

Both onions and green peppers are cooked with the meat, and should be cut into wedges accordingly. Two green peppers should be cut in half and then cut into wedges. Depending on taste, ½ onion to a whole onion should also be cut into wedges. These vegetables can be mixed together and will be grilled with the meat.

About 1¼ cups of both lettuce and cheese should also be shredded and set aside until fajita assembly begins.

Guacamole, often used as a dip for chips, is also a good topping for fajitas. Guacamole is made with avacados and is quick and easy to prepare.

Guacamole

Ingredients:

- 2-3 ripe avacados, pealed, save the pits
- 4-6 tablespoons picante sauce
- 1 tomato chopped fine
- ½ teaspoon lemon or lime juice

Mash the avacados with a fork and add the lemon/lime juice. Now mix in the chopped tomato and add picante sauce to taste. Take the avacado pits and mix them in with the sauce. Though this sounds odd the pits help prevent the guacamole from turning brown.

The Cooking:

Once the meat has been marinated and the green peppers and onions have been prepared, the actual cooking process can begin.

There are many different ways to cook fajitas, the most popular way and the way most restaurants cook them is to fry them on a cast-iron griddle.

Though this is popular and is also quite fast another way that adds even more flavor to the fajitas is to grill the meat, green peppers and onions on a charcoal grill. This method takes longer and usually doesn't leave the vegetables crisp.

Possibly the best method is to do a combination of the two.

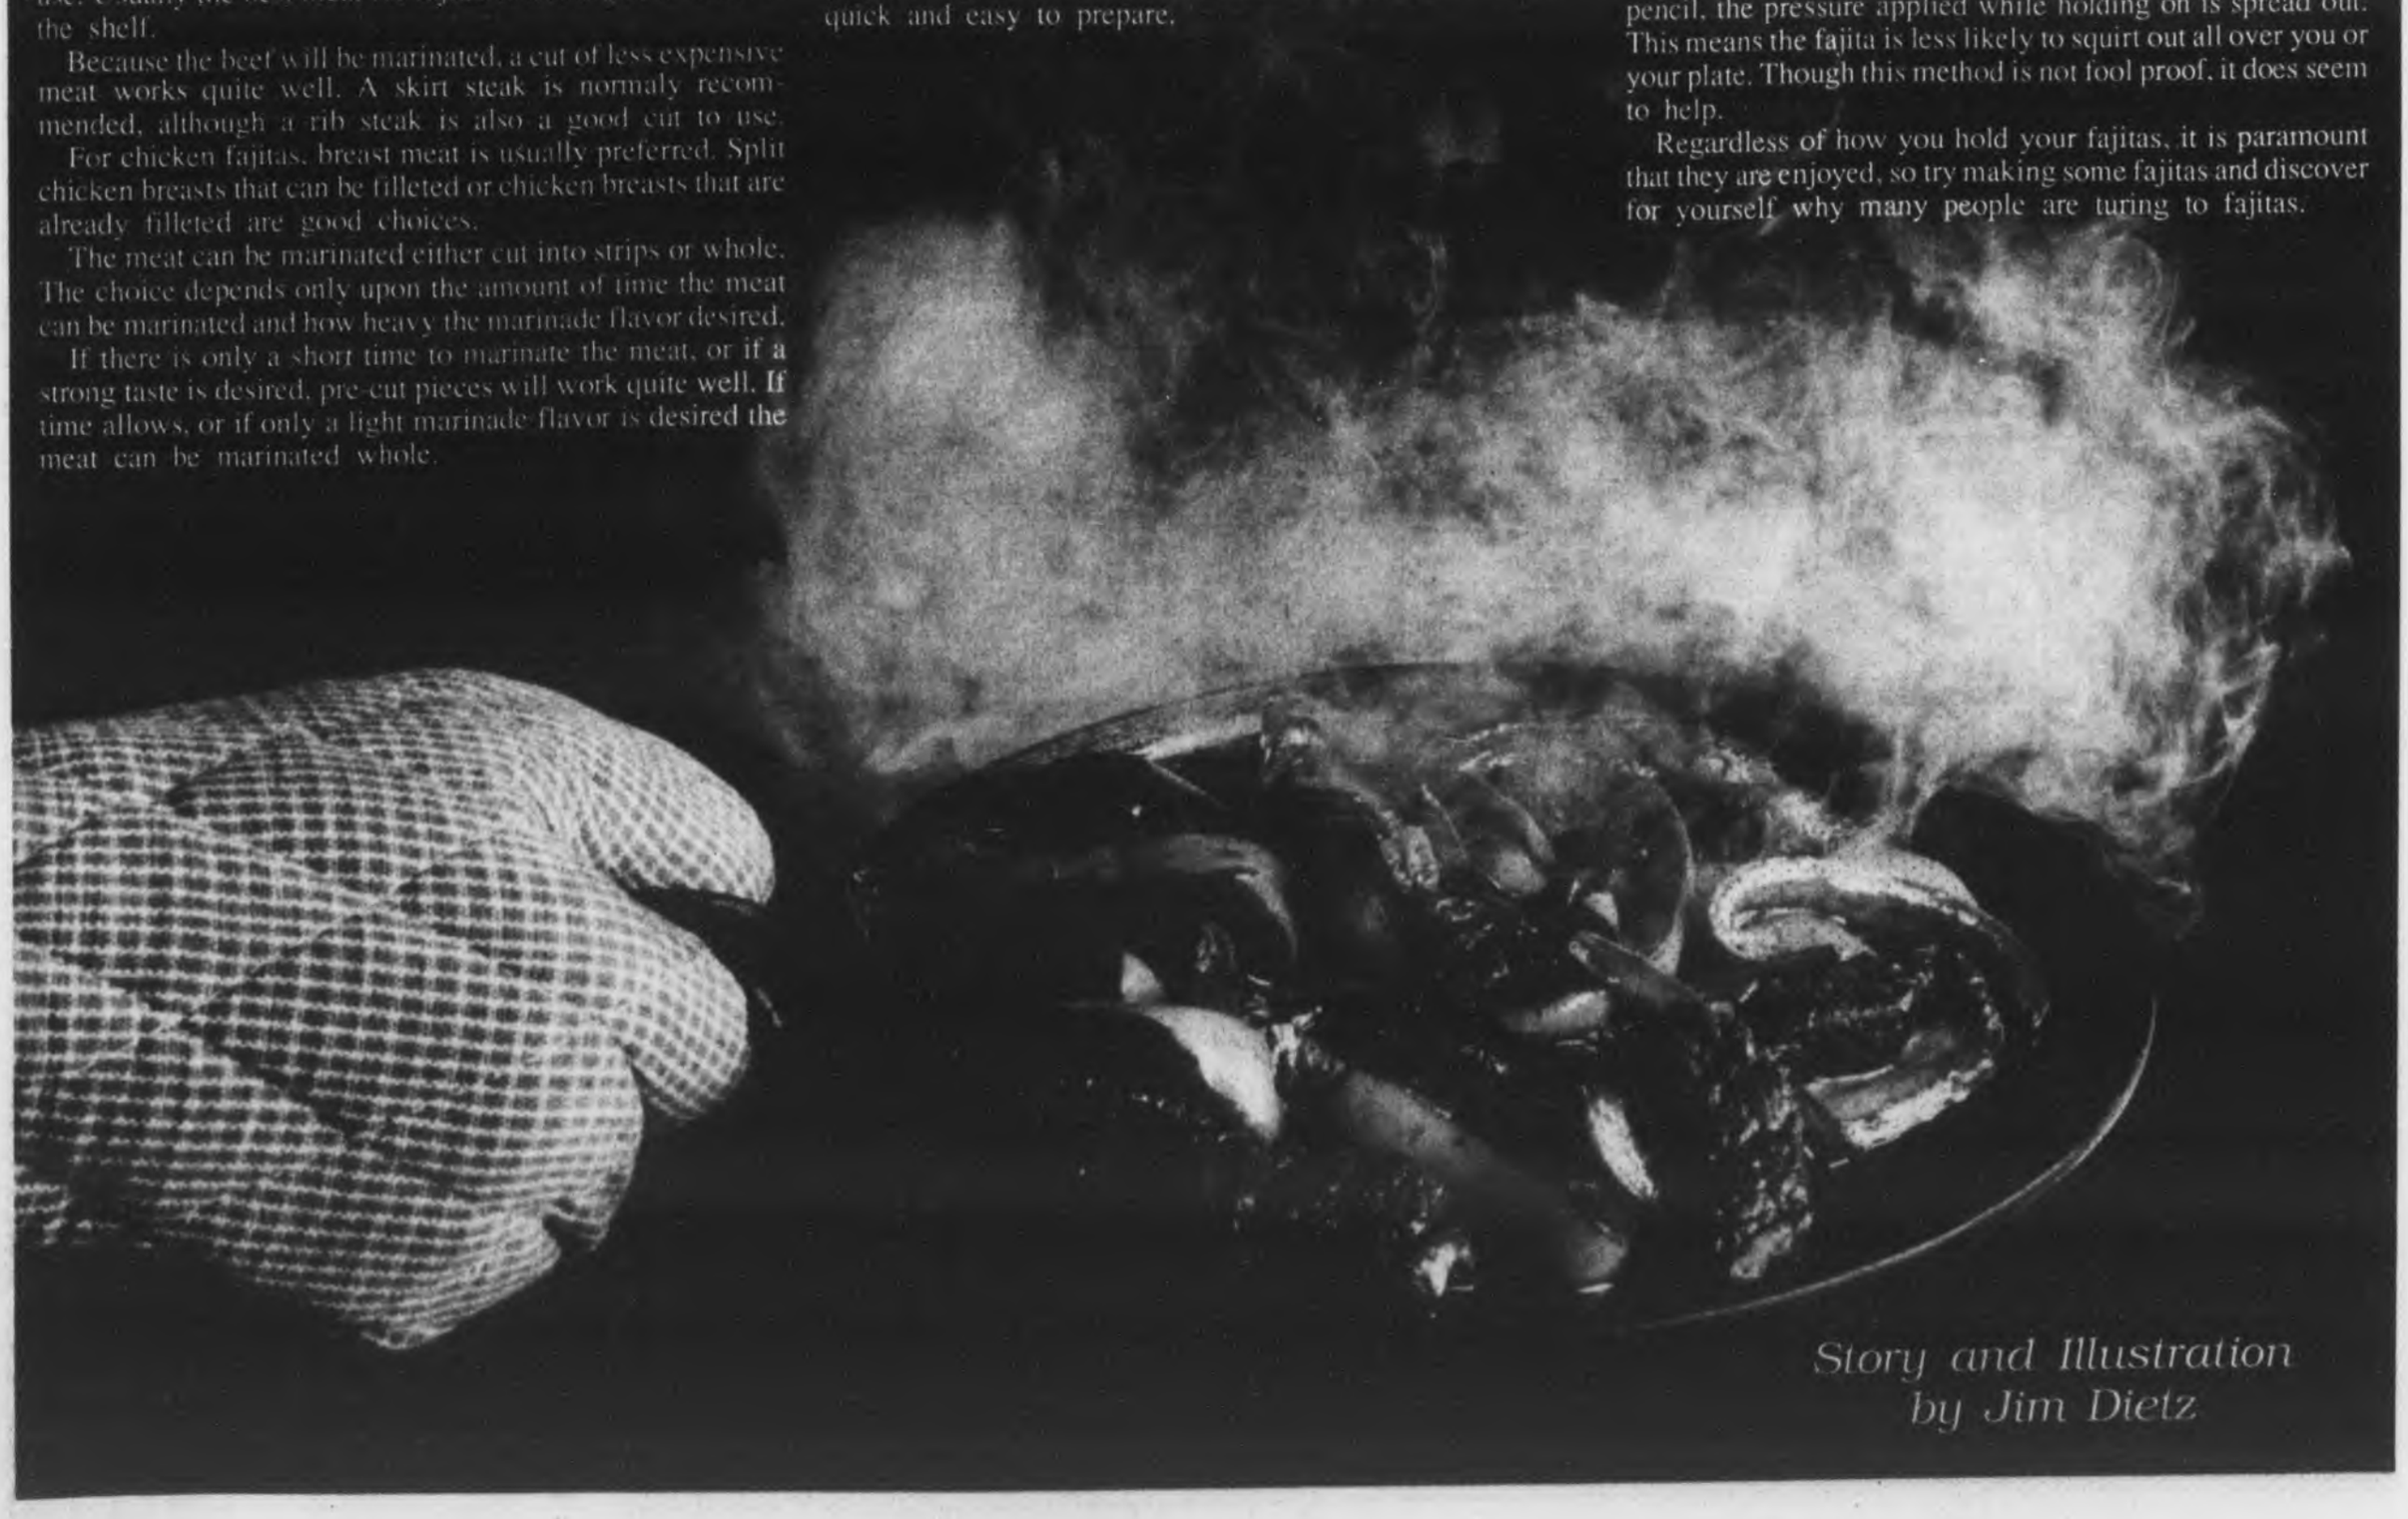
Grill the meat and vegetables for a short time, just long enough to singe the meat. Then bring the meat in and fry it on a hot griddle for a few minutes, stirring constantly. After the meat is sizzling in the pan add the vegetables and some marinade to the mixture. This will cause steam to rise and the griddle to sound just like the one the waitresses bring out in restaurants.

If you don't have a cast-iron griddle, don't despair, the wok used for stir-frying Chinese food works well too. If neither of these are available, a skillet will even work. The important thing is to have the cooking surface hot. This means the heat should be set at medium high to high.

Final Touches:

After all the fixings are prepared and the meat is cooked, the fajitas can be assembled.

Take the still sizzling hot meat and vegetables and place them inside a flour tortilla. Add the cheese, lettuce, guacamole and Pica de Gallo. Sour cream can also be added as well.



The fajitas are now ready to eat.

There are many schools of thought on how fajitas are to be eaten.

Many say they should be rolled up and eaten like a burrito or sancho. Still others say they should be folded up and eaten like a soft taco. But the most unusual method and supposedly the most authentic is that fajitas should be rolled up into a tube and held in hand like a pencil.

Regardless of authenticity, the last method, strange as it may sound, does offer advantages. By holding the fajita like a pencil, the pressure applied while holding on is spread out. This means the fajita is less likely to squirt out all over you or your plate. Though this method is not fool proof, it does seem to help.

Regardless of how you hold your fajitas, it is paramount that they are enjoyed, so try making some fajitas and discover for yourself why many people are turing to fajitas.

'Working' combines talents of many

By Brad Atchison
Collegian Reviewer

What do you get when you combine the writing abilities of Studs Terkel, the musical talent of James Taylor, and mix it with the poetic style of Walt Whitman? You get "Working," a dynamic blue-collar musical currently playing at the Manhattan Civic Theatre.

Their production of "Working" has harnessed the creative energies of more than 20 members of the Manhattan community. This broad base of involvement has given the show a meaty "hometown" appeal.

Play Review

One of the great things about a civic theater is the opportunity for community involvement. "Working" is not about extraordinary people living unbelievable lives. This show is about everyday people living lives not unlike yours and mine.

"Working" opens with an entire cast performing a song titled "All the Livelong Day." The lyrics of this piece were taken from a poem by Walt Whitman and set to music by Steven Schwartz. The opening scene is very representative of the rest of the production. From the first musical number, this show was driven by zealous, realistic performances.

After the opening ensemble scene, "Working" moves into a series of vignettes detailing the many lives of the American worker. The show presents personal profiles of different individuals who may have nothing in common but the experience of working.

A show presented as a series of vignettes has the potential to come across to the audience as disjointed. This production avoids such flow problems by utilizing overlapping scenes. Instead of using a blackout or curtain-drop as a transition, "Working" allows the characters, music and movement to slide from one scene to the next.

The technical aspects of this show are generally complementary to the overall production. Anyone who has seen a show in the basement of the City Auditorium knows that the facilities can be limiting, but "Working" is staged in a creative way.

The performance is not limited to the orthodox stage. Entrances and exits are staged in all parts of the theater.

"Working" is about everyday people living lives not unlike yours and mine.

At times throughout the production I was bothered by attempts at character makeup and less-than-extravagant props. However, I would venture to guess the informality that caused these slips is the same informality that gave "Working" a realistic quality and natural style.

The cast of "Working" does a great job with this show. Every player has taken on more than one character, yet there is never any confusion about exactly "who" is on stage. It is obvious that everyone who had a hand in this Civic Theatre production did an excellent job.

The Manhattan Civic Theatre's production of "Working" is an enjoyable evening of musical-theater.

"Working" will run at 8 p.m. Feb. 25, 26 and 27 in the basement of the City Auditorium.

Limited edition book on series honors Landon's 100th birthday

By Steve Walker
Collegian Reporter

In honor of former Gov. Alfred Landon's 100th birthday and to collect some of the speeches from the lecture series that bears his name, the Friends of the KSU Libraries have published "The Landon Lectures: Perspectives From the First Twenty Years."

The book is a limited edition that will be primarily for members of the Friends of the Library and Landon Lecture Patrons, but a limited number will also be available for sale to the general public, said Virginia Quiring, associate dean of libraries.

The first of 200 numbered copies will be presented to the Landon family. Complimentary copies also will go to lecturers, patrons of the series and K-State student scholars.

The book contains 22 of 73 lectures presented from 1966 to 1986, starting with the first lecture of the series by Landon and ending with a lecture by Secretary of State George Shultz.

Other speakers include President Reagan and former Presidents Nixon and Ford, former Vice President Hubert Humphrey, U.S. Sen. Robert Kennedy, Saudi Arabian Oil Minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani and former Speaker of the House "Tip" O'Neill.

Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture Series, and William Richter, professor of political science and immediate past chairman of the series, edited the book and selected the lecturers who are featured.

"It was very difficult because (the lecturers) all were good," Quiring said.

To choose speakers for the Landon Lecture Series, the series chairperson maintains a list of people who would be appropriate and beneficial. Publicity is also a factor as is the topic value, said Quiring.

The potential speakers are contacted by telephone and letters. Once they accept, it still might take two years to work out a date that can be worked into a Landon Lecturer's typically busy schedule, said Quiring.

Grads do original research

By Lori Ingmire
Collegian Reporter

A dissertation may formally be defined as an original piece of research focusing on an idea not previously examined, but the likelihood of patentable results occurring is comparable to a "crap shoot," said one K-State graduate student.

In his fourth year as a candidate for a doctorate in agronomy, Bruce Burnett will soon complete his dissertation, joining the more than 1,000 individuals who have received doctorates from K-State since the beginning of the graduate program in 1931.

"When doing research and work on a dissertation, you don't know what you're going to discover because it's original work," Burnett said. "Further, whether or not the results are patentable is a crap shoot."

Upon completion of a dissertation, the student is required to make three copies of the work in addition to the original. The three copies are distributed to University Archives in Farrell Library, the stacks in Farrell Library and to the Graduate School.

In Farrell, the dissertations are recorded in a separate card catalog on the first floor. They are listed under department names with the author/title cards used for organizational purposes.

Although the work may be viewed at several sites on campus, the author remains the primary copyright holder. Robert Kruh, dean of the Graduate School, said a number of candidates at the doctorate level choose to copyright their dissertations, but not all exercise the use of copyright.

All doctorate students submit their dissertations to University Microfilms International, a non-profit company that collects dissertations from across the country. Kruh said students are charged a nominal fee for their submitted work.

Other than name recognition for the University, no profits are gained by K-State.

K-State to battle upset-minded Iowa State

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Vacation time is over for the men's basketball teams from K-State and Iowa State University.

K-State took a break from the grueling Big Eight Conference schedule and whipped Northern Illinois University, 88-67, Monday night in Ahearn Field House.

Though NIU is no comparison to Big Eight competition, senior center Ron Meyer said it was crucial that the Wildcats played the Huskies instead of practicing after losing by one point Thursday to KU.

"At this point in the season, in practices you pretty much know what you're going to do," he said. "If you don't know everything by now, you don't have to worry about what you're going to do after the end of the (regular) season."

Iowa State has had a week-long leave of absence from the rigors of conference play since defeating Missouri, 102-89, Feb. 17 in Ames, Iowa.

Now, it's time for the 'Cats and the Cyclones to go back to school.

The final in this course is earning an invitation to the NCAA's 64-team postseason tournament. But the two squads will have a midterm of sorts tonight when they meet at Hilton Coliseum. Tipoff is at 7:05 p.m..

Iowa State, 17-9 overall and 3-7 in the Big Eight, snapped a seven-game losing streak in its win against Missouri. K-State, 16-7 and and 7-3, has won just two of its last five outings.

Both squads are viewing this as a must-win game, and not just in terms of Big Eight standings. They're well aware that a 20-win season doesn't mean an automatic berth into the NCAA tournament.

"We've beat a lot of ranked teams. If we finish strong they are certainly going to take us to the NCAAs, but we have to do the job," ISU coach Johnny Orr said.

"(Iowa State's) a ball club that's up and down," 'Cat forward Mitch Richmond said. "We know they're trying to knock off some people to get into the NCAA (tournament)."

Isn't K-State in the same situation?

"Yeah, that's true. It's going to be a fight," Richmond added.

In the earlier matchup, the 'Cats slipped past the Cyclones, 79-68, in overtime in Manhattan.

Coach Lon Kruger said K-State will once again have to slow Iowa State's running game — the Cyclones average more than 87 points per game — and ISU has eight 100-point outings this season.

"Iowa State is very effective when they get into the transition and they were obviously able to do that (against Missouri)," he said. "That's where Lafester Rhodes and Jeff Grayer are most effective."

Rhodes, a 6-foot-8 senior center, snapped out of a scoring slump and hit 34 points and grabbed 13 rebounds in the win over the Tigers. Grayer, a 6-5 senior forward, leads the Big Eight in scoring with an average of 25.2 points per game. He scored 27 against Mizzou despite playing just 32 minutes.

After scoring just 11 points against the Jayhawks, Richmond broke loose for 26 points against NIU on 10-of-14 shooting from the field and a five-of-six performance from the line.

Kruger said it was important, but not critical, for Richmond to have a good game.

"I think you like to get that taste out of your mouth. It's just like losing; you like to play and get that behind you as well," Kruger said.

Then there's the mystique of playing at Ames. K-State was the only top-four finisher in the Big Eight to win at the Hilton Coliseum last year. Teams that have lost at Ames this season include Iowa and Kansas.

NOTES...K-State leads the overall series 108-55 and owns a 39-28 advantage at Ames...Grayer's 14 points against the 'Cats in Manhattan was his second-lowest outing this season...K-State leads the Big Eight in free throw percentage (76.7), rebound percentage (54.4) and rebound margin (5.7)...Iowa State is last in the conference in team defense (89.5 ppg), field goal percentage (44.7) and rebound percentage (46.3).

Darryl Rowley practices pitching for Saturday's season-opening doubleheader against Friends University at Frank Meyers Field at 1 p.m. The Wildcat pitching staff has doubled since last spring's season, and Coach Mike Clark thinks the added depth will help the team win more games.

Staff adds numbers, diversity

Team looks to capitalize on pitchers

By Russ Ewy
Sports Writer

With a pitching staff twice the size of last spring's, K-State's baseball team has taken a giant step toward improving on an area which was once a weakness.

K-State went through the Big Eight Conference season last spring with a pitching staff of only five, which, according to Coach Mike Clark, kept his team struggling.

"Depth was a big weakness for us (last year)," Clark said. "With all the injuries that we had with the pitching staff last year, we were basically taking position players and converting them into pitchers.

"We had to bring Mike Hinkle, who was our starting center fielder last fall, as a pitcher in an emergency. Mike Hamacher hadn't pitched a ballgame in four years and he had eight starts last year for us. We had Paul Iseman, who did a real fine job for us, and Zack Kimbell, who came on real strong," he added.

In addition to inexperience, lack of numbers in the pitching lineup also took its toll on the Wildcats last year.

"We only had one relief pitcher, so we really struggled," Clark said. "We lost a lot of games where the other team would score a lot of runs early because I only had one relief pitcher."

With the diversity of its pitching staff now, K-State has the numbers and several new threats.

"We have a good variety (this season)," Clark said. "We have three left-handers and seven right-handers. We're going to be able to have a left-hander come out of the bullpen. We have a hard-throwing pitcher like Ray Baughn and we have a more finesse, control, breaking ball-type pitcher in Jeff Peterson.

"We have Bill Schafer who can (pitch) overhanded, but can drop down side arm just to be real nasty. We have somebody like Steve Scoville, who is a great finesse, change-up left-hander. So, we have a varity of things we could go to so we can beat a type of team that we're playing against if somebody is struggling we can get somebody in there to match them and throw to their weaknesses a lot better."

Clark thinks the increased ranks of his pitching staff will help in posting

Depleted ranks succumb to ISU

By Jenny Chaulk

Eight is enough, or so K-State women's basketball coach Matilda Mossman hoped prior to Tuesday night's game with Iowa State in Ames, Iowa.

With the loss of starters Kristie Bahner to mononucleosis and Janet Madsen to a hyperextended knee, Mossman was down to eight players take on the Lady Cyclones, ranked seventh in the Big Eight Conference and lone victim to the Lady Cats in the conference.

But eight wasn't enough, as the Lady Cats experienced a turn-around from their winning performance over ISU Feb. 3, when they shot a blistering 60.7 percent from the field (75 percent in the first half.)

Tuesday, K-State shot a dismal 31 percent from the field, as the Lady Cyclones took their revenge and won, 70-52.

With the loss, K-State drops to 8-18 overall and 1-2 in the Big Eight, while Iowa State improves to 13-12 and 5-8.

Iowa State'a inside-outside duo of Carmen Jaspers and Etta Burns proved to be too much for K-State's depleted ranks to handle. Jaspers, a 6-foot-3 junior center, collected 15 points and seven rebounds in 29 minutes of play.

But it was Burns, a 5-foot-8 senior guard, who did the Lady Cats in. As the only senior on the ISU team, she was honored in pre-game ceremonies and responded to her accolades by scoring a career-high 28 points. She also grabbed 10 rebounds, as the Lady Cyclones outrebounded K-State, 52-38.

Iowa State got untracked first in both halves, as Burns exploded in the second period scoring six unanswered points to put Iowa State up by 14 points, 35-21, early in the half.

K-State pulled back to within seven points, 41-34, on a basket by Stacey Boyle, who came off the bench to score 14 points. The Lady Cyclones then increased their lead to 13 points, before baskets by Boyle and Diana Miller, who led the Lady Cats with 16 points, put K-State within seven points again, 49-42, with about nine and a half minutes left in the game.

Prior to Miller's basket, Lady Cat Rita Matteucci fouled out of the contest at the 9:41 mark. K-State remained poised, however, and traded baskets with Iowa State for the next five minutes.

At the 4:10 mark of the game, Stephanie Lane scored her first and only basket of the night to keep K-State within seven points, 59-52. But that was as close as the Lady Cats would get, as they went cold in final minutes of the game and did not score.

Iowa State connected for 11 more points to tally a final score of 70-52.

Soviet bloc dominates again

By The Associated Press

CALGARY, Alberta — Flying Finn Matti Nykanen and Frank-Peter Roetsch of East Germany became double gold medalists Tuesday, and the Winter Olympics were a Soviet bloc party again.

The beer from Bonnie Blair's victory bash hadn't even gone flat before America's day of glory turned into another day of gold for the East.

Only the volatile Matti Nukes, as he is called, could slow down the Soviets.

Nykanen, who already won the 70-meter jump, added the 90-meter title with a hill-record jump of 118.5 meters in the first round and became the Games' first double jumping gold medalist since the event was split in 1964.

"I knew I'd won after the first jump," said Nykanen, who won the 90-meter jump at Sarajevo four years ago.

Roetsch won the 10-kilometer biathlon, staging the Games' first individual sweep of biathlon events, while Soviets Valeri Medvedtsev and Sergei Tchepikov finished 2-3. Roetsch won the 20-kilometer biathlon Saturday.

"After the relay, we'll drink much more beer," Roetsch said, looking forward to the prospect of a third gold medal. "Hopefully, we'll have a reason to celebrate."

The Soviets now have a leading 20 medals, East Germany 15. The two countries are tied with seven gold, and have won 35 of 84 medals offered so far.

More medals were bound to go East.

Meanwhile, America's best hope in the biathlon, Josh Thompson of Gunnison, Colo., was a disappointment again, unable to add to the U.S. medal count that Blair pushed to four when she won the 500.

Thompson, who was 25th in the 20 kilometers, was 27th on Tuesday after missing five targets.

"I can't remember two races I've had so bad back-to-back," Thompson said.

Tartabull holds out on Royals

By The Associated Press

HAINES CITY, Fla. — Kansas City Royals rightfielder Danny Tartabull made good on his threat and did not appear at spring training camp Tuesday when his salary demands were not met.

Tartabull, who was paid $145,000 last season, had said Monday night that he would not report to camp unless the Royals met his demand for about $425,000. If he does not report to camp by 9:30 a.m. today, he will be declared officially late.

Royals General Manager John Schuerholz would not discuss specific contract negotiations, but did say the two sides are within $100,000. The Royals have raised their offer from $225,000 to $325,000, sources told The Kansas City Star.

Schuerholz and Royals President Joe Burke said the team has never had a player hold out.

"I'm doing what is right," Tartabull said. "If they don't offer what is just, I won't be there. It's just ridiculous I'm having to go through this."

Tartabull, a third-year player who hit .309 with 34 home runs and 101 RBI last season, is one year short of arbitration.

He is no longer requesting a salary equal to teammate Bo Jackson, who will get $533,000 this season.

Winter has tough start, ends tenure successfully

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

This is the second of a five-part series on the memories of K-State's men's basketball coaches in Ahearn Field House as told to those in attendance at K-State's basketball reunion Nov. 20, 1987.

For Fred "Tex" Winter, former K-State men's basketball coach, following Jack Gardner was not the easiest thing in the world to do.

Gardner left K-State following the 1952-53 season with a career coaching record of 649-278, including a 17-4 mark during his last season at K-State.

"I was the youngest coach at the time, but after those first two years, I thought I was going to be the youngest unemployed Division I coach," Winter said at K-State's Basketball Alumni Reunion Nov. 20.

Winter's first two seasons with the Wildcats — in which he compiled an 11-10 record in 1953-54 and 1954-55 — were far from the standard Gardner had established.

"You think I wasn't under pressure," Winter said. "Those two years were trying — very trying."

Even the fans let him know how they felt. After his second season, a sign appeared outside Ahearn Field House saying "Spring has arrived and Winter must go!"

"When I saw that sign, I decided that Winter is going to stay a little bit longer," he said.

Winter, who is now a scout for the Chicago Bulls, stayed for 15 years as the Wildcats' mentor, compiling a record of 262-117. During seven of those 15 seasons, the 'Cats were ranked in the Top 20. Eight times his teams either tied or won the Big Seven and Big Eight Conference title. His teams made it to the NCAA Tournament six times, and made it all the way to the Final Four twice.

As for his memories, Winter recalls the compiled experiences of his years, rather than specific instances during his coaching tenure.

"All my years seem to blend together," he said. "After 15 years in coaching, there are a lot of memories and it's really hard to pick out one moment when all those years are so memorable."

If one memory does stand out in his mind, however, it is K-State's 1957-58 season.

During this season, the 'Cats posted a 22-5 record and finished fourth in the NCAA Tournament, defeating Kansas and Wilt Chamberlain at Allen Field House and Cincinnati and Oscar "The Big O" Robertson.

"It was really ironic. (Chamberlain) came to Kansas and it was like they were going to be the Big Seven champs for the next four years," Winter said. "Of course he left after three years. I see him in and around the (NBA) and I tell him that I'm the guy who ran him out of the conference."

The 'Cats beat Kansas, 79-75, when Jack Parr blocked a Chamberlain shot, which resulted in another K-State bucket and the win.

The 'Cats went marching into the NCAA Tournament and defeated Cincinnati, which was ranked first in the country at the time, 83-80, in overtime to win the Midwest regional.

"Oscar (Robertson) was having one of his great games again," Winter said. "When he stepped to

Class assists community plan

By Susan Rouse

Students in the Public Relations Techniques class are taking their knowledge outside the classroom and putting it into practical application.

The class, taught by Shirley Ramsey, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, is formulating a public relations plan for the community Structural Assistance Volunteer Effort.

The program helps communities throughout the state improve their surrounding environment, said Anne Brandsberg, student intern for SAVE. Brandsberg is a member of the class and is coordinating the public relations plan for the program.

The class is providing the program with public relations action plans, feature stories about SAVE and press releases for all types of media. It will also help members of the program decide exactly what they want to accomplish and how to handle their public relations, Ramsey said.

"This benefits the students to (let them) know that they are doing 'real world' work, and not just class work," Ramsey said. "We are doing assignments for them (SAVE) that they may not need now, but will in the future, for their program."

With so many other activities on campus, it is hard for new programs to gain recognition, said Mindy Dutton, student coordinator of SAVE.

"Our biggest obstacle is to get people educated about SAVE and public relations is the best way. The students are helping us in what they are being trained to do," Dutton said. "We want them to know what this worthy program does to help others. We want students to know about us."

SAVE is targeted toward college students who are interested in doing volunteer work, Brandsberg said. The program is an opportunity for the student who wants to do volunteer work, but doesn't have a lot of time. The SAVE projects only take a small amount of time, and once a student has participated in a project they aren't required to do a second. But they are welcomed to continue helping if they want, she said.

"We eventually want our SAVE program to be like this," Brandsberg said. "A midwest college with a strong community service program where all students are involved."

The SAVE program at K-State receives money through a grant from the Department of Education.

Environmental laws not enforced

Kansas 'in the middle' at protecting state terrain

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Kansas ranks in the middle among the 50 states when it comes to protecting the environment, according to a national comparison done by the Fund for Renewable Energy and the Environment.

Kansas is stronger when it comes to enacting laws to protect its surface water and in attacking indoor air and energy pollution, but is weaker in dealing with pesticide contamination, land use planning and highway safety, FREE's second annual "State of the States" report shows.

"It shows Kansas is about in the middle of the pack," said Ron Henricks of the Kansas Natural Resource Council, one of 10 organizations whose spokesmen held a Statehouse news conference to urge increased state spending for natural resource incentives to be funded through the Economic Development Initiatives Fund.

Henricks, who acted as chief spokesman for the group, said Kansas "tends to be strong on laws on the books" to protect water and the environment, but — like all states — is short on enforcement.

"Our concern is we need to put a lot more money on the enforcement side," he said. "There's been a big stall during the (President) Reagan years."

Cutbacks in federal funding, the environmentalists said, has resulted in a $300 billion shortfall in spending in the United States on cleaning up the environment.

"I would say our main message is this huge 'environmental deficit.' We need a longterm commitment to put more money into cleanup and environmental protection," Henricks said. "That's the importance of the (FREE) report. It's been needed for a long time to point this out."

The weakness of the report, he added, is that it stresses laws states have on the books but doesn't look at enforcement of those laws.

This year's study ranks the states on six environmental topics.

Kansas was tied for 34th among the states with Idaho and Arizona at 25 points apiece in the FREE grading system. Ranked ahead of Kansas were Colorado, 29, Iowa, 34, and Nebraska, 31, while ranked below Kansas were Missouri, 23, Oklahoma, 19, and Arkansas, 17.

Out of a possible 60 points in FREE's rating system, Kansas scored 25, getting most of its points on surface water protection, 6; eliminating indoor pollution, 5, and energy pollution and pesticide contamination, 4 each. It didn't do as well on land use planning and highway safety, 3 points each.

The top-ranked state got 10 points in each category. Massachusetts and Wisconsin tied for first with 45 points each, while California and New Jersey were next with 44 points apiece and Connecticut was fifth with 43. Then came New York and Oregon, 42 each; Florida, 41, North Carolina, 40, and Hawaii, Michigan, Minnesota and New Hampshire, all with 38.

Friends of Library to sponsor Renaissance night fund-raiser

By The Collegian Staff

At 6:30 p.m. on March 5, the entrance to Farrell Library Room 315 will become a time portal that will transport all who pass through it back into the Renaissance.

The Reading Room in the old wing of Farrell will become a 16th century royal dining hall, complete with king, court jester, musicians and jugglers.

The Friends of the Library of KSU is sponsoring the festival and dinner in conjunction with the University's 125th anniversary to raise money for K-State's library facilities.

The groups hopes to raise about $1,500.

"If we can make that much, we'll be very happy," said Diane LaBarbera, research assistant in the Department of Grain Science and Industry and one of the publicity coordinators for the project.

The cost to attend the dinner is $35 per person, with $10 being tax deductable.

Of each ticket, $25 will pay expenses and the remaining $10 will go to the library, LaBarbera said.

The deadline for reservations is Feb. 26. After that, reservations will be on a space-available basis, LaBarbera said.

The organization raises money to help the library with things that are difficult to get funding for from the state legislature, such as special projects, LaBarbera said.

"The Friend's whole purpose is to make Farrell a more noticable and integral part of the community," she said.

Russ Loub, formerly of Ric's Cafe in Manhattan and Cafe Allegro in Kansas City, Kan., will prepare and serve a five-course meal consisting of foods from the Renaissance.

Included on the menu will be dried fruits, cheeses, nuts, berries, rice and Cornish game hens.

A king will be selected for the evening, LaBarbera said.

Texaco Inc. fined $1.25 billion

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Texaco Inc. on Tuesday announced an agreement to pay $1.25 billion to the government to settle claims it overcharged customers for oil during the 1973-81 period of price controls.

The nation's third-largest oil company said it would provide a first installment of $400 million when the agreement is closed and pay the remainder over the next 5½ years.

"Texaco has set aside reserves for this contingency and, as a result, this settlement will have no impact on current earnings," James W. Kinnear, the company's president, said in a statement.

The White Plains, N.Y.-based oil giant is the latest in a line of companies forced to fork over large sums of cash to resolve charges they violated pricing restrictions on crude oil and refined products during federal controls.

Before the Texaco agreement, the U.S. Department of Energy had received about $6.1 billion in settlement funds, said Jack Vandenberg, a department spokesman. The department expected to collect about $1 billion more to resolve similar claims, bringing the total to more than $8 billion, he said.

On Dec. 15, Chandler Van Orman, who has been nominated to head the department's Economic Regulatory Administration, told the Senate Energy Committee that 280 cases remained to be resolved and lawsuits had been started in all but seven.

The government has contended that during the era of federal price controls, companies made illegal profits by classifying "old" oil — that obtained from properties producing before 1973 — as "new" oil and selling it at higher prices.

One company that previously chose not to settle was Exxon Corp.

Ordered by a federal court to repay consumers more than $2 billion for overbilling for oil from one Texas field between 1975 and 1981, it unsuccessfully battled the charges to the U.S. Supreme Court, which refused to hear the appeal in January 1986.

Exxon maintained it could not be held accountable for confusing federal regulations defining "old" and "new" oil.

Texaco shared that position but in the end decided the battle would not be worth the effort.

Kinnear said the settlement resolved "an unusually massive, complex set of issues arising out of the more than $70 billion worth of business the company conducted in crude oil and refined products in the U.S. over this period."

the line to shoot free throws near the end of regulation he had a chance to tie the game and he hit the first one.

"Bob (Boozer) noticed that he was taking a lot of time on shooting them," he added. "I started getting on the refs and they started timing him. The media said that kind of strategy caused him to hurry his shots as he missed the next one and we went into overtime and eventually won the game."

The Manhattan community and K-State fans also have fond remembrances to Winter.

"The people that I encountered during my years at K-State were the best," he said. "By far, these young men that I coached were the greatest. The faculty loved them because they were good, smart students first and athletes second.

"The players weren't always the greatest in the world and the fans knew that, but they were still there during some of our bad years and I'm grateful for that. It was that kind of support that has made this place, K-State, the greatest place I know of to coach or play."

"From a coaching standpoint, we sould stay in a lot more ballgames. I want them to keep us in ballgames and not put so much pressure on our offense, (giving) us an opportunity to win the game in the last couple of innings."

Supreme Court rejects Falwell's award

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court expanded significantly the legal protections for parody and satire Wednesday as it overturned a $200,000 award evangelist Jerry Falwell had won against Hustler magazine and publisher Larry Flynt.

The justices ruled unanimously that "emotional distress" lawsuits filed by public figures targeted by such spoofs should be as difficult to win as libel suits.

And the court unanimously said that even pornographic spoofs enjoy the free-speech protection of the Constitution's First Amendment.

The Hustler material was a phony ad purportedly quoting Falwell discussing an incestual encounter with his mother in a Virginia outhouse and his habit of getting drunk before giving sermons.

Small print at the bottom of the page said the ad was "not to be taken seriously."

Led by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, the court rejected Falwell's arguments — and a federal appeals court's ruling — that some parodies are so outrageous they do not deserve legal protection.

"Outrageousness in the area of political and social discourse has an inherent subjectiveness about it which would allow a jury to impose liability on the basis of the jurors' tastes or views," Rehnquist said, adding that such results are constitutionally impermissible.

The decision was praised by news organizations.

"It's easy to stand up for nice talk from nice people but the First Amendment protects all speech, even the outrageous," said Paul McMasters of the Society of Professional Journalists.

"Editorial cartoons have been a particular target of lawsuits lately," McMasters said. "The court was right to speak up so forcefully on behalf of ... tools editorial cartoonists wield so well."

But Falwell, a Baptist minister and founder of an organization called the Moral Majority, disagreed. "No sleaze merchant like Larry Flynt should be able to use the First Amendment as an excuse for maliciously and dishonestly attacking public figures," he said after learning of his defeat. "I'm sure the justices were holding their noses while making the ruling."

Flynt said he was "absolutely delighted" by the ruling.

"Even though the suit had no merit in the beginning, I still spent over $1 million in attorney's fees. ... It's what you call paying to defend the First Amendment," Flynt said by telephone from Los Angeles.

He said he was concerned about small newspapers and house organs and others unable to afford to fight such a battle.

"They just go out of business," Flynt said.

Rehnquist's opinion drew a distinction between the Hustler ad and more traditional forms of parody such as editorial cartoons, calling the Falwell spoof "a distant cousin of the political cartoon, and a rather poor relation at that."

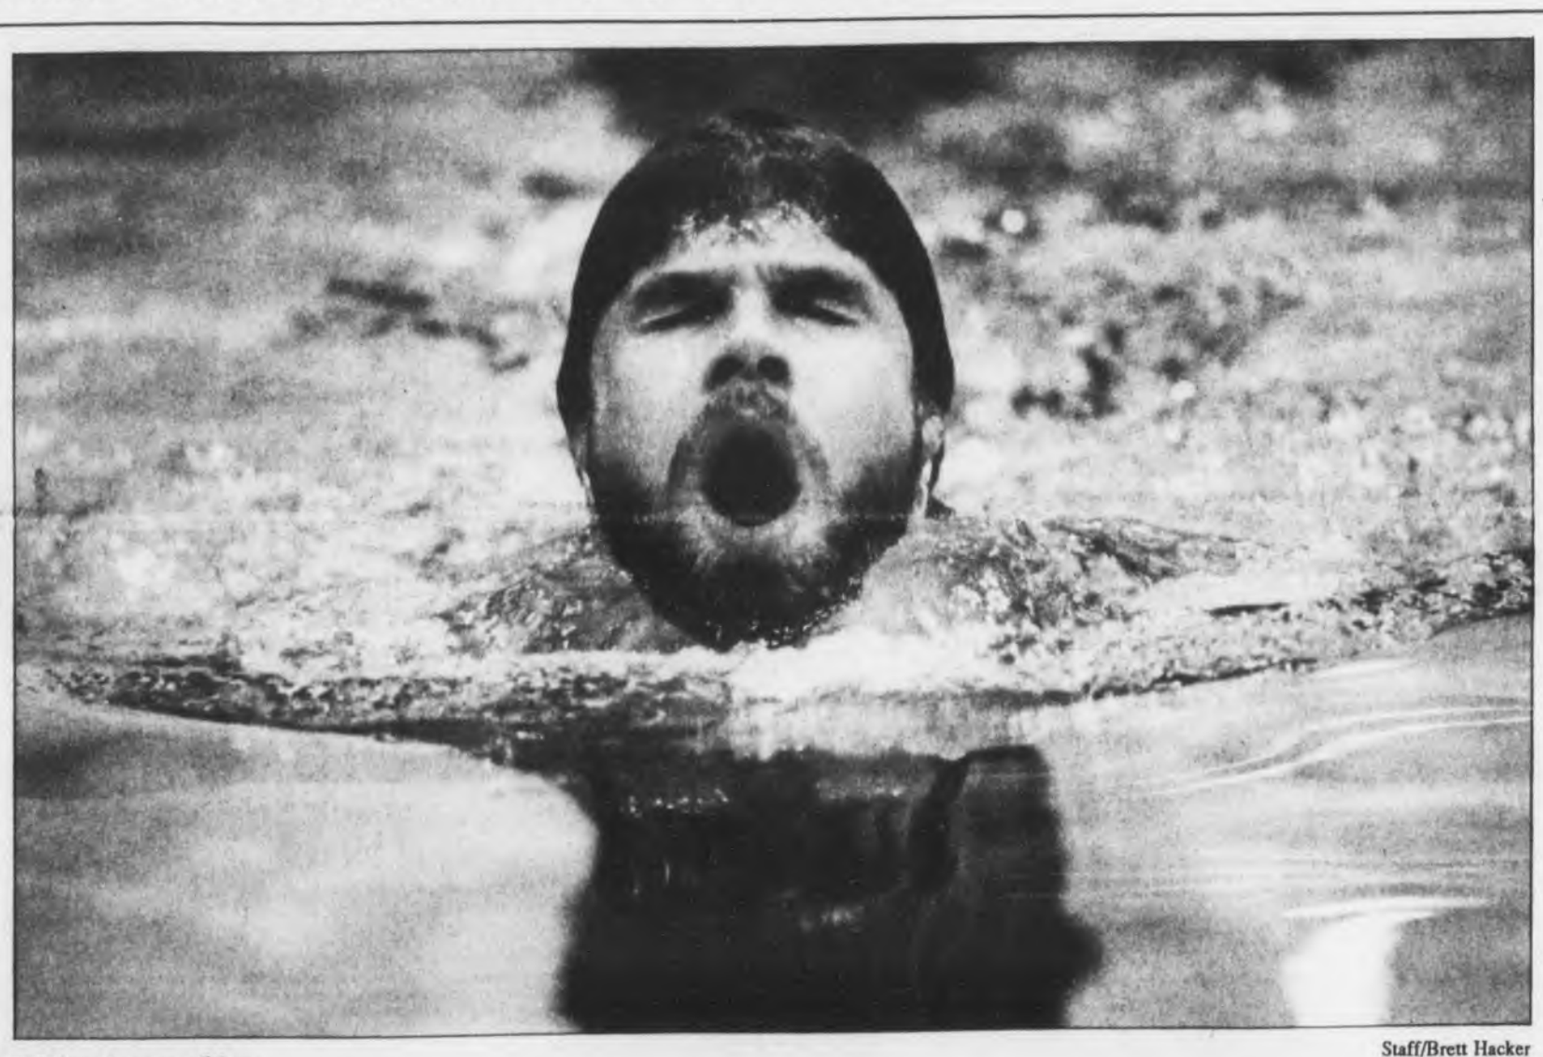
Committee accuses ex-Dole official Owen of illegal practices

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas Public Disclosure Commission Wednesday filed a complaint against the former national finance chairman of Sen. Bob Dole's presidential campaign for allegedly making two illegal campaign contributions to Gov. Mike Hayden's campaign in 1986.

The complaint alleges that David Owen of Overland Park, who stepped down as Dole's finance chairman last month, made two illegal $3,000 campaign contributions to Hayden, both in October 1986. It alleges those contributions were illegal under the state's Campaign Finance Act.

The complaint was signed by Carol Williams, commission director. The complaint was set for hearing before the commission on March 24.



The complaint alleges that on Oct. 15, 1986, Owen and Associates, a company owned by Owen, at the direction of Owen, made a $3,000 contribution to Eagle Distributors, Inc.

The day before that payment was made, Eagle Distributors made a $3,000 contribution to Hayden's campaign, the allegation says.

"The purpose of the payment to Eagle was to pay for the contribution to the Hayden campaign," the complaint alleges.

The second count alleges that Owen and Associates made two contributions to Hayden's campaign, one for $2,500 on Sept. 15, 1986, and the other for $500 on Sept. 17.

Owen and Associates also allegedly made a $3,000 payment to Eagle Distributors on Oct. 15. The complaint alleges that payment was to cover a $3,000 contribution Eagle made to Hayden's campaign on Oct. 14.

Reagan's conference gives progress report

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan said Wednesday night "we've never let up and we never will" in efforts to win freedom for American hostages in Lebanon, and said if Republican presidential contender Pat Robertson knew anything of their whereabouts, it was "very strange" that "he kept it to himself."

At a nationally televised news conference, Reagan also said he had "every confidence" in the personal integrity of embattled Attorney General Edwin Meese III. But said he could not comment on reports of the investigation of Meese's role in a proposed Middle East oil pipeline.

In a session with reporters that blended international affairs with the domestic presidential campaign swirling around him, the president confirmed anew that Vice President George Bush expressed reservations during the Iran-Contra affair. But he refused to say precisely what Bush had told him.

Reagan said he didn't want to become involved in the GOP nomination fight, but he showed plenty of zest when it came to bashing the Democrats vying to succeed him. To hear them, he said, "we're in an economic slump" suffering from a variety of ills. "At the moment none of those things are true."

Reserved parking aids faculty, staff

By Vera McMinimy
Collegian Reporter

For those faculty and staff members who have purchased reserved parking stalls, the hunt for a parking place is over. But for those without reserved spots, the hunt continues.

About 110 new reserved stalls have been sold since sales began in October. The stalls cost $55 per semester, in addition to the regular parking permit fee. Up to 250 spots will be sold if requested, said Janice Pritchett, general maintenance and repair technician for K-State Police. Pritchett is in charge of the reserved stalls.

Campus police are selling the reserved spots on a trial basis for one year, said Richard Brenner, chairman of the reserved stall subcommittee of the Council on Traffic, Parking and Police Operations and assistant maintenance superintendent in the Department of Housing.

"If the administration hears a lot of negative comments from students, faculty and regents, they'll probably cut (reserved stalls) back if people aren't using them," Brenner said.

"In the past, only VIPs and those with handicapped and medical reasons could get reserved stalls," he said. "We just broadened it out to anyone willing to pay, in an attempt to make it a better workplace for people."

A Faculty Senate parking committee recommended the change in policy for reserved spots.

Faculty and staff pay $22 to $44 for a general parking permit each year, based on an individual's salary. Many faculty have found it is worth the extra expense to have a reserved stall.

Katey Walker, associate professor of human development and family studies and an extension specialist, said her extension responsibilities were what interested her in purchasing a spot.

Protests, conflicts with troops contribute to at least 63 deaths

By Chris Wilhelm
Collegian Reporter

Somewhere in the night a soldier is kicking in the door to a house. The soldier enters the house and drags a male member of the family out. There, in the streets, the soldier beats and tortures the man.

The man is Palestinian — and the soldier is Israeli.

Recent actions by Israel's military have combined with the deteriorating living conditions in the Palestinian occupied areas, and the results have been deadly.

The Palestinians' protests have led to at least 63 deaths in confrontations with Israeli troops since Dec. 8, according to reports.

"In the middle of the night, Israeli troops have kicked in doors of houses in occupied territories and grabbed the first 18- or 19-year-old son they see," said Daniel Acheson-Brown, instructor of political science.

"They throw a hood over his head, haul him off and break his hands," he said. "If (the troops) get carried away, sometimes they break legs. Recently some troops tried to bury some Palestinians alive.

More than 200 cases of soldiers beating Palestinians have been reported, Acheson-Brown said.

Because of the mounting tension and violence in the Israeli occupied territories of the Gaza Strip and West Bank, some Palestinian students and instructors are calling for an immediate solution to the problems.

Palestinian students describe difficulties in occupied areas

By Chris Wilhelm
Collegian Reporter

Although some Americans take their rights for granted, K-State's Palestinian students say they no longer take anything for granted — especially when they consider the hardships their friends and relatives are facing in the occupied territories of the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

According to some Palestinian students, life in the occupied territories is becoming more difficult every day.

"When I was home for the summer, the Israelis imposed a three-week curfew," one student said. "For 24 hours a day you couldn't leave your house. You couldn't shop for groceries. You just had to stay indoors, for three straight weeks.

"When the soldiers finally decided to let people get groceries, they let people go out for one hour. The time they picked was just after midnight, about one or two in the morning."

Another hardship the Palestinians face is a shortage of water. Since the Israelis divert most of the water sources in the region away from the territories, living and agricultural problems are created.

"The Israelis are using 95 percent of the water resources in the area while Gaza is incredibly undersupplied," said Daniel Acheson-Brown, an instructor in the political science department. "The Palestinians are in dire need of a purification plant, but the Israelis won't allow one."

Lack of trust between the two nationalities is also lending itself to the violent activities in the region.

"The army tries to irritate the Palestinians and make them nervous," another Palestinian student

Company to block porn calls

AUSTIN, Texas — About 20,000 customers have asked Southwestern Bell Telephone to block access to 976 phone numbers, which offer sexually explicit messages, the company said.

In some cases, children have racked up large telephone bills through frequent calls to the services. Businesses have also complained that employees were dailing the services.

Eight thousand calls were received Tuesday, the first day Southwestern Bell offered to block access to Dial 976 without charge, company spokesman Dave Lopez said. The company had received 12,000 requests even before it advertised the service, he said.

The 20,000 requests represent less than 1 percent of the 3.5 million phone lines in four cities where 976 service is available — Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston and San Antonio, Lopez said.

Gunman looks for new lawyer

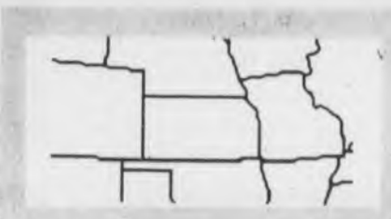
NEW YORK — Subway gunman Bernhard Goetz is looking for a new lawyer to defend him in the $63 million worth of lawsuits he faces from three of the four youths he shot nearly four years ago.

Attorney Joseph Kelner said he has applied to a judge to withdraw from the case on grounds that Goetz was not cooperating. He did not go into specifics.

Another of Goetz's lawyers, Mark Baker, said Goetz had been talking about dropping Kelner since last fall over "differences of outlook, differences of viewpoint."

Kelner was not involved in Goetz's successful defense on criminal charges stemming from the Dec. 22, 1984 attack. Goetz was convicted on a single count of illegal possession of a firearm.

Goetz contends he shot Darrell Cabey, Barry Allen, Troy Canty and James Ramseur, all teen-agers at the time, because they were about to rob him.



$20 billion proposed for AIDS

WASHINGTON — The chairman of a White House commission recommended Wednesday that federal and local governments spend an additional $20 billion over the next decade to fight AIDS among drug abusers.

Retired Navy Adm. James D. Watkins, head of the AIDS commission appointed by President Reagan last summer, acknowledged that the call for such massive spending on drug addicts might prove controversial.

But he said 200 hours of testimony from 350 witnesses has left the panel convinced that the deadly disease is spreading most rapidly among the nation's estimated 1.3 million intravenous drug abusers and their sexual partners.

Watkins noted that some health leaders are estimating 10,000 to 20,000 infants could be infected with the AIDS virus three years from now as a result of sexual unions involving drug addicts who can easily spread the disease among themselves by sharing contaminated needles.

KU professor fights for bill

TOPEKA — A University of Kansas professor urged a Senate committee Wednesday to endorse a bill that would require the Democratic and Republican parties to include the chairmen of their official black organizations on the state committees.

"A democracy like ours cannot afford the luxury of denying minorities full political participation," Jacob Gordon, associate professor of African studies at KU, told the Senate Elections Committee. Gordon is a member of the Kansas Black Republican Council.

Under current law, each of the party's state committees has 22 members. The head of the parties' official women's and youth organizations are members of the committees under state statute. The proposed bill would extend that legislatively mandated membership to include one black on the state committees of both the Democratic and Republican parties.

"The purpose is simple," said Sen. Wint Winter, R-Lawrence, who introduced the bill. "It is to broaden representation on the state committees."

Winter said each party has active black organizations. "That's good for the political process," he said. "We ought to add that vote."

Trooper shot; suspect arrested

ARDMORE, Okla. — An Oklahoma Highway Patrol trooper was in serious but stable condition Wednesday after he was shot during a routine traffic stop, authorities said.

A man was arrested in connection with the shooting of Trooper Terry Allen Dickson, 38, who was wounded in the head and hand.

Dickson was rushed to Memorial Hospital of Southern Oklahoma and then transferred by helicopter to Parkland Hospital in Dallas.

House considers new holiday

TOPEKA — A man who helped treat survivors of Japan's attack on Pearl Harbor asked a House committee Wednesday to help Kansans remember "a day that will live in infamy."

"This committee has within its power today to say, 'Yes, we in Kansas will remember Pearl Harbor and keep America strong,'" said Howard P. Killough of Winfield, who helped treat soldiers injured in the Pearl Harbor attack.

In the surprise attack Dec. 7, 1941 more than 2,400 U.S. servicemen were killed and more than 1,200 others were wounded. The United States entered World War II after the attack.

The House Governmental Organization Committee is considering a bill that would mark December 7 of each year as Pearl Harbor Rememberance Day in Kansas.

All state and local government buildings would fly the U.S. flag on that day and citizens would be encouraged to hold rememberance ceremonies.

Protesters: Swaggart's penalty too mild

By The Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — Assemblies of God leaders, swamped with protests that the penalty recommended for television evangelist Jimmy Swaggart's moral lapses was too mild, indicated Wednesday it may be stiffened.

Meanwhile, a woman claiming to be a prostitute told a New Orleans TV station she was with the fire-and-brimstone evangelist when he reportedly was photographed going into a motel room in October.

A torrent of complaining telephone calls has poured into the denomination's headquarters here, more than 3,000 of them in the past two days.

"There's a strong sense of moral outrage at the leniency applied in this case," said the Rev. Howard Cummings of Aurora, Colo., who said he got that assessment from two of the denomination's top executives.

A special meeting was called for Thursday of the church's 13-member executive presbytery, which rules on such matters, to examine the Louisiana state presbytery's recommendation that Swaggart be suspended from preaching for three months and undergo two years' rehabilitation.

Swaggart, known for his harsh denunciations of sexual lapses in his worldwide TV preaching, was charged with such an offense himself, although details have not been specified.

Photographs showing Swaggart with a prostitute reportedly were given to church officials by rival evangelist Marvin Gorman, who filed a $90 million suit charging Swaggart with unjustly accusing him of numerous sexual affairs.

In New Orleans, a woman who gave her name as Debra Murphree and identified herself as a prostitute told WVUE-TV that she had been meeting with Swaggart at various places in New Orleans for about a year to perform pornographic acts for him.

The TV station quoted her as saying she did not have sexual intercourse with Swaggart. It did not say what those pornographic acts were.

"I seen him drive down the street every week, you know," the woman said in the videotaped interview, "and maybe some times he wouldn't stop unless he knew I was there — maybe once or twice a month."

Murphree said she knew he was Swaggart but that he did not use his name. The TV station said it traced the woman to a motel in West Palm Beach, Fla.

A suburban New Orleans sheriff said Wednesday that a tattooed prostitute with a similar or identical name and an arrest record in Louisiana, Florida and Tennessee is believed to be the woman photographed with Swaggart.

Jefferson Parish Sheriff Harry Lee said that 28-year-old woman was rumored to be in Florida on Thursday. He said he has a warrant for her arrest for failure to show up for a Dec. 9 hearing on a soliciting charge.

The likelihood that Swaggart's penalty may be extended came in official word that the issue was expected to be turned back to the Louisiana district, which had proposed the penalty, for reconsideration.

That is the prescribed procedure under church bylaws for getting a punishment revised if it is deemed inadequate.

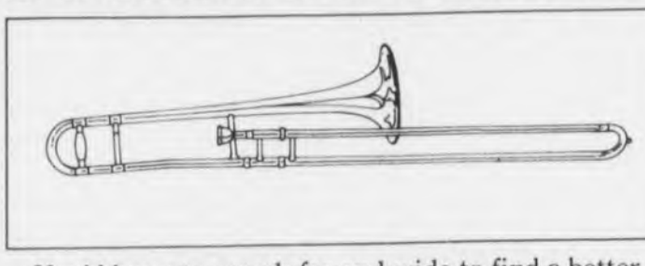
If the matter is returned to the state district, a final decision may not come for several weeks, said Juleen Turnage, the denomination's information officer.

Church sources also said the Louisiana district, in announcing its decision Tuesday, had violated a church bylaw that such recommendations are not to be disclosed until approved by top officials.

"It created tremendous pressures, appearing that the Louisiana district was trying to dictate its judgment," Cummings said.

It was learned that some members of Swaggart's board are on the Louisiana district council, and did not abstain from participating in the case.

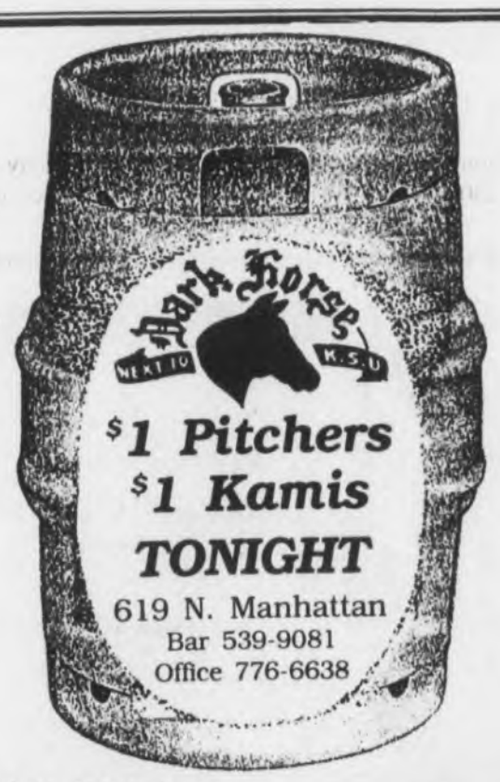
Asked whether the $12 million that Swaggart contributes annually to the denomination might have been a factor in the Louisiana handling of case, Turnage said, "It won't affect the decision here."



The church's final verdict, when it comes, will be in accord with "the seriousness of the offense," Turnage said.

An unwritten church precedent is that those involved in sexual offenses are barred from preaching for at least a year. "It's never been less than a year," she said.

Turnage said a "high percentage" of those calling the church about the Louisiana district's proposal "were not pleased."



"A lot of people are unhappy with the initial recommendation," said the Rev. Richard Champion, editor of the denomination's weekly, Pentecostal Evangel. But he added, "Many thought it too light. Some thought it too severe."

No news not good news

Conference to combat apathy

Commentary

CATHERINE DOUD
Collegian Columnist

No news is good news.

This statement was obviously thought up by someone who could see no harm in having people uninformed. Another equally time-worn cliche is: "What you don't know, won't hurt you." Why anyone should take the time to pen such phrases that glorify the idea that being misinformed and ignorant of events will make one happy, I'm not sure. But the fact that these phrases have become well-known one-liners in our society is a terrible indicator of the average American's apathy toward the press and the media's coverage of the news.

Apparently, some people would rather live in ignorant bliss, happy not to know about the troubles, traumas and tragedies going on in the world around us. This is especially true when it comes to news about other nations, particularly the Third World.

Many people complain when they see long segments on the nightly news about Central America, Afghanistan or other foreign countries. These critics say the news is boring. Who really cares what the natives in some little country no bigger than Iowa are doing? It doesn't really affect us, and until it does we shouldn't have to waste our time watching it. Anyway, it's too confusing to sit down and try to figure out which side is fighting for what. Heck, we could be watching "Wheel of Fortune!"

It is this kind of apathy that the media today have to overcome when dealing with stories about the Third World. Reporters have to be able to convince the public that our relations with these countries are of great importance, while at the same time trying to report on complicated events with enough clarity not to confuse the audience. This is not as easy as it sounds since situations in these countries are often so confusing that it is difficult for even the reporters to tell what is the truth.

That is why it is important for the media and the audience to work together. An excellent example of this happening on our campus is the upcoming International News: Fact or Fiction symposium Friday and Saturday. A variety of speakers will deal with the news issues that directly affect our lives, with Nicaragua being the focal point.

This symposium should be an educational experience with noted speakers discussing the Nicaraguan news problem in depth. The forum will consist of speakers who have had actual firsthand experience dealing in the area. The names may not be as big as those who speak at the Landon Lectures, but the discussions should be more controversial and substantial. Therefore, faculty should not begrudge students who decide to miss their classes to attend this conference.

Some of the speakers will include: Andrew Selsky of the Associated Press; Edward Seaton, editor of the Manhattan Mercury; Peter Martin of the South-North News Service; Christopher Hitchens from the Nation and Harper's; Jan Flora, K-State professor of social anthropology and social work; June Erlick of the Miami Herald; J. Larry Day from the University of Kansas and a former UPI correspondent in Latin America; and Manuel Cordero of the Minister Counsel, Embassy of Nicaragua.

They will be dealing with such issues as who controls the news we receive from Central America, who the news sources are, and the problems with which news people deal in those countries. These are issues that are important for Americans to understand so that they can properly evaluate the news they are receiving.

Another important part of the symposium will be taking place at 10:30 a.m. Saturday when a panel will discuss U.S. news coverage in Nicaragua. Panel members will include foreign correspondents for American newspapers, representatives from the Embassy of Nicaragua and a White House coordinator for Public Diplomacy in Central America, among others.

The best part about the lectures is that they are free to K-State students, faculty and staff. The lectures will be running during the day Friday and in the morning Saturday, culminating with the panel discussion.

The number and qualifications of the speakers make this an important event for anyone interested in journalism, international studies or just finding out how much of the news we get is correct. Don't be a victim of apathy. A few hours there may change the way you read the newspaper for the rest of your life.

Swaggart scores great public relations coup

Cynics, confess.

Were any of you really surprised when television evangelist Jimmy Swaggart earlier this week admitted to his congregation that he had sinned?

Swaggart, who was under investigation by the Assemblies of God church for allegations of sexual misconduct and who was reported to have been photographed with a prostitute, met with the state hierarchy of the church the next day to tell all.

Afterward, the church ordered him to immediately begin a two-year rehabilitation period that will limit his preaching and place him in counseling.

In the meantime, he will be relieved of his preaching duties for a minimum of three months.

Swaggart, it seems, offered sufficient evidence of "true humility and repentance" for his unspecified sins and submitted to the relatively mild punishment of "rehabilitation" — relative, that is, compared to Jim Bakker, who may never return to television evangelism.

Armed with a wavering voice and freely flowing tears, Swaggart pulled off the public relations coup of the year when he admitted to his Assembly of God congregation that he had sinned. If nothing else, it made for some really good Sunday morning TV.

However, which of his true Christian followers would ever refuse to forgive him? Very few, and that helped his case considerably.

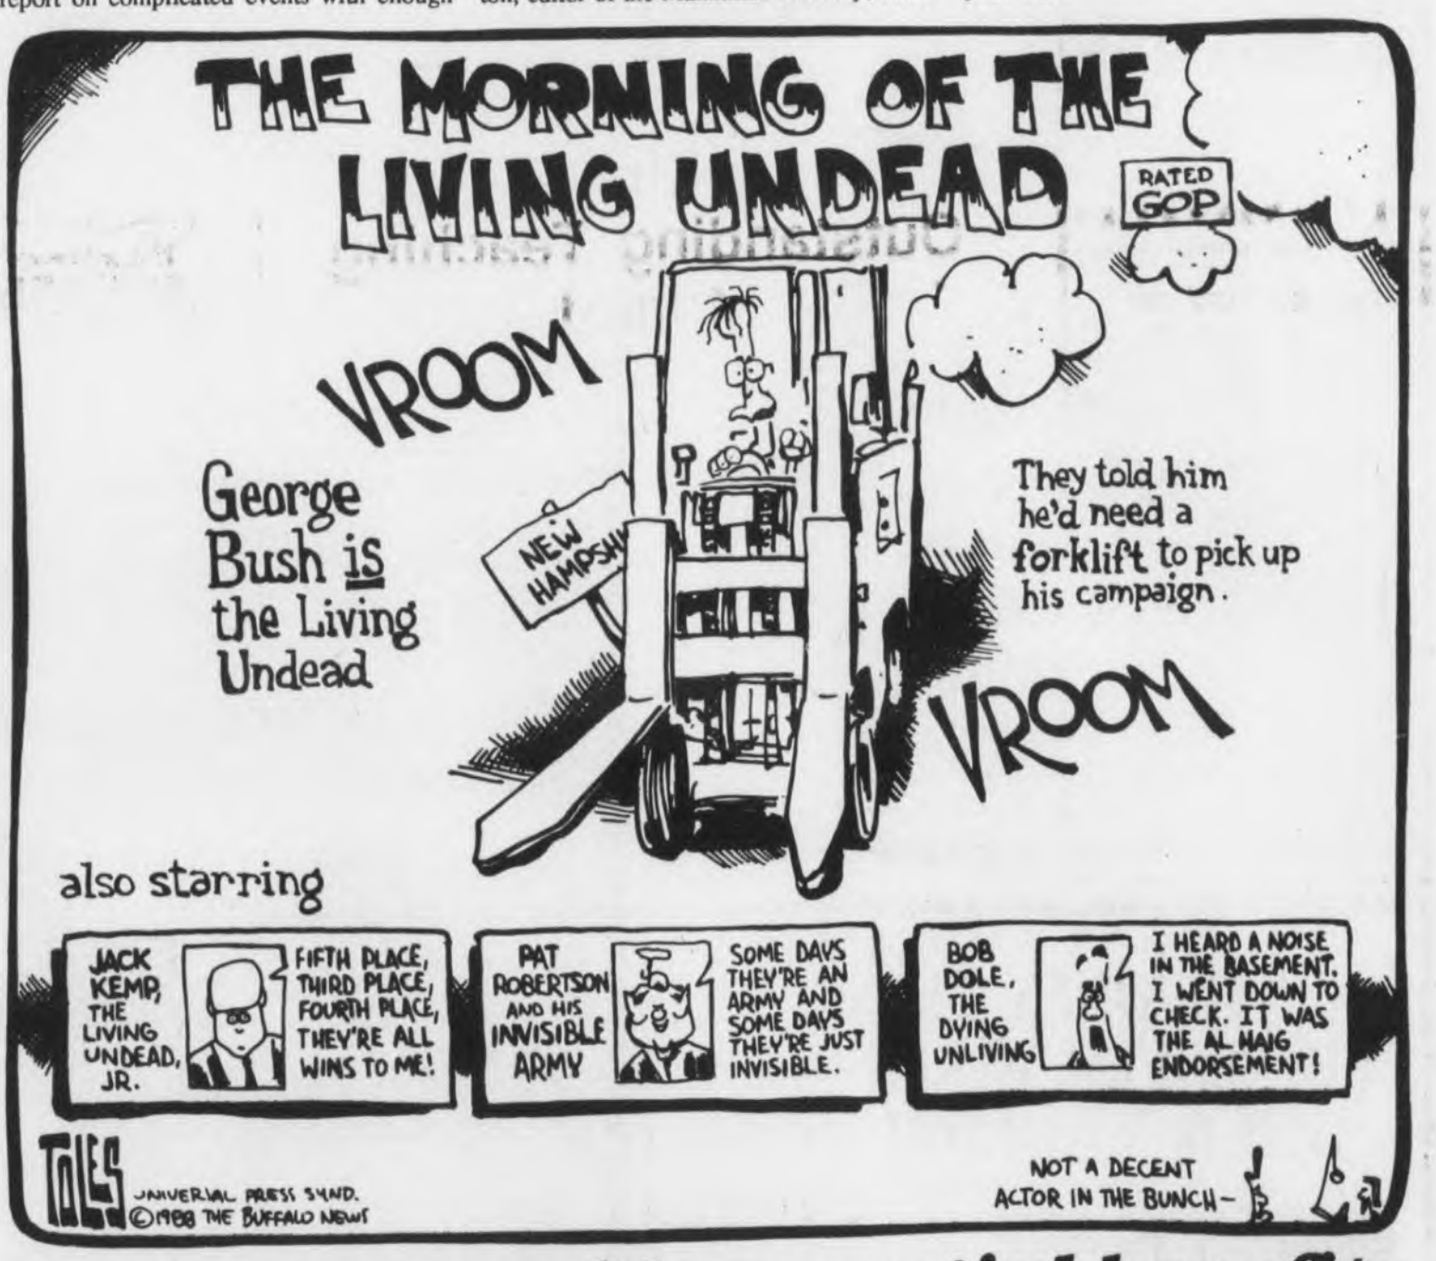
Compared to Bakker, who shunned a church inquiry, Swaggart — largely because of his repentant attitude — has to wait only three months before getting back to business as usual. And it's likely the faith of the church followers will be intact.

Attitude, in this case, makes all the difference in the world. Those who believe in Swaggart will forgive him and keep the faith; those who don't, have just had their beliefs reaffirmed.

Not all worthy speakers have impressive names

According to many people, K-State's Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues is one of the most impressive in the nation, with a history of eminent speakers. However, according to many who attend, these same lectures are almost always incredibly boring, many times delivered in a dry monotone and devoid of highly imaginative subject material.

However, many groups campus-wide supply students with other alternatives, sponsoring speakers with topics more controversial than those typically presented by Landon Lecturers.



Tonight, for example, the Coalition for Human Rights is sponsoring a speaker by the name of Melinda Powell. Powell is a Chicago attorney who will address the topic of political prisoners in the United States, more specifically targeting the Lexington (Ky.) Control Unit, the highest-security prison for women in the United States.

She will discuss the sexual and psychological torture of female political prisoners and a variety of other ways in which these women have their mental and physical health jeopardized through a denial of their basic human rights.

While Powell is certainly not as famous as Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, her lecture should deal with issues just as pertinent to the conditions of law and justice in the United States today, as did the recent Landon lecturer's.

K-State has a variety of other lecture series and groups sponsoring speakers, including the relatively unpublicized Lou Douglas Lecture Series and the University Convocations series.

The Landon Lecture series may be prestigious, but there is much more available to students and faculty who wish to be enlightened on subjects that may be considered too distasteful to be highly publicized.

Bland-on Lecture?

Editor,

I would like to join Bernard T. Giefer in his call for a journalist to deliver the next Landon Lecture. Hearing why "journalists feel so compelled to find fault with every subject they report on" could be interesting, and I would probably learn a few things not taught in my high school government class.

As TV and a herd of publications, not excepting USA Today, are attempting to create one mind of the general population, it would be too much, it seems, to have a thought-provoking speech presented to the students of K-State. (I was going to say debate-provoking, but Justice Sandra Day O'Connor's speech certainly has done that.)

If the sterility of the lectures is to continue, for whatever reason, I suggest we consider renaming them the Bland-on Lectures.

Ecstasy's effects

Editor,

I feel it is important to provide additional information about the drug MDMA (Ecstasy) which was discussed in Chad Sanborn's Tuesday article, "Drug's popularity growing."

MDMA is a synthesized drug which can produce side effects including increased pulse rate and blood pressure, extreme agitation, bladder problems and temporary blindness. As with any hallucinogen, MDMA can produce good and bad "trips," hallucinations and delusions, and tremors, anxiety and confusion. However, unlike most other hallucinogens, it is possible to overdose on MDMA since the drug is amphetamine-based.

Engineers provide essential benefits

Geeks, nerds, digit heads, Fish, book worms and dweebs may be familiar titles for these people. Their attire may include high-water pants, pocket protectors and a slide rule or calculator in a handy belt holster. While these may be common stereotypes for engineers, surprisingly, most engineers don't meet the above description. But even if people don't know what engineers looks like, the services they provide and the items they develop should be quite familiar.

Feb. 21-27 has been proclaimed National Engineers Week. First celebrated in 1951, it is sponsored by the National Society of Professional Engineers, American Society of Civil Engineers, American Society of Mechanical Engineers and the Society of Automotive Engineers, with support from the National Academy of Engineering. This year's theme — "Turning Ideas into Reality" — reminds us that engineers design, build and manufacture goods that affect all aspects of our lives.

This is a week for Americans to step back and consider the many ways engineers have enhanced and improved their lives. It is a chance to marvel at the incredible advancements engineers have made in just the past few years. Forty years ago, computers took long periods of time to process small amounts of data, and they often filled an entire room.

Now, computers process large amounts of data in seconds and can sit on a desktop.

Forty years ago, television was only in black and white and offered limited areas. Now, programs can be viewed in color from anywhere in the world via satellite, and if a program isn't suitable, viewers can pop a tape into a VCR and watch a program of their choice.

As John F. Kennedy said 26 years ago, "We would not be able to meet the challenge of the modern world were it not for the trained engineers who develop and build the products and systems that contribute to the welfare, safety and advancement of all Americans. Our engineering capabilities are crucial, not only to the progress of the United States, but to helping others achieve their hopes for a better and fuller life in freedom."

Engineers take pride in their role of building a better world and a better community. Unfortunately, because engineers are human, accidents do occur. Disasters such as the Hyatt Regency skywalk collapse, the shuttle explosion and the Chernobyl accident are grim reminders of this fact. However, engineers are constantly striving to improve their skills so that tragedies such as these will not be repeated.

Engineering is strong and constantly growing. Much of the strength in engineering comes from the excellent education available to engineers. The College of Engineering at K-State is one of the best educational institutions in the nation. The college houses several departments ranging from agriculture to nuclear engineering.

As part of this year's Engineers Week celebration, the student organizations are displaying their organizational banners today and Friday in the Union Courtyard. Join us in celebrating National Engineers Week.

Jason Kaufman, a senior in electrical and computer engineering, is president of the student chapter of the National Society of Professional Engineers.

Fee increase would help fund Childcare Co-op

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

Student senators will take their first look at a bill to establish a student fee for the K-State Childcare Cooperative at their meeting tonight.

The bill, sponsored by the Student Affairs and Social Services Committee, would establish a separate line item fee of $1 per semester for each full-time student. Part-time students would pay 50 cents per semester, and those enrolled in summer school would pay 10 cents per credit hour up to six credit hours.

Funding priority would be given to "childships" — a child scholarship or subsidy which helps families make up the difference if they cannot afford the regular rates — with remaining funds going to increase wages for students who work at the co-op.

John McIntyre, junior in industrial engineering and chairman of the committee, voiced his approval of the bill.

"I'm in full support," he said. "The largest percentage by far is students (who cannot afford the regular rates)."

McIntyre said his committee supported the co-op's request to fund the childships but denied its request for $30,000 to increase student wages. Approximately 50 students are employed by the co-op, he said, adding that student wages are paid through the funds created from each family's tuition.

"We want to regulate what they are going to do with the money," he said. He added that his committee had been "pretty demanding" in requests for information from the co-op during its four weeks of studying the situation.

The co-op's request for more money was an "incredibly well-coordinated effort," McIntyre said.

"The directors are doing a super-good job," he said. "They are excellent child care specialists, but financial wizards they are not."

Expansion of the co-op's services without economic consideration has caused the center to accumulate a debt of almost $49,000, he said.

Nancy Bolsen is director of the cooperative, which opened in August 1985. Since then the number of children enrolled in the co-op has quadrupled, Bolsen said, adding that financial difficulties can be attributed from too much growth in too short a time.

Although the proposed bill will provide a smaller sum than what the co-op requested, Bolsen is enthusiastic about the committee's response.

"It shows a rise in the level of consciousness on the part of the (Student Governing Association)," she said. "A good child care plan increases (faculty) recruitment and retention. It provides for a strong faculty and creates a good image of the University."

K-State is the only regents school that does not fund child care in some way, Bolsen said.

The co-op has presented a proposal to the administration for a funding request, and so far the results have been fairly positive, she said.

"They have our proposal, they will address it, and our hope and desire is that they will fund at least part of it," she said.

Newly formed task force researches ticket sales

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

A student task force has taken on the mission of recommending a policy for the sale of football and basketball tickets that will remain constant from year to year.

"The need for an enduring policy has been brewing for a couple of years," said Doug Folk, junior in electrical engineering and Student Senate chairman.

The task force's charter includes examining all previous ticket sales policies at K-State and at other universities, developing a policy for both football and basketball that is fair and workable and submitting a proposal to Senate.

The task force is composed of 11 students and one non-voting member from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

Torrey Head, adminstrative assistant for Intercollegiate Athletics Inc. and non-voting member of the task force, said it has not yet been decided where students will sit in the Fred Bramlage Coliseum.

There are about 13,400 seats in the coliseum, and about 6,000 seats will be for students, he said.

Last year, there were about 3,300 student seats, and this year there were about 4,850, so there will be a big increase next year, he said.

Donors to the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund and the Fred Bramlage Coliseum Fund will be seated on the west side of the coliseum and probably won't exceed 2,500, he said.

The remainder of the seating is benches, with the exception of 500 seats at floor level, he said.

"The KSU Foundation is in control of the seating, and getting seats in the donor section is predicated upon a complex point system that considers the size of donation and numbers of years that a season ticket has been held," he said.

"I think there is going to be a press row at floor level along one side, probably across from the scoring tables," Head said.

Jeff Wing, junior in economics and task force member, said separating the students from the playing floor by a press row would change the entire complexion of K-State basketball.

"If students can't get right up next to the court and point their fingers out on the court they won't like it, and if we had a basketball coach here right now, he would say the same thing," he said. "It's important we find out what seats we are dealing with or any policy we may try to develop could become null and void.

"For $7 million in student input the students should agree pretty well with the ... seating arrangement," he said.

David Whetstone, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine and chairman of the task force, said it is important that the task force develop the personality of being the representatives of the students.

The situation regarding ICAT is still undecided, Head said.

Mob lynches accused Arab

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — West Bank villagers burned the home of a fellow Arab accused of helping the Israelis and lynched him Wednesday after he fired on the crowd, killing a 4-year-old boy and wounded 13 people, security sources said.

Israel radio called the event "a serious escalation" of 11 weeks of violence in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, and linked it to calls by the Palestine Liberation Organization for harsh action against collaborators.

A reporter for the Arabic-language Jerusalem newspaper Al Quds said residents of Qabatiya village accused the man of collaborating. The victim's identity was not given.

Palestinians began a general strike in the occupied territories Wednesday and the army reported the first attack on Israeli soldiers with explosives and firearms since riots began Dec. 8.

The army said a bomb exploded on a road near Gaza as a military vehicle passed at about 11 p.m. Tuesday and shots were fired at the soldiers, but no one was injured.

Secretary of State George Shultz arrives in Jerusalem today to discuss a new U.S. plan for ending the unrest and reviving negotiations for Middle East peace.

Details of the shooting and lynching were sketchy. Israel radio said hundreds of residents marched to the man's house in Qabatiye, near Jenin, 60 miles north of Jerusalem, and burned it down with firebombs.

Security sources said the man killed the boy and wounded the others when he fired from the house at the attackers, who suspected him of collaborating with Israeli authorities, and they strung him up on a utility pole. The army said it was investigating.

According to the radio, the man used an Israeli-licensed pistol.

An army spokesman called it a fight among Arabs that did not involve soldiers, who arrived later.

Tutoring becomes issue

Proposal would require Senates' joint resolution

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

Student Senate may soon take a more active role in an area that has traditionally been left to Faculty Senate. A Senate committee is planning to turn its attention to the structure of classes in, and the potential funding for, two academic departments.

A proposal by the Academic Affairs and University Relations Committee would require Senate to take an active part in marketing the mathematics tutoring program and assisting the physics department in establishing a similar one.

Later proposals may call for a joint resolution between Student Senate and Faculty Senate petitioning the administration to change the structure of basic physics and analytical calculus courses from the lecture-recitation format to a daily lecture system with one professor per class.

The goal of the joint resolution is to force the Board of Regents to provide for more faculty members in both departments.

Originally, the committee planned to propose only the joint resolution. However, it would have come too late to be included in planning for the 1989 fiscal budget.

Amy Vath, chairwoman of the Academic Affairs and University Relations Committee, said that while K-State pays great attention to the engineering program, it does not pay as much attention to math and physics, which are the "building blocks" for engineering.

"If the building blocks are good, then students will be more likely to continue in the program," Vath said.

The heads of both the mathematics and physics departments would welcome all the proposed changes, if the changes cause the Board of Regents to make additional funds available.

"That would be an ideal program enhancement, then we would just use (graduate teaching assistants) for grading situations and for open-room tutorials," said Louis Pigno, head of the Department of Mathematics.

Pigno would also use GTAs to teach courses which mostly contain students of sophomore standing or above, thus allowing students to adjust to college education methods under the guidance of a professor.

Both Pigno and James Legg, head of the Department of Physics, said they hope the second Senate resolution will result in increased regents' support for their departments.

"If (Senate) could somehow find us additional resources or give us a better idea on how to use the resources we have, I would say, thank you," Legg said.

The mathematics department also faces a shortage of professors. But by using GTAs, the department is able to give every student exposure to a senior faculty member, while maintaining a graduate program that adequately prepares its students, Pigno said.

Under K-State's lecture-recitation format, each student has two weekly lectures under a professor and two weekly recitations under a different instructor — usually a graduate student. Both the University of Kansas and The Wichita State University structure their courses so that calculus and physics classes meet more often with the same instructor — almost always a professor.

The WSU mathematics department fought with its administration in the late '60s to change its calculus courses from lecture-recitation to daily lecture. It continues to struggle with its administration, which wants the department to teach larger classes, said Gary Crown, associate professor of mathematics at WSU.

The WSU physics department and both KU's mathematics and physics departments have used the daily lecture format for a longer period.

Oil rate agreement ends in pipe threat

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — The Bechtel Group Inc. offered in 1985 to sell Israel oil at reduced rates for 10 years in return for a pledge not to attack a proposed Iraqi pipeline, a senior Foreign Ministry official said Wednesday.

The offer by the San Francisco-based construction and engineering company was relayed to then-Prime Minister Shimon Peres by Bruce Rappaport, a partner with Bechtel in the project, the official said. Reduced rates would have resulted in an annual savings to Israel of $65 million to $70 million.

In San Francisco, Tom Flynn of the Bechtel Group said the company did not make any offer to Peres but that it was made by Rappaport, a Swiss financier working with Bechtel on the project.

Flynn said the offer by Rappaport was made without the knowledge or the consent of Bechtel.

Another Bechtel spokesman, Al Donner, said Bechtel "at no point" in development of the pipeline project had anything to do with the handling of the oil. He said proposals submitted by the company "did not include any specific arrangements for the handling of the oil or for the disposal of the oil once it reached the terminal."

Asked about Bechtel's disclaimers after they were made in San Francisco, the Israeli Foreign Ministry official said it was Peres' understanding that Rappaport made the offer for the company.

Applying the art of makeup

Kelly Wondra is good at making people look bad.

Or old. Or young. Or any way they want to look.

The class, Techniques of Makeup, is taught Tuesday and Thursday mornings at 9:30 by Lydia Aseneta, associate professor of speech. Aseneta and Wondra help the students create a variation of characters by altering makeup and hairstyles.

"The students use a wide range of cosmetics," Wondra said. "They practice on each other during class and change partners each week."

Wondra said students do makeup for young and old characters. They also learn how to apply clown, grotesque and animal makeup. Class members also learn the differences in applying makeup for Caucasians, blacks and Asians.

After students have had time to practice with their partner, they are required to do makeup on someone for an examination, Wondra said.

Other requirements for the class include 24 hours of lab work on any one K-State production, demonstrations by the students and a makeup morgue. The makeup morgue is a collection of photographs of different types of faces.

The students collect the photographs and then use them as models for their work.

An interest in theater prompted Carissa Wreden, freshman in journalism and mass communications, to enroll in the class.

"I had done some makeup in high school, so I thought it would be a fun class," Wreden said.

Vicki Herb, a cosmetologist at Tina's Studio 32, wanted to learn the differences between theater and regular makeup.

"Theater makeup is a lot harsher. The features are more in depth," Herb said. "The hardest part is learning how to blend the makeup to balance out the shadows that occur on stage."

Class members recently worked on the K-State production, "To Gillian, on Her 37th Birthday."

The production, running from Feb. 11-20, gave the students a chance to get hands-on experience doing makeup work for a performance. Wondra said they were responsible for helping the actors apply their makeup and assist with costume changes before and during the play.

The play was not a difficult one to do makeup for, Wondra said, because "nobody in the cast is extremely old or extremely young. No one has to be transformed into anything."

One of the hardest projects a makeup class has worked on in the past was an opera which involved the use of wigs and the rapid change of costumes.

"It is simply a matter of not making actors appear washed out on stage. They should be very natural looking," Wondra said.

A majority of the class is non-majors who have never applied makeup for a theater production.

"Most of them don't realize how much work is involved."

Ann Herman, junior in leisure studies, applies feathering lines to Hilary Gant, freshman in theater, during the Techniques of Makeup class. The lines will later be feathered out to apply shading to the face.

Director of institute predicts poor Kansas economic outlook

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Institute for Public Policy and Business Research at the University of Kansas Wednesday presented a gloomy economic outlook for the state this year.

A slowdown is expected in the national economy, and in Kansas an even more pronounced slowdown is anticipated, said Anthony Redwood of Lawrence, executive director of the institute.

He said the institute's forecast is for minimal increases in employment and personal income for Kansans this year.

Redwood also told the Joint Legislative Economic Development Committee that consulting and technical services, the growth industry nationally both now and into the 1990s, are expanding only in the urban centers of Kansas and "are really lagging behind in the rural areas."

He predicted the larger cities and certain "regional centers" will experience good economic growth in future years, but Kansas needs an aggressive economic development program for all communities to keep up.

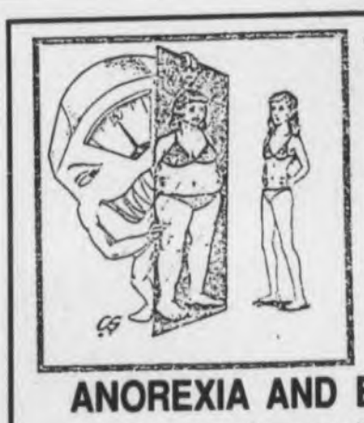
In response to questions from Rep. Jayne Aylward and Sen. Ben Vidricksen, both R-Salina, Redwood specifically cited Salina as a regional center he believes will prosper.

"I think Salina has an excellent future because of that regional role that is going to be service driven," Redwood said. "Salina will achieve some growth because of its ability to serve the surrounding area."

Redwood said Salina should become a regional center for health services, because of a large aging population in its area, as well as a regional center for education, retail stores and arts and culture.

He said Johnson County has been prospering with an influx of service-oriented companies that are national and international in scope, while other cities of Kansas are more likely to attract largely regional service businesses.

However, he cautioned that even the "boom" spots in Kansas are not doing all that well when compared to urban centers in other states.



"Even our metropolitan growth is not impressive," Redwood said.

"Basic service jobs are coming into Kansas, but only into the urban areas. Lawrence looks good for Kansas, but its growth is below the national average, or is just holding its own. Johnson County is better, but it's slowing down, too.

"The major challenge for this state over the next five years is to provide the type of training that is needed to prepare workers for the service industries."

K-State pounds ISU

Henson goes 17-17 from line; technicals factor in 83-66 win

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

K-State's men's basketball team proved it can win without a great performance from Mitch Richmond.

Richmond shot just 5-15 from the field, but sophomore guard Steve Henson stepped to the forefront to lead the Wildcats with a career high 24 points — going 17-17 from the charity stripe — in an 83-66 win Wednesday over Iowa State in Ames, Iowa.

K-State upped its mark to 17-7 overall and 8-3 in the Big Eight Conference, while Iowa State dropped to 17-10 and 3-8.

The turning point of the contest came at the 10:31 mark of the second half, with K-State leading, 44-38. Iowa State was assessed with three technical fouls and a personal foul, and Cyclone coach Johnny Orr was ejected from the game. Henson stepped to the line and showed why he is one of the top free throw shooters in the country, sinking seven consecutive free throws, putting the 'Cats 51-38.

On the ensuing possession, K-State center Fred McCoy hit a turnaround jumper to increase the 'Cats lead to 15 points, 51-38.

Also contributing to K-State's attack was Charles Bledsoe, who came within one point of matching his career best, with 17 points. Richmond was the only other Wildcat in double figures, with 16 points.

Iowa State was lead by Jeff Grayer with 25 points.

Henson increased his performance from the charity stripe to 69-73 (94 percent). Henson also upped his consecutive free throws made to 43, establishing a new Big Eight record.

According to K-State assistant coach Ron Stewart, the technicals assessed to Iowa State during the altercation were justified.

"We looked up as soon as it started taking place and there were Iowa State players everywhere," Stewart said. "We have to commend our players for staying where they are supposed to stay. And the coaches too. We stayed in the coaching box and didn't move."

The ruling on players who leave their bench or coaches who leave their coaching boxes during an altercation says they will be assesed a technical.

K-State took an early 5-0 lead in the game, but Iowa State came back with six points to take the lead. After the early spurts by both teams, the rest of the first half remained nip-and-tuck.

Neither team was able to take

Charles Bledsoe has either tied for or been the game-high rebounder in 11 of K-State's 23 games this season. He also leads the team in rebounds with 170, 65 of which were on offense.

Baseball weather not so hot

Commentary

TOM PERRIN
Sports Columnist

It's Feb. 25, and you know what that means.

Yep, you guessed it. It's baseball season. The K-State baseball team opens its season at 1 p.m. Saturday with a double-header at Frank Myers Field against Friends University. Weather permitting, of course.

My not-so-bold prediction for this one: a Wildcat sweep.

Why schedule a game in February, you ask? Well, when you consider that many of the teams K-State competes against are located farther south and have already been playing, it's not too hard to figure out. You've got to keep up to compete.

It's just too bad the NCAA allows the season to begin at a time of the year when a lot of schools can't practice, let alone play outdoors. It doesn't take too much thinking to figure out why teams like Arizona State and Texas are good every year while others like, say, Minnesota and Wisconsin, usually aren't.

The reason: rotten, cold, snowy weather.

K-State has the same problem, albeit to a lesser extent. If you think it's bad being outside on one of those 10-degree days we get in Kansas, try being a baseball player on one of those days.

And while it's difficult to build a winning baseball program where the weather tends not to cooperate, it's not impossible. Look at Wichita State. Or Maine, which has reached the College World Series for what seems like an indefinite number of years in a row.

K-State would love to be having the kind of success Wichita State is, and the Wildcats are trying. The team finished a respectable 28-24 last year, fifth in the Big Eight Conference. Not great, but not bad either.

The record becomes all the more impressive when one considers that it was achieved under a first-year coach, Mike Clark, who had to build with players he inherited from for-

Olympics has first triple winner

By The Associated Press

CALGARY, Alberta — Matti Nykanen, the Flying Finn, soared to his third gold medal and became the first triple jumping winner in Olympic history, while the Soviets were shut out for the first time Wednesday at the Winter Olympics.

Already an unprecedented winner of the 90- and 70-meter individual events, Nykanen added the third gold when Finland won the new 90-meter team event. Yugoslavia won the silver and Norway won the bronze.

Since 1964, when ski jumping was split into two events, no jumper had won them both. In 1984, Nykanen won the 90-meter event and took silver at 70.

Vreni Schneider won the gold medal in the giant slalom, giving Switzerland a victory in its battle for Olympic Alpine supremacy with Austria.

"I'm going to phone home and say hi to everybody," Schneider said.

The gold rush East was bound to get going again soon, though.

Katarina Witt of East Germany took the first compulsory steps in her own battle against American Debi Thomas in figure skating and the Soviets' powerful women's cross-country ski team gets back into action on Thursday.

But Wednesday was a day of embarrassment for the Soviets. Their Nordic combined team, heavily favored for a medal, pulled out of the competition after finishing last in the ski jumping portion the day before.

It was little consolation to the hapless Americans, though. With the Soviets gone, they finished last in the 10-team field.

At the same time, the U.S. Olympic Committee said it was asking the help of George Steinbrenner, hoping he could do the same thing with the U.S. Olympic team that he did as owner of the New York Yankees. Steinbrenner, a USOC member, will be head of a panel to review the U.S. effort.

"We can do better," Steinbrenner said. "We should do better. The American public deserves the very best we can give them."

Attitude helps Bledsoe

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

Charles Bledsoe has finally come into his own as a player on K-State's men's basketball team.

This year, the 6-foot-8 senior has seen his scoring and rebounding make a modest increase from 8.5 points a year ago to 9.4 points and from 5.7 rebounds to 7.4 rebounds.

Credit Bledsoe's improvement this season to a more relaxed attitude.

"I'm just going out there on the court ready to play," Bledsoe said. "I just go out there and relax and play my game. I haven't done much to change my game. I've just picked up the tempo and feel stronger this year."

Much of Bledsoe's added strength can be attributed to his experience playing in the Beijing China International Tournament over the summer with other players from schools in the Big Eight Conference. In the tournament, Bledsoe tallied 80 points in six games.

K-State coach Lon Kruger, who coached the international team, started to notice Bledsoe's improvement before last summer, though.

"Sure, that trip gave him a lot of confidence," Kruger said. "But he started playing well the last half of last season and extremely well on the China trip.

"Any time you have that kind of success, that helps your confidence," he added. "And confidence is the key to being a successful player."

Rebounding is definitely Bledsoe's forte. Entering the Iowa State game, Bledsoe has either tied for or been the game-high rebounder in 11 of the 'Cats 23 games this season. He is also the team leader in rebounds, with 170-65 offensive and 105 defensive.

Kruger pointed out that Bledsoe has the ability to do a lot more than simply rebound.

"If people start going out after Richmond, then we can open the middle for Charlie," he said.

And though Bledsoe has improved his scoring average, he will tell anybody that putting points on the board is not one of his main responsibilities. He ranks fourth on the team, with 217 points.

"As far as scoring goes, I'll leave it to my main man here," Bledsoe said, pointing to teammate

Sooners beat 'Hawks, Manning breaks record

By The Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — Kansas forward Danny Manning said there was nothing to smile about after becoming the Big Eight's career scoring leader Wednesday night.

The reason was that while he scored 30 points to replace Wayman Tisdale atop the Big Eight scoring list, the fourth-ranked Oklahoma Sooners had enough down the stretch to hold off Kansas and win 95-87.

"I would rather have a win," said Manning. "It does not mean that much now, it's no consolation to losing a game. It's more of an individual record, and I have played with very unselfish players for four years."

Manning, a 6-foot-10 senior forward, now has 2,665 points. Tisdale finished his three-year career at Oklahoma with 2,661 points.

"What Danny did is phenomenal," said Jayhawk coach Larry Brown. "It's something that a lot of people should be proud of. I remember Wayman as a scorer. Danny is an all-around player."

Center Stacey King scored 22 points, including six in a row during a crucial stage late in the game, as Oklahoma won its 11th in a row to run its record to 25-2 overall, 10-1 in the conference. Kansas dropped to 17-10 and 6-5.

Manning had 20 points in the first half.

NCAA committee recognizes parity

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — At least 20 or 30 coaches "can visualize their teams winning" this year's NCAA basketball championship, the chairman of the selection committee said Wednesday.

"I don't believe that's ever happened in the past," Arnie Ferrin of the University of Utah said in a nationwide telephone hookup with writers and broadcasters. "I believe parity is here. It makes the selection process more difficult. For us to guess what's going to happen is scary."

Ferrin and the other eight members of the Division I Committee will meet in Kansas City March 11-13 to select 34 at-large entries to go with 30 automatic bids. Ferrin, a six-year committee veteran, was made chairman this year to replace Dick Schultz, who succeeded Walter Byers as NCAA executive director. Despite the fact so many teams are massed at the bottom end of Division I respectability, Ferrin — most valuable player in the 1944 Final Four — remains confident the committee will put together the best possible field.

"In my past five years, flying home from that process, I've been impressed with the integrity of the people on the committee," Ferrin said. "They go into this process with the feeling of doing what is best for the tournament. I believe the tournament has been run in an excellent manner."

Ferrin also applauded an announcement by Schultz that players will sign affidavits prior to the tournament that they have not signed with an agent.

"We discussed this in our December meeting in Seattle," Ferrin said. "We feel the players ought to be responsible for their actions. Some of the players have signed with agents and embarrassed their schools. We feel they ought to be responsible for for what they do. They're in college, they ought to learn responsibility."

Ferrin said he was unsure what action could be taken against a school or player whose affidavit turns out to be false.

"It would be NCAA action," he said. "It's a big first step. One I hope will be beneficial."

In a frontal assault on another sticky problem confronting college athletics, the NCAA will again conduct drug-testing of tournament teams. Many players last season in the first year of drug-testing had to wait as long as three hours after their game to be processed, and Ferrin said he hoped that would be alleviated.

"A film has been sent to each school explaining what the procedures will be for drug testing. They will have seen it visually."

Ferrin said the testing procedures will also be discussed in pre-game team meetings.

"It shouldn't be a surprise, just an inconvenient thing."

Ferrin also said the committee was concerned about the rash of fights which have broken out recently in several games. He said the NCAA has no control over such behavior during the regular season, but could take action if fights erupt in the tournament.

"In my five years, I've noticed when coaches and players come into the NCAA Tournament, they come in on their best behavior," he said.

Parking

we all know, when you come back in the middle of the day, it's hard to find a parking spot," she said.

A maximum number of reserved stalls have been added to the parking lot north of Justin Hall and in the faculty/staff parking lot south of the Union. Barb Pretzer, administrative assistant in the Union director's office, has one of the Union stalls.

"Lots of times I would need to be here several minutes before 8 a.m. — depending on what's happening on campus, such as conferences and breakfasts," she said.

William Griffitt, professor of psychology, had a reserved parking spot after he had heart surgery a couple of years ago. After his recovery, he was forced to give up the stall. Griffitt decided to purchase a reserved spot in January.

"I still have some restrictions, such as walking long distances on slippery surfaces," he said. "It's been worth it to me because I have a somewhat unusual schedule, and I'm leaving and coming at odd times."

Brenner said he thinks selling the stalls has helped those people who want to make sure they have a place to park. He believes mostly staff members have bought reserved spots but that some faculty with conferences or legislative work also purchase the stalls.

"My guess is you'll never find those stalls empty," he said.

Linda Brown, secretary for the dean of the College of Education, said that although she would like to have a reserved stall, it is too expensive.

"Now I feel like I have to get here earlier to get a parking spot," she said.

Barbara Warren, secretary in the political science department, has the same problem in the parking lot south of the Union.

"Many mornings I'll be on time and I can't find a place, so I have to go to West Stadium, and there are reserved stalls not being used (at the Union)," she said. "I don't know if they haven't issued them yet or if these people aren't here."

She said the cost prohibits her from buying a reserved spot.

Cliff Schuette, assistant director of the Counseling Center, parks in the lots on the southeast end of campus. He does not have a reserved stall.

"I'd probably buy a spot, but I have a hard time with that amount of money," he said. "There's a lot of other things to do with that $100 a year.

"It seems like in lots where I park, they're filling up faster because there are fewer general spots," he said.

"I understand why (people buy the spots) because they're like my wife and I with juggling kids, baby sitters and teaching schedules; it's nice to know you could get up here and have a parking space," Schuette said.

Faculty and staff apply for the reserved parking spots and list their top three choices of lots where they want to park, Pritchett said. If the reserved parking space is available, the spot is approved.

Stalls are sold on a first-come, first-served basis, she said.

"There are only so many spots, and when they're gone, they're gone," she said.

All reserved spots are placed on the perimeters of the parking lots because the signs cannot be placed in the concrete or asphalt.

The $55 initially pays for putting up the sign, Brenner said. Eventually, if the person has a reserved stall year after year, there will be some profit from the sale of the stall, he said.

The $44 for the regular parking permit pays for the maintenance and improvement of the parking lots.

Caring owners extend lives for pets

By Lori Ingmire
Collegian Reporter

One can bet that a very old dog or cat has a truly caring owner and is considered to be a member of the family, said Jacob Mosier, professor of veterinary medicine.

Mosier is a leading authority on veterinary geriatrics — the study and treatment of the diseases of aged animals. He specializes in dog and cat geriatrics.

Mosier said careful observations show dogs that live long lives have had the common connection of a truly caring owner. These owners genuinely enjoy their pets and display a caring attitude. When the animal is not in a caring home, there is more stress placed on it, usually causing its life to be shortened.

"It is similar to observations in humans in that the very old have had the characteristics of a stable mode and rhythm of life, lack of overeating, and long-standing work — which brings respect of other people," Mosier said.

Mosier said dogs are living longer lives, and the process of aging is no longer accepted as an inevitable progression. He said that with regular veterinary examinations and proper health management, the loss of physical functions may be minimized, progressive aspects of aging may be slowed, and only death — not poor health — should be accepted as inevitable.

Mosier said an animal generally requires geriatric health care in the last one-third of its potential life span — that is, when its body system becomes very limited and no longer functions properly.

"There are things to be done early in life to enhance health longevity," he said. "Early treatment of infection, the cleaning and brushing of teeth, and exercise all contribute to the life span of a dog or cat."

Early treatment of bacterial infections helps prevent damage to heart valves, he said.

Although most people don't think about dental care for their animals, there is not much question that the brushing of teeth in dogs and cats aids in health longevity, he said. In the dog and cat populations, about 80 percent are diagnosed as having dental-related diseases, which are usually discovered between the ages of 7 and 9.

Exercise is important, especially in the middle part of the animal's life, he said. The animal that is able to exercise is usually more alert and sociable.

"Dogs, as they pass middle age, become very sedentary in our environment today," Mosier said. "Many are kept inside the home and are not able to get the exercise they require. They sleep and eat (and) that's it."

After eating, exercise helps clear the sugar and fat from the bloodstream. Mosier suggests dogs take a daily walk or exercise at least three times each week.

Around ages 7 and 8, there is a tendency for the metabolic rate of dogs to decrease. Dogs are creatures of habit, Mosier said, so the amounts of food a dog eats when younger will stay constant later in life and possibly result in obesity. Studies show 40 percent of all dogs are overweight.

Proper geriatric health care can increase the life spans of dogs and cats. The Guinness Book of World Records states the oldest dog lived to be 27 years old and the oldest cat was 36 years old. The average life span of a dog is 12 years, while a cat's is 14 years.

"Geriatric medicine has made great strides," Mosier said. "This has been done through improved diagnostic methods, the ability to monitor various body systems and the importance placed on nutrition."

As a whole, the life span of dogs has increased, he said. Improved veterinary care, increasing knowledge concerning older dogs, and better nutrition are all contributing factors.

"The feeding of dogs has come a long way from the 1940s and has resulted in better health," Mosier said. "The moving of dogs from the outside to the inside has also made a big difference in the length of the dog's life."

He predicts the area of veterinary geriatrics will be a clinical specialty within five to 10 years.

Israel, about 1.6 million live in occupied territories, otherwise called refugee camps, Acheson-Brown said.

Since Israel is unable to support its own military budget, the United States sends the Israeli government about $3 billion in aid each year. Of this aid, 60 percent goes directly to the military.

The aid allows the Israelis a tremendous edge in their "police actions" in the refugee camps, Acheson-Brown said.

"The Palestinians have tried to make known their need for self-determination in a wide variety of ways," Acheson-Brown said. "They have tried diplomatic means and liberation-type methods. Everything they have tried so far has left them frustrated."

If a solution to the 40-year-old problem isn't reached soon, Acheson-Brown said, he believes the violence and bloodshed could escalate.

"Any type of further (Israeli) repression will only fuel the violence," he said. "The violence isn't caused by the Palestinians throwing rocks. The violence is caused by the Israeli army.

"The Israelis believe in systematic repression," he said. "The government of Israel is very sophisticated in its attempts to suppress people."

In addition to the number of incidents between the Israeli troops and the Palestinians increasing, the severity of the clashes has also increased. Two Israeli officers were charged recently with burying four Palestinians alive and then ordering a bulldozer driver to run over them. Another almost identical incident was reported this week.

"Any military or police force that wants to commit violent acts is going to use troops that don't have any qualms about kicking in doors and breaking resisters bones," Acheson-Brown said. "These are the type of troops being sent into the occupied areas."

While any feasible solution would involve the Palestinians receiving their own state, the Israelis are reluctant to see this happen said. "We don't trust them and they don't trust us.

"Many times they will try to incite a riot, and then after they have injured some people, they will make it worse by detaining ambulances trying to get into the area."

Besides the physical problems the Palestinians face, they must also deal with the public opinion that is brought on by terrorist or extremist activities in the region.

"Israel calls the PLO terrorists. Sometimes the United States agrees and sometimes they don't," the first student said. "Nobody cares about the Palestinian problem.

"Often times when the violent acts are carried out they are done to draw attention to the problem," he said. "I don't necessarily agree with some of the things that are done, but if my brother or sister or my whole family had been killed because of it, I might feel different about those acts."

Bledsoe

Mitch Richmond. "When he's on, I don't need to do that much."

But probably the most significant improvement Bledsoe has made has been in the area of free throw shooting — a welcome change.

"Well, my free throws have really been a surprise," Bledsoe said. "I'm more relaxed this year. (Kruger) said to just go up there and relax. Now when I go up there, I feel I can hit them."

Another welcome change in Bledsoe is his development off the court as a leader, Kruger said.

"We knew that he was a good player when he came (from Moberly Junior College in Moberly, Mo.)," Kruger said. "But off the court, he's set a good example as being one of our main players."

But will this improvement give Bledsoe a shot at the professional ranks?

"A shot at the pros is extremely rare," Kruger said. "But he's a solid player, and I'm pretty sure he'll find a place to play after his days here are over."

more than a 4-point lead during the half. The 'Cats went into the locker rooms with a 1-point lead, 26-25.

"That first half, we stuck in there and stayed with (Iowa State)," Stewart said. "The second half incident is what really propelled us.

"It's good to win a game like this," he added. "But there were so many things going on that I didn't know what was going to happen."

Iowa State coach Johnny Orr was assesed his first technical foul early in the second half after arguing about a foul called on Lafester Rhodes. About four minutes later, the melee took place, with Orr receiving another technical and an ejection, the Iowa State bench receiving two technicals, and Rhodes receiving a personal foul.

The technicals assessed to Orr were his first in two years.

As a result, K-State went from a 6-point lead, 44-38, to a 13-point lead, 51-38, and never looked back.

"We won the game at the line," Stewart said of K-State's 34-44 shooting from the line. "Everybody got up there and just did their job and did it well."

mer coach Gary Vaught and without full funding from the athletic department.

Had the athletic fee gone through last year, at least Clark would have had the NCAA limit of scholarships to work with. But the fee didn't make it through, and Clark made the best of things — using a pair of field players, Mike Hamacher and Mike Hinkle, as pitchers.

This year, K-State has a full complement of pitchers (three left-handers and seven right-handers) and figures to be an improved team. Probably not good enough to compete with teams like traditional powers Oklahoma State and Oklahoma, but improved nonetheless.

Student season tickets are on sale for the nominal cost of $5. This is a move Clark and the athletic department hope will bring bigger, rowdier crowds to the games and make some money as well.

It's just too bad the games have to start in the middle of sledding season instead of baseball season. A mid-March to July 4 college baseball season would make far more sense for players and fans.

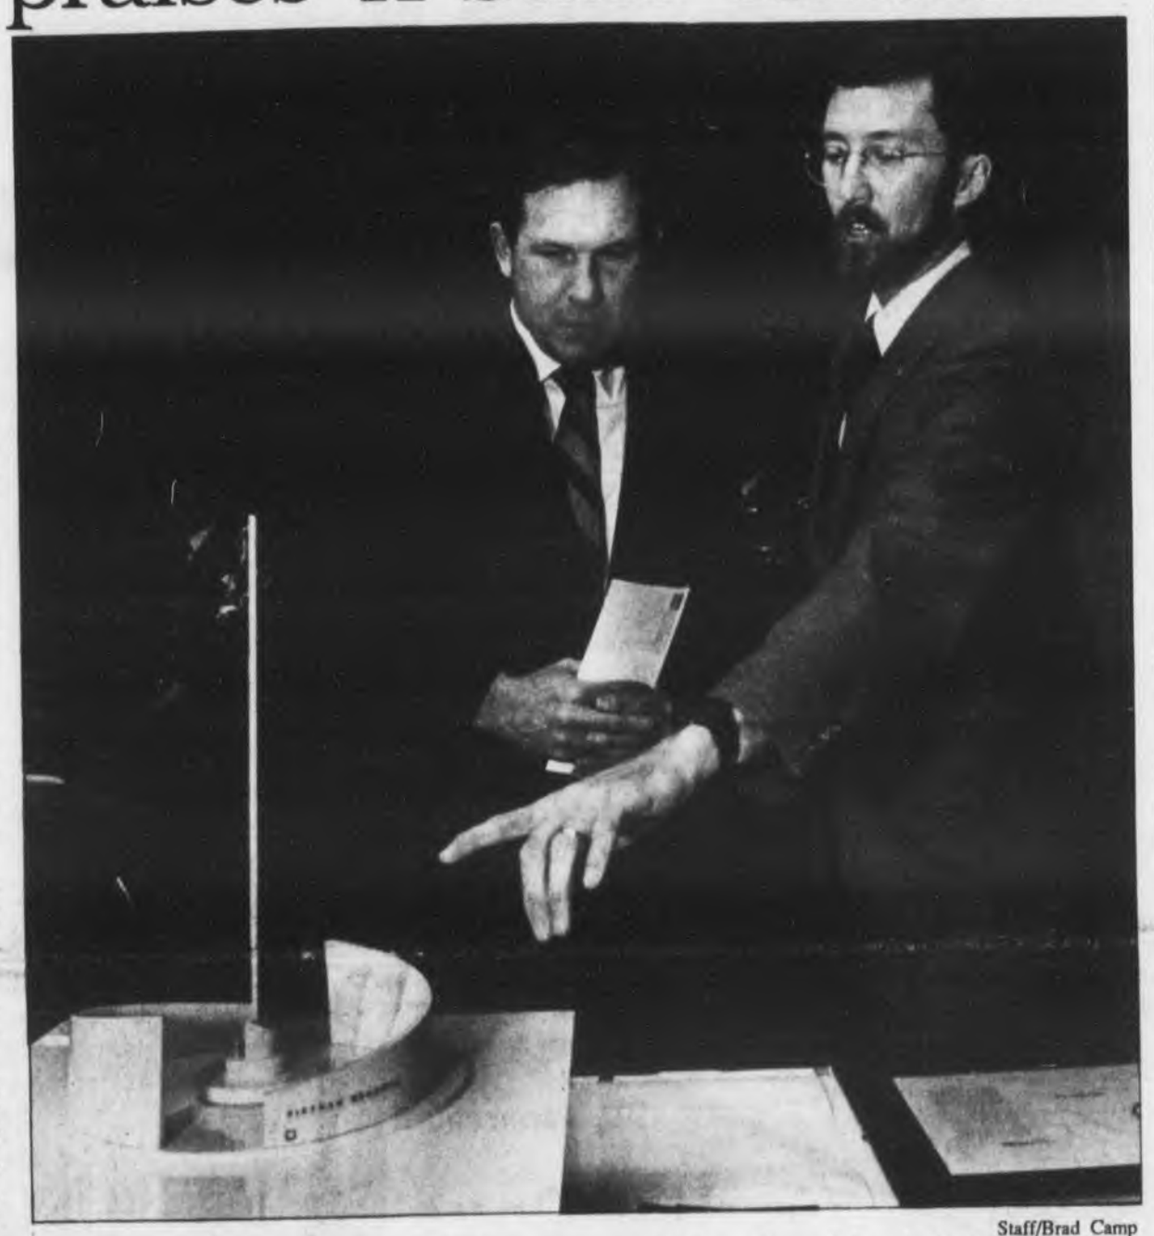
Hayden praises K-State officials

Memorial to honor veterans

By Robert Manchon
Collegian Reporter

During a $100-per-plate fund-raising dinner Thursday night, Gov. Mike Hayden praised K-State officials for their efforts to build a fitting Vietnam memorial on campus. About 90 people attended the dinner at the Holiday Inn and Holidome, and Hayden made a personal contribution of $500 toward the memorial's construction.



Hayden said the memorial would serve as a permanent reminder to future students and faculty of the price paid by the 38 K-State students who lost their lives in Vietnam. Hayden, who was an Army platoon leader in Vietnam for 13 months, served in Vietnam from 1969-70. He graduated from K-State in 1966.

The proposed site for the memorial is in the quadrangle area north of Nichols Hall. Hayden said it is a fitting place to build the memorial because Nichols was burned down during the 1960s while Vietnam protests raged nationwide.

Hayden said the 1960s was a time of mixed emotions. Saying writing on helmets was a sign of protest, the Republican governor read a slogan that a man in his platoon had written on his helmet: "We the unwilling, led by the unknowing, are doing the impossible for the ungrateful."

The design for the memorial, which features a circular walled court with benches and a central flag pole, was created by Scott Enns, an architect from Wichita. The names of the deceased students are to be carved in the limestone walls.

The idea to construct a memorial began in 1986 with members of the Arnold Air Society, an honorary of Air Force ROTC students. Through private donations and the fund-raising dinner, more than $11,000 has been raised toward construction of the memorial.

Gov. Mike Hayden and Bill Arck, KSU Vietnam Memorial Committee adviser, look at a model of the proposed Vietnam Veterans Memorial before a fund-raising dinner Thursday at the Holidome.

"Although fund-raising began last fall, this benefit dinner (was) the major fund-raising event for the memorial, which will be constructed by private donations only," said Bill Arck, director of Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service and faculty adviser of the student committee planning the memorial. "No state funds will be used," he added.

Contributions to the memorial are tax-deductible regardless of the amount, Arck said.

Committee member Gary W. Haulmark said the memorial will convey a basic — yet important — message.

"The proposed Vietnam memorial will be our simple means of saying, 'We have not forgotten you,'" Haulmark said. "The memorial will also stand as a reminder to future generations that war extracts a very high price. This price is so often paid by the young, just as it was for the 38 former KSU students who lost their lives in Vietnam."

Americans are beginning to open their hearts up to the Vietnam vets, said President Jon Wefald.

"It is only now that the American people are realizing the sacrifice (the soldiers) made," Welfald said, adding that the memorial "is long

Panamanian leaders unanimously vote to remove president

By The Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama — The legislative assembly removed President Eric Arturo Delvalle and the vice president from office early Friday.

The assembly adopted the resolution on a unanimous vote during an emergency session that lasted less than 10 minutes. Opposition legislators did not attend the session.

The assembly said it would issue the resolution to the Cabinet so it can choose a new president, in accordance with Panama's Constitution.

The assembly's action came after Delvalle ordered strongman Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, under U.S. indictment as a drug trafficker, to step down. But the military challenged the order and the man named as new armed forces chief refused to take the job.

Noriega is regarded as the real power behind the civilian government in Panama, headquarters for U.S. military operations in Latin America.

Delvalle said Noriega would be succeeded by Col. Marcos Justines, the chief of staff. Late Thursday, Justines said, "I reject that order."

Noriega, under indictment in the United States on drug trafficking charges in the United States, is regarded as the real power behind the civilian government in Panama, headquarters for U.S. military operations in Latin America.

The government's Radio Nacional called Panamanians to a Thursday night rally supporting Noriega at a downtown park near the National Palace.

There was no immediate indication whether Noriega would comply with Delvalle's order. He has said he is innocent of all charges against him.

The police chief for the Defense Forces, flanked by colonels and lieutenant colonels at the Forces' central garrison, told Panamanian

Electrical outage affects campus

By Robert Short
Collegian Reporter

It was "lights out" in McCain Auditorium Thursday afternoon when a primary transformer shorted out causing a power failure in sections of the building.

Randy Slover, shop supervisor for building maintenance, said University Facilities received a call from McCain Auditorium about 1:30 p.m. Thursday reporting a loss of power in some sections of the building.

University electricians discovered several blown fuses, and traced the problem to a damaged transformer in the basement of the auditorium, he said.

Electricians shut off the power to Danforth Chapel, Calvin Hall, McCain Auditorium, Fairchild Hall and Thompson Hall Thursday from 5:30 p.m. until 8 this morning while they connected temporary transformers.

Pat Gardner, maintenance electrician, attributed the transformer's failure to a weakness in the insulation surrounding the unit's wire coils.

There was no danger of external damage or of an electrical fire when the unit shorted out, because the fuses act as a safety switch and cut the power instantly, Slover said.

The transformer will be shipped to a major electrical company that is equipped to repair the unit, said Charles Shivley, maintenance electrician supervisor. The copper coils in the transformer will need to be rewound before it can be used again, he said.

Gardner said the transformer's power load is about 12,500 volts. The unit supplied power to outlets and lighting in different areas in the building at 120 volts, he said.

Slover said the power was temporarily shut off in the other buildings to allow the electricians to tap into a main circuit in order to restore power to McCain.

The temporary units are three smaller pole-mounted transformers that the University keeps on hand, Gardner said.

Gardner said the temporary units will be able to handle most of the power load until the old unit is repaired. The cooling units must remain shut off until then, he said, but because of the cool weather that will not be a problem.

In a related incident, Kansas Power and Light of Manhattan responded to a call at 1:40 a.m. Thursday that a power line was damaged at the intersection of Sunset Avenue and Stratton Circle, said Paul Bennett, district superintendent for the company.

A car struck a guy-wire and flipped the wire up into the live wires directly overhead, Bennett said. Two sets of wires were damaged. According to Riley County police reports, the car was driven by Russell L. Otte of 500 Sunset Ave., freshman in business administration.

The damaged wires caused a short power failure on campus and in parts of Manhattan. A line crew repaired the wires Thursday morning.

Army helicopter crashes in Texas

9 killed, 9 seriously burned

By The Associated Press

CHICO, Texas — An Army helicopter caught fire and crashed in a pasture Thursday, killing nine soldiers and seriously burning nine, authorities said.

Two soldiers fell 35 feet after leaping from the burning twin-rotor CH-47D Chinook as it hurtled toward the ground about 50 miles from Fort Worth, said state Department of Public Safety Sgt. Robert Rankin. One of the soldiers died.

The other soldier said that a fire had broken out at the back of the helicopter based at Fort Sill, Okla., and that those aboard had tried to move to the front to get away from the flames, according to Rankin.

"We do have some witnesses who said they saw parts falling off back toward Chico (several miles away), and some of the witnesses said it was on fire before impact," he said.

Nine soldiers were killed and nine injured, said Fort Hood spokesman Lt. Col. Michael Miller. Eighteen people were aboard, said Rick Brink, a Fort Sill spokesman. The injured were listed in serious and critical condition.

Many of the soldiers suffered third-degree burns, some over their entire bodies; others were wrapped in body bags after firefighters extinguished the grass fire, authorities said.

Seven soldiers died at the scene of the afternoon crash, which sparked a grass fire, said Lt. Brad Schuldt of Carswell Air Force Base. Another soldier died at Parkland Memorial Hospital, said administrator Paula Sears.

A ninth soldier died at Bridgeport Hospital, said Justice of the Peace Dawayne Kennedy.

The cause of the crash was not immediately known. A team of investigators from Fort Rucker, Ala., was en route Thursday night, said Col. Herbert Blanks.

In 1985, the Army grounded its entire fleet of 63 of the giant CH-47D helicopters after an accident in Honduras injured eight soldiers.

The copter was returning to Fort Sill from Fort Hood in central Texas with five soldiers from Fort Sill and 12 from Fort Hood aboard, said Capt. Tim Vane of Fort Hood.

World news seminar to explore media issues

By Robert Short
Collegian Reporter

The Nicaraguan conflict and its role in world news will be discussed during a two-day international communications symposium today and Saturday in the Union. The symposium is sponsored by International Studies and the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications.

The purpose of the seminar, which will focus on Nicaragua as a case in point, is to provide a better understanding of the U.S. coverage of international events, said Carol Oukrop, head of the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications.

Explaining how relations with foreign countries affect Americans and the complexities of covering these events through the mass media are important issues, Oukrop said.

The seminar, titled "International News: Fact or Fiction," will include a variety of speakers directly involved with gathering and reporting world news. The general thrust of the seminar is how and why U.S. media carry the news they do about other parts of the world, Oukrop said.

The two-day event is the most prestigious seminar in which the journalism department has ever been involved, she said. The seminar is part of the University's 125 anniversary.

Local speakers include Edward Seaton, president-elect of the Inter American Press Association and editor-in-chief and publisher of the Manhattan Mercury; and Jan Flora, professor of social anthropology and social work, who was a member of a January 1987 delegation that traveled to Central America.

Also included in the list of speakers is Jim Goodsell of the Christian Science Monitor; Manuel Cordero, minister counsel of the embassy of Nicaragua; George Kennedy, of the University of Missouri; Kazimierz Tomaszewski, of the United Nations committee on information; and Cresencio Arcos Jr., White House coordinator for public diplomacy on Central Amercica.

Other speakers include Christopher Hitchens, columnist for The Nation and Washington editor for Harper's; Andrew Selsky, Associated Press writer who has reported from Nicaragua and Honduras; June Erlick, reporter for Time magazine and the Miami Herald; Peter Martin, chief editor of South-North News Service; Roger Verdon, managing editor of The Hutchinson News; Monroe Dodd, managing editor of the Kansas City Times; and Larry Day, former United Press International correspondent in Latin America.

Martin was a "real find" for the seminar, Oukrop said. Associated Press and United Press International news services have turned to him in the past for news stories they could not get, she said.

The keynote speech and opening session will begin at 9 this morning in the Union's Big Eight Room. Discussions on Nicaragua and information gatekeeping will fill the morning session.

This afternoon's sessions will be dedicated to the discussions of listening to Third World voices in the news and the formation of The New World Information Order.

The seminar will continue in Forum Hall at 9 a.m. Saturday. The final sessions will deal specifically with Nicaragua and the Contra-Sandinista issue.

A registration fee of $3 is waived for K-State students, faculty and staff who wish to attend. A luncheon this afternoon at 12:30 is an additional $7.

Reagan's comments clarified

WASHINGTON — The White House attempted Thursday to clarify some of President Reagan's news conference answers, playing down his claim that outsiders were stirring up trouble in Israeli-occupied territories and arguing that an apparent contradiction with Secretary of State George Shultz on Iran arms sales was a matter of interpretation.

The regular White House news briefing conducted by spokesman Marlin Fitzwater was dominated by reporters' efforts to get clarifications of Reagan's remarks at a nationally broadcast news conference Wednesday night.

Fitzwater avoided saying Reagan had misspoken on any subject, but he added detail, emphasis, elaboration and shading to several of the president's replies.

On some points, Fitzwater, however, said he could not elaborate, such as when asked to explain Reagan's remark that there is "a great division even among the (black) people who are being oppressed (in white-ruled South Africa).

"It is a tribal policy more than it is a racial policy, and that is one of the most difficult parts here," Reagan said Wednesday night.

Asked to explain, Fitzwater said, "I don't remember that specific reference. I don't have any elaboration on that."

Church leaders reconsider

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — The hierarchy of the Assemblies of God met into the night Thursday to discuss the fate of television evangelist Jimmy Swaggart after an admitted prostitute said she performed pornographic acts for him for about a year.

The church's Executive Presbytery was to consider a recommendation by its Louisiana district that Swaggart, the denomination's most prominent minister, be barred from preaching for three months and undergo counseling during a supervised two-year rehabilitation period. That recommendation has been criticized as too lenient.

Swaggart's plane arrived at the Springfield airport Thursday afternoon, but church sources and airport security officers said the evangelist's aides were on the plane but Swaggart was not.

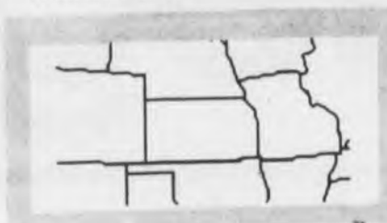
Conrail crewmen tell of drugs

WASHINGTON — The railroad industry is riddled with workers who drink large amounts of beer or use marijuana and other drugs on the job, two Conrail crewmen involved in last year's fatal Amtrak crash told Congress on Thursday.

Engineer Ricky L. Gates said he believed 10 percent or 20 percent of rail workers drink or use drugs on duty, while brakeman Edward W. Cromwell said the figure was more like 40 percent or 50 percent.

The two men told the Senate Commerce Committee that when they began their railroad careers 14 years ago, as many as 80 percent of their fellow employees used drugs or alcohol during working hours.

"It was common practice to bring a bottle ... or a case of beer," the 33-year-old Gates said.



Elderly Texas man opens fire

ARLINGTON, Texas — An elderly man with two rifles burst into a board meeting at a retirement home where he once lived and opened fire Thursday, wounding four people and sending a fifth into heart failure, authorities said.

The 79-year-old gunman fled the meeting room at the Masonic Home for the Aged with one rifle tied around his neck with twine but surrendered moments later, said police spokesman Dee Anderson.

The four people struck by gunfire suffered minor wounds, she said. However, Willie Joe Wright, 67, who suffered the heart attack, was in critical condition at Arlington Memorial Hospital, said spokeswoman Tenya Woods.

"Apparently, they had a board meeting and one former resident, who was apparently disgruntled, walked into the board room and started shooting" at the 15 to 16 people there, Anderson said.

Contribution legality trial set

TOPEKA — The Kansas Public Disclosure Commission has set a March 24 hearing for David C. Owen after filing a two-count complaint alleging Owen made an illegal campaign contribution to Gov. Mike Hayden's campaign in 1986.

However, it will be up to the attorney general's office or a district or county attorney to decide whether prosecution is warranted.

The complaint, filed after a closed meeting of the commission Wednesday, alleges that Owen, an Overland Park businessman who stepped down in December as national finance chairman of Sen. Bob Dole's presidential campaign, made one illegal $3,000 campaign contribution to Hayden in October 1986.

It alleges the contribution was illegal under the state's Campaign Finance Act because it constituted repayment of another donation made at Owen's request by a company with which he was associated.

Firearm ban considered

TOPEKA — Law enforcement officers supported a bill Thursday that would prohibit people from carrying firearms in a car within reach of a driver or passenger.

The proposal, however, was opposed by a representative of the National Rifle Association.

"We have noticed an increased number of people suspected to be involved with drugs carrying loaded weapons concealed inside their vehicle but not on their person," Lyon County Sheriff Clifford Hacker told the House Committee on Federal and State Affairs. "There is no state statute addressing this problem."

Hacker suggested, however, that the proposed bill be amended to add the stipulation that the firearm cannot be loaded.

The bill would make carrying a concealed weapon in a car a felony punishable by up five years in prison.

"We intend in no way to interfere with the lawful transportation of weapons by hunters and sportsmen," Hacker said.

Rally honors education programs

By The Collegian Staff

Approximately 1,000 balloons will be launched from in front of Holton Hall at 10 a.m. today as part of the celebration of Trio Day.

Trio Day, sponsored by Educational Supportive Services, is the commemoration of the three federal programs that were designed to promote education for people from low-income backgrounds.

The programs are Upward Bound, Educational Opportunity Centers and Student Support Services.

Balloons 'launch' Trio Day

Upward Bound is a program that is targeted at pre-college-aged individuals. Educational Opportunity Centers provide community-based educational information. Educational Supportive Services was created by Student Support Services.

"(Trio Day programs) basically facilitate the access and retention of students from low-income backgrounds into institutions of higher education," said Anne Butler, director of Educational Supportive Services.

The celebration will begin with the reading of the proclamation signed by Gov. Mike Hayden that declared Feb. 20-27 as Educational Opportunity Week in Kansas. Testimonials from students who have been affected by the programs will also be read before the release of the balloons.

After the rally, the group will march through campus to the Union.

A table will be set up in the Union for people to stop by and write a note to their legislators supporting the programs, Butler said.

Similar celebrations will occur throughout Kansas during the month.

"The original intent was to get the eye of the legislators (during budget deliberations), so people across the county began rallying support for the programs in February (of 1985)," Butler said.

Biology students to exhibit results

By The Collegian Staff

Graduate and undergraduate biology students will formally present the results of their scientific studies in the 14th Annual Forum for Student Research Saturday at 8 a.m. in the Union Big Eight Room.

The forum will include presentations on microbiology, cancer biology, ecology and genetics, said Terry Johnson, head of the Division of Biology.

The presentations will be given by 14 students, and each presentation will last about 10 minutes. All of the research is original.

Following each presentation, the audience will be able to ask the students questions or give suggestions on the project.

This discussion is important, Johnson said, because it allows communication within the very diverse division of biology.

"The discussion gives students new ideas and directions," he said.

Ralph Henry, graduate student in biology, said the preparation for the forum is extensive.

"There are always months of preparation just in doing the experiments themselves," he said.

Most students also make graphs or slides and prepare their planning and strategy, Henry said.

The heat is on.
This summer may be your last chance to graduate from college with a degree and an officer's commission. Sign up for ROTC's six-week Basic Camp now. See your Professor of Military Science for details. But hurry. The time is short. The space is limited. The heat is on.
Even if you missed the first 2 years of ROTC, you can still graduate as an officer.

Setting record straight

Association to allow awareness

Commentary

GREG WEISENBORN
Guest Columnist

WOW! I really don't know how to respond to Tuesday's Collegian commentary regarding the Off-Campus Association. The terms "preconceived intent," "topical ignorance" and "unethical journalism" are all begging to rear their ugly heads. I was interviewed by Lori Siegrist, Collegian managing editor, and I was informed that the article was being prepared for a class, not for the Collegian.

Despite this basic breech of ethical responsibility, I'm more concerned with the ridiculous misinformation which was presented. Oh, but would it be too much to ask an ambitious reporter to get all the information correct? I don't find evidence of serious research when the two sources cited were a vague Collegian article and a short phone interview.

When asked about the intent of the article, Ms. Siegrist responded that she was very concerned about the direction of the Off-Campus Association. If she was so concerned, why didn't she attend any of our three meetings or request to see a copy of our constitution? If she was so concerned, why did most of her column deal with why she thought the OCA was ridiculous and involved in — now what did she say — greek "silliness?" Are community projects silly? Is increased University awareness silly? Are tenant/landlord problems silly? Is an occasional social function silly? A friend of mine thought silliness should be spelled: S-I-E-G-R-I-S-T.

Unfortunately, now I'll have to set the record straight. As defined in the OCA constitution, an off-campus student is " ... any Kansas State University student not residing in an organized living group." Membership is defined as: " ... all Kansas State University students willing to promote the purposes of OCA."

The purposes defined are included in our constitution. Membership in OCA was opened to all students as an obvious attempt to keep living group discrimination to a minimum. The University Activities Board requires groups to list a president and a faculty adviser. In this situation, I was listed as president as a formality. There were absolutely no intentions to misrepresent the intentions of the group as inferred by Ms. Siegrist.

A fee of $103.20 was allocated to OCA by Student Senate to advertise the first meeting of the group. It is not uncommon for student groups to request and receive one-time-only funding to help with initial organizational efforts, especially when a tentatively large number of students is involved. There were no implied connections between the representation of off-campus students and the funding of the group, as Ms. Siegrist inferred. OCA may wish, however, to pursue the representation issue at a later time.

I am severely disillusioned by the ignorance surrounding philanthropic projects. If Ms. Siegrist wishes, we may alter the terminology to "service projects." Although there are several very good greek service projects, philanthropies need not be greek-oriented. I am offended that Ms. Siegrist felt the need to use the words "fraternity" and "sorority" as modifiers for the word "philanthropies." OCA may also wish to participate in Homecoming.

As structured by Blue Key, Homecoming is open to any organization that chooses to enter. Why shouldn't OCA enter if it feels it is appropriate? As a sideline, Ms. Siegrist may do well to rewind her proverbial tape recorder and recall that although "service projects" and Homecoming are two possible objectives, they are not OCA's "main goal." OCA will pursue goals determined by the membership of the group.

The OCA constitution provides for eleven officers, and it is a proposed goal for each member to sit on one of eight possible committees. It would be ridiculous if Doug Folk, Michelle Benoit and I were to undertake all of the leadership of the group as Ms. Siegrist believes. What would I do, go down the list and take every third position for myself? We were determined from the start to avoid participating in the direct leadership after the group got on its feet.

It is the personal opinion of myself and several others that because Ms. Siegrist under-researched her piece, a considerable amount of helpful and accurate information may have been lost. I'm thankful that the inaccurate information presented indirectly provided me with the opportunity to correct any misconceptions, and to publicize the many benefits that OCA might be able to provide.

Finally, I would like to agree with Ms. Siegrist in her plea for off-campus students to join OCA. I'm glad she did realize that 60 percent of the student body at K-State is comprised of off-campus students as defined previously. The more members, the better. The accomplishments of the group will be determined by the time and effort available, and by the ideas and motivation that will be generated. I strongly urge all off-campus students, and those who are concerned with their common goals, to join OCA and unite to promote the concerns, needs and goals of off-campus students.

Senate should embrace fee increase for co-op

Student Senate is considering a bill that would provide an increase in student fees to help subsidize the KSU Childcare Cooperative. The fee of $1 per semester for each full-time student would go to improve both care for children and instructors' salaries.

Although it can be said that a vast number of proposals merit students' money, the co-op is in especially dire need currently. The co-op, which went through rough financial times before being taken over by the Department of Housing in December 1986, is in hot financial water again.

Current estimates place its debt at about $49,000. On top of the debt, salaries paid to instructors are horribly low. Lead instructors, which are expected to have a four-year degree, earn a paltry $4.50 an hour, a figure, when other factors are considered, places their earnings at below the nation's poverty level.

The results of such salaries are logical. Instructors are leaving — in droves.

If the co-op is to ever achieve the level at which it is capable of running, it will take money and a sound commitment from students and the administration. The first has potentially come in the form of the fee increase.

The needs the co-op serves are reflected in the increasing demands placed upon it. More and more people need quality child care, and K-State is no exception. Child care is being addressed more in the private sector as employers recognize the benefits of child care on employee retention.

And, how that translates at K-State is faculty retention. K-State is the only school in the regents system that doesn't provide some funding for childcare and the result has not been good.

The University can no longer expect people to work for such small wages nor can it continue to attract fine, quality faculty and staff unless it provides have a good child care program. K-State needs to offer at least what its peer institutions already have.

The reasonable fee of $1 for full-time students, 50 cents for part-time students and 10 cents per credit hour up to six hours for summer school students is not too much to ask of students in return for a quality child care program.

Senators should pass the fee increase without reservation.

Mathematics expertise a vital U.S. hallmark

"Why don't they get Americans to teach those classes?"

This is one of several popular complaints at K-State — usually made by students as an excuse for doing poorly in a course.

Granted, many students of the "hard sciences" at K-State are populated by foreign undergraduate and graduate students. And, by necessity, a large number of them are employed by departments to conduct laboratories and recitations.

But before one complains, or resents their presence, that person should consider what draws them here.

In the case of mathematics, their reason for coming here is more of a compliment to this country than a burden.

The United States is the world's leading nation in mathematics.

In many foreign universities — such as ones in Italy, West Germany and Australia — the prerequisite for teaching math is a doctorate degree from an American university.

As long as this country dominates the world in a given subject, we can expect other countries to send their brightest students here for an education.

Those who lament the presence of foreign students would be wise instead to think about why they are here.

Examining difference between basic, applied research

Commentary

RIZWAN MITHANI
Collegian Columnist

One of my major concerns as an engineering student has been that people tend to overemphasize the distinction between basic and applied research. Now, I am not a big boss with gray hair to expound at length on this issue, but why not? I mean, this is a free country.

It is enlightening to realize that the category under which a particular subject of research falls may change with time.

If you worked with matrices (don't worry about it if you have not taken Calc I yet) a century ago, you would be called a hard-core basic researcher in pure mathematics, conducting your studies just for the heck of it with no goal in mind; try attempting a similar endeavor at present and hordes of arbitrary people will howl "applied researcher," every time you take a coffee break.

If you were to work on NMR (even I have forgotten what the acronym stands for) three decades ago, you would be a grand pure physicist, implying a crazy chap who does research for fun! Try doing it today, and you are sure to be respected as a great applied physicist even if you cannot distinguish between Newton's laws of gravitation, notion and viscous flow!

At the other end of the spectrum, there are the so-called biochemical engineers (applied scientists?) who, for instance, while trying to increase fermentation rates land up with a new biochemical pathway, which is hard-core pure research at its best. Yet another instance is of people who set up a myriad partial differential equations to explain breakage of particles in a ball mill — is not breaking particles a major purpose of the ball mill?

There is a considerable effort spent in universities to develop mathematical models for explaining various phenomena of interest to the commercial world. This is actually a pure form of applied research! I hence believe (again I do not pretend to speak with any authority) that research is just a matter of doing something "useful" with some aim in mind.

How to define "useful" is yet another matter. It raises questions like who decides what is "useful"? How far ahead in the future does one look to decide if the goal is worth pursuing? What are the ethical and moral values associated with the decision? I have no answers to offer you. But, I do hope that if "research" is your "bread and butter," you are at least aware of these issues.

We are fortunate(?) today in having a much wider perspective and idea about the future, then we had half a century back. Hence, even pure research is respected and receives funds only if it has certain aims in mind. Nobody will fund you if you want to study a phenomenon just because you get kicks out of manipulating the mathematics; however, if you tell them that it may lead to a solution to the energy crisis (it need not actually do it; you just have to sound convincing), then you will be inundated with funds before long. This is a sad attitude which many research-supporting organizations adopt. It is, however, a very practical and realistic attitude. So I do not exactly blame them.

One must, however, note that there is a distinct difference between science and engineering. In science, one is more concerned about a phenomenon — why it occurs, what could one potentially do with it and so on. Even in science, whether it is "basic" or "applied" research, these days there are specific aims in mind. In engineering, reality looms large over us as one is really concerned (or at least should be really concerned) about the design and economic aspects of the problem. What is really going to happen in the end, to whatever one is doing is in an engineer's mind? Will the end result be useful and used, or useless and thrown away?

Again, just because the engineer's attitude is realistic, one should not scoff at the idealistic attitude of a scientist. Indeed, science is the basis of all engineering. Even rank empiricism has some scientific basis — it is predicting certain phenomena by some equations whose underlying principles are apparently not worth investigating.

As an engineer, I am an applied researcher. However, I do not laugh at pure researchers. It is fruitless as well as meaningless to laugh at the other category when you happen to belong to one; in fact, it is dangerous to laugh at other people altogether.

If you have read up to this point, it probably means you are concerned about the issue. Thus, if you happen to be in a position to do something about it, then please do not just sit back and forget the issue. Please do something! Every drop of contribution into this vast ocean will add up and count in the long run. I would consider my effort in writing this column as worthwile even if only one reader acquires the guts to change things for the better.

Michael: Worth the price?

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

Kicking off his 13-city concert tour, Michael Jackson performed at Kemper Arena in Kansas City Tuesday and Wednesday evenings for sold-out crowds both nights. It is the second time Jackson has made Kansas City the first stop in a concert series.

A swarm of concert-goers stood outside the arena, shivering in the cold winter air as they were slowly admitted through the gates. Once inside, the race began.

Vendors hawked Michael Jackson T-shirts at prices from $17 to $35 and pins for prices starting at $3. Life-size Jackson cut-outs were stationed strategically on the circular concourse. Instant photographs with the recipient poised next to the poster were available for $10 each.

A young female, dressed in a sky-blue taffeta cocktail dress, and her male companion, dressed in a white satin tuxedo and a black silk shirt, paused to pose with Jackson.

"It's by far the best concert of the year, much better than last time. The pictures are fantastic. They're for my Michael collection," she said.

Dissenting opinions about the performance were abundant. Bob Rose, of Kansas City, spent most of the concert leaning against a wall in the concourse listening at a distance.

"It's an uninterupted distortion. I like good music, but it's not good, just too loud." Rose said. "I would never come back to another concert like this. It's a terrible sound system."

Also roaming the concourse were another two disgruntled Kansas Citians. Drinking soft drinks and smoking cigarettes, the women agreed with Rose that the music was too loud. The smoking ordinances, however, posed a greater problem.

"We're not allowed to smoke in the auditorium," one said, "but that's not the sole reason we're out here."

Concurring with her friend, one of the women added, "I never would have paid $25 to see him, (She had received a complementary ticket from her employer). There's too much equipment for this place. The sound is OK, but it is not as good as it could be. Also we think he's going to be like Elvis some day and we want to be able to say we saw him in concert."

The sound system did not seem to bother 11-month-old Jacob Williams of Kansas City. He slept during most of the concert, Williams' mother said.

"They tried to make me buy a ticket for him. I told them I was going to hold him on my lap the whole time, but the man at the door said I needed one anyway. I just went to another door and they let him in free," she said.

If Jackson didn't reap any profits from Williams, 14 K-Staters who paid $24.75 apiece to attend, made up the difference. Traveling in a caravan consisting of a van and a car, the students and faculty, mostly from the speech department, arrived on the scene a full hour before the starting time.

Munching on cold fried chicken and potato salad in the parking lot, and jamming to Jackson music provided by a local radio station, Leigh Browning, graduate teaching assistant in speech and local Michael Jackson authority, was charged with excitement and ready for the concert to begin.

"When I was 12 years old, my mother asked me what I wanted to do when I grew up and I said 'see Michael Jackson,'" Browning said.

"Now that I've seen him I can die happy."

"The Kemper concerts are the first leg of Jackson's first solo concert tour of America," according to a press release. The tour will last until May when a European tour is scheduled to begin.

According to the press release, "Bad" has sold 12 million albums, five million of which were purchased by Americans, since its release in August 1987. It has also achieved the No. 1 postion on music charts in 24 different countries.

HE'S 'BAD'

By Brad Atchison
Collegian Reviewer

When I was assigned to review the second concert of the 1988 Michael Jackson World Tour, I laughed to myself. I have never been a Michael Jackson fan. I do not even own a copy of "Thriller." I anticipated that the most difficult part about reviewing Michael Jackson would be sitting in a crowd of 15,000 9-year-old girls for an hour's time. I was wrong.

As I sit here, struggling with what to say, I am afraid that nobody will believe me if I try to convey the fact that Michael Jackson is the most exciting performer I have ever seen. I swear I did not want to like him this much, but the fact is, seeing Michael Jackson in concert was a phenomenal experience.

A crowd of all ages, sexes and races swarmed the entrances of Kemper Arena waiting to be admitted for the concert. Jackson, fresh from recording the "Bad" album, is performing without his other family members in what promises to be one of the best tours of the year.

The fans came dressed for all occasions. Yuppies in sports clothes, loyal hard-rockers in concert T-shirts and long-term Michael fans decked out in leather, sequins and silver buckles thronged the crowded ramps.

Concert Review

Age was not a discriminating factor. Attendance ranged from babies with cotton plugging their ears to parental escorts busily buying Michael concert T-shirts and pins, cold soft drinks, and huge, steaming-hot pretzels.

True to the profession, Jackson kept his fans waiting 15 minutes after the scheduled starting time. Suddenly, as if by magic, the crowd simultaneously began to quiet, house lights went dim and the drumbeat started. The air was filled with screams and cheers and then the guitars joined in, creating a heavy, steady beat for the crowds to feel as the anticipation built and the adrenaline raced.

The fog machines went into overtime as Michael and his four male dancers strutted onto the stage. The five struck a pose and waited as the roar of the crowd rose. A lighted screen depicting a body moonwalking began to rise, revealing the stage, and the crowd went wild.

There was a musical explosion in Kemper Arena which transcended into a powerful rendition of "Wanna Be Startin' Somethin." The lights, the sound, the visual experience of this opening scene cannot be translated into words.

Jackson surrounded himself with a large and talented supporting cast. Aside from four muscular dancers, Michael garnished his vocal abilities with four backup singers and a 10-piece band. The product of this large ensemble was nothing short of masterful.

Jackson's opening number was representative of his entire show.

Staff Photos/Greg Vogel
Michael Jackson performs Wednesday in Kansas City.

This concert was a multi-dimensional blend of theater, music and dance.

Jackson's show segued into "Heartbreak Hotel" without missing a beat. No energy or momentum was lost in the concert's first transition.

After two songs, Michael took a break that gave him just enough time to ask the frantic crowd, "How ya doin?" The audience replied, as they did all night, with screams and waving.

The concert was set in-the-round and Jackson played it quite well. He bounced and glided from one side of the stage to another. When Michael directed a song, or even a gesture toward a specific section of the audience, the crowd would rise like baseball fans doing the "wave."

Six songs into his set, Jackson performed a mix of "I Just Can't Stop Loving You," and "She's Out of My Life." These two ballads are representative of the sensitive side of Michael that provides stand-up comedians with scores of material. At several points, Jackson shed tears in an emotional release of tension. Consumed with emotion, he fell to the floor in a crumpled ball after the song's climax. A voice rose up over the crowd.

"Oh Michael baby, don't cry, come on up here," a young woman cried. "You can come home with me."

Even Jackson's sappiest emotional outpourings possessed a quality of genuine sincerity.

The concert danced back into the early seventies as Jackson gratified the audience with a medley of "oldies," including "ABC" and "I Want You Back." This segment of the show served as a reassurance that the 1988 version of Michael Jackson is still strongly rooted in his early years.

Jackson followed up his Motown medley with successive songs from "Off the Wall," "Bad," and "Thriller." After three high- energy songs, Jackson stepped aside and let his talented band take main stage. It was obvious that each member of this musical ensemble is an accomplished musician in his and her own right.

After "Bandgroove," Michael's show was 50 minutes of the best concert music I have ever heard, highlighted by performances of "Beat it," "Billie Jean," and "Bad."

During "Beat it," Jackson swooped over the first several rows of the audience riding on a giant electronic arm. For "Billie Jean" he drew from the choreography that made his appearance at "Motown's 25th Anniversary" so special.

Jackson's last few songs, including his recent hit, "The Way You Make Me Feel," sent the audience into a frenzy and pushed the concert energy level to it's pinnacle.

The show closed with Jackson's latest hit, "Man in the Mirror." For this song, the stage was flooded with natural lighting and the entire performance cast took center stage to share a moment with the crowd. What a show!

When I walked out of the doors of Kemper Arena, I realized that I was a different person. Without noticing it and somewhat against my will, attending this concert made me into a Michael Jackson fan.

Senate reviews child care proposal

By Bryan Hissong
Collegian Reporter

Student Senate heard a two-hour presentation of facts and figures from representatives of the KSU Childcare Cooperative in support of a proposal to create a new student fee to help the deficit-plagued program.

Esther Gray, assistant director of the Co-op, asked Senators to examine the status of child care at K-State. Gray said child care is costly, and the wages for child care workers at K-State tend to be low.

In August 1985, 40 children were enrolled in the child care program. As of January 1988, the enrollment grew to its largest ever, with 200 children. K-State's child care program is now the largest liscensed child care center in Kansas.

The Co-op is a service that provides child care for students at rates lower than the program's costs. According to Gray, the program is being run under cost and will not be able to continue without outside funding. At this time, two proposals have been made; one to President Jon Wefald and the other to the Student Governing Association.

The Co-op is asking Wefald for $79,000 to help raise the $7,128, nine-month gross pay rate for new Co-op faculty members. This pay increase would allow those Co-op instructors currently unable to afford the child care program to better do so in the future.

The second proposal, directed toward Student Senate, would involve an amendment increasing student fees for full-time students by $1. Part-time students would have a 50-cent increase, and a 10 cent per hour increase would take effect for students taking up to six hours.

There are three different levels students and faculty pay for child care, and each depends upon the annual family income. The middle and bottom rate levels are running too far under cost for the cooperative to keep it maintained, Gray said.

The Co-op is asking for $54,000 that will come from increased student fees. If the fee is instituted, the gap between the cost of the program and its income would be greatly narrowed.

In other action, a bill was presented to Senators that would establish a resource center in the SGS conference room. The members of the Blue Key Senior Honorary want to provide students and organizations with resources that will allow them to develop leadership skills.

What you don't know about AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases (STDs) can shatter your dreams for the future.

Protect Yourself
from AIDS & other STDs

Did you know that?
- 625 cases of STDs, and another 1095 cases of genital infection possibly resulting from sexual transmission, were reported in Riley county during 1987
- Over 200 persons tested by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment were shown to be infected with the AIDS virus during 1986 and 1987
- Over 10 million Americans are thought to become infected with STDs each year.
- More than 100,000 men and women are believed to become infertile as a result of STDs in the U.S. each year.
- Over 300,000 American women are thought to have babies that die or suffer birth defects as a result of STDs each year.

Will you be the next statistic ?
To learn more about AIDS & other potentially serious STDs, come to the Union Little Theatre, Tuesday, March 1, 1988, at 7 p.m. to hear Dr. Barbara Johnson speak.

OSU loaded with 'great athletes'

Wildcats to take on 'athletic' Cowboys

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Life in the Big Eight Conference could sometimes be compared to a soap opera. Call it: "As the Basketball Spins." The plot thickens when K-State hosts Oklahoma State University at 3:10 p.m. Saturday in Ahearn Field House.

Cowboys' coach Leonard Hamilton was upset last week when he referred to biased officiating against his squad by veteran official Jim Bain after OSU lost to Missouri.

Hamilton is through talking about Bain, and K-State coach Lon Kruger shouldn't have many complaints about the officials this season. After all, the Wildcats have been to the free-throw line 197 more times than their opponents (586-389) overall, and 187 more times in conference play (432-245).

These figures account for many wins, especially in Wednesday's victory over Iowa State University. K-State outshot the Cyclones from the charity stripe, 34-4.

Speaking of free throws, 'Cat guard Steve Henson should be the nation's leader in free throw percentage this week after sinking 17-17 from the line in the win at ISU. Henson has set a Big Eight record by sinking 43 straight free throws and leads the conference in free-throw percentage at 92.9 percent (69-73).

"Right now it's just a matter of concentration," Henson said. "The guys just keep getting the ball into my hands really well. I just try to have it in my hands late in the game, or try to penetrate and draw the foul."

Henson said he has always been a good free-throw shooter, but in the past has had slumps which have pulled his average down. This season, though, he's taking more time and maintaining the Henson routine.

"I've shot 'em the same way since high school. I take a deep breath, toss (the ball forward) with a little spin and take three dribbles," Henson said.

Meanwhile, Henson and the Wildcats have more to worry about than a free-throw streak. K-State, 17-7 overall and 8-3 in the Big Eight, faces an OSU club that has won five more games than last year's total.

The Cowboys, 13-12 and 4-7, are one of only three teams that have outrebounded the 'Cats this season when OSU lost to K-State, 77-60, in Stillwater, Okla.

"They're one of the most athletic teams in the conference. Their athleticism showed in the game in Stillwater. They outrebounded us and worked very, very hard," Kruger said.

"I really respect the way they play," Henson added. "They have great athletes, and a lot of teams with great athletes tend not to play so hard. But Oklahoma State and Nebraska probably play the hardest in the league."

Hamilton said it would be great for the Cowboys to win on the road, but simply wants his team to play hard, aggressive and intelligent basketball. The second-year coach said the 'Cats can beat anybody in Ahearn.

"Once again we have to hit the road and play in one of the toughest places in the conference," Hamilton said. "On top of that, we have to play a team that has one of the better chemistries in the league and one of the best players (Mitch Richmond) in the league."

Oklahoma State has a budding star of its own in freshman Richard Dumas. The 6-foot-7 forward leads the Cowboys in scoring (17.2 points per game) and rebounding (6.5 ppg).

"He's got a lot of outstanding skills. On one hand I look forward to having him in the league for four years; on the other hand I kind of dread that in a positive way," Kruger said of Dumas.

"He's certainly a long ways from what you think of as a freshman."

Dumas is one of only three players to obtain his scoring average against K-State this season. Nebraska's Derrick Vick and Missouri's Derrick Chievous were the others.

NOTES: K-State leads the overall series 59-22 and in Manhattan 28-7...Oklahoma State has lost four straight to the 'Cats...Richmond's 16 points at Iowa State makes him the most prolific two-year scorer in K-State history. His 1,116 points surpassed Willie Murrell by four...Richmond averages 29.4 points in Saturday games.

Next Lady Cat foe winless as visitors

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

K-State women's basketball coach Matilda Mossman said the Lady Cats' last game of the season Saturday is important in one and only one aspect — respect.

"(The game) doesn't really matter to us," Mossman said. "We're last in the Big Eight and there is nothing that we can do about that.

"We'd like to win," she added. "It would give us a little confidence going into the (Big Eight) Tournament."

The Lady Cats have struggled through the season with an 8-18 overall record and a 1-12 Big Eight conference mark. The lone win in conference play came against the Iowa State Cyclones, 83-70, Feb. 3.

And Saturday's contest with the Cowgirls from Oklahoma State in Ahearn Field House at 5 p.m. doesn't look promising.

The Cowgirls, 16-10 and 6-7, are coming off a big win against conference leader Nebraska. The Cowgirls won 96-80 in Stillwater, Okla.

Oklahoma State is led by junior forward Clinette Jordan, who averages 18 points and nine rebounds per game, and senior Jamie Seiss, who averages 17 points and six rebounds per contest.

"It would be nice if we had to worry about just one player," Mossman said of the duo. "But we have to contend with both.

"Jordan is great player and Seiss...she's like Larry Bird. If we shut down her scoring, she can hurt us by creating something else for somebody else."

If there is one distinct advantage the Lady Cats have, it's the fact the Cowgirls have not won a Big Eight contest on the road.

"We're trying to sell our kids on the fact that (Oklahoma State) has not won on the road," Mossman said. "I'm sure that the Oklahoma State knows that."

Mossman sees her team playing the role of spoiler in this weekend's contest.

"Right now (Oklahoma State) is sitting in sixth place in the Big Eight," Mossman said. "They have a 6-7 record and are one game out of third place.

"Kansas is playing at Missouri, and Oklahoma is at Colorado and if things go like I'm sure they will," she added, expecting Kansas and Oklahoma to win, "then Oklahoma State could move into third place with a win."

K-State will be hard pressed for personnel in the game, as the Lady Cats will be without the services of Kristie Bahner and Janet Madsen.

"(The game) doesn't really matter to us. We're last in the Big Eight and there is nothing that we can do about that."
—Matilda Mossman

"We missed them the last game (a 70-52 loss at Iowa State)," Mossman said. "We could have won that game if we had executed a little better.

"Diana (Miller) has increased her production and Rita (Matteucci) has started taking a role in scoring some more," Mossman added. "Those two have started to pick up some of the slack for us."

NOTES...Saturday's game is the last game in Ahearn Field House for the Lady Cats, who are in their 20th season of play in the building. The Lady Cats have never posted a losing season in the previous 19 seasons.

Big Eight indoor to challenge teams

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's track and field teams will travel to Lincoln, Neb., to compete in the 60th Big Eight Indoor Championships today and Saturday.

Host-team Nebraska is the defending champion in both the men's and women's divisions. In a Big Eight coaches poll, the Husker teams are picked to successfully defend those titles.

In last year's meet, the K-State men's team finished in the No. 3 spot, as the women finished second. The K-State men's team is picked, by the coaches poll, to finish fourth with the women again taking second.

"This meet is going to be real competitve," Coach John Capriotti said. "The men could finish higher than fourth but we are going to have to get a total team effort. It is going to be very competitive."

In the women's division, Nebraska is defending its title and looking to take the top spot for the ninth straight season.

"Nebraska just looks too strong," Capriotti said. "The second and third place teams together couldn't beat them. Second place is very close. For us, we have got to go there and take it to them or we will finish fourth or fifth."

Lights will shine in Wrigley

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — The City Council, signaling an end to a 72-year-tradition of daytime-only baseball at Wrigley Field, voted late Thursday to lift the ban on night games at the only major league baseball park without lights.

The vote was 29-19 in favor of lights.

The Chicago Cubs' owners have asked to play a handful of night games each year at Wrigley and, after years of trying to diminish political and community opposition, they apparently will get the chance this season, barring a ban by the state legislature or courts.

During debate, Alderman Bernard Hansen, whose ward includes Wrigley Field, said: "Is this an ordinance of need, or this an ordinance of greed? The Chicago Cubs are owned by the Tribune Co.

"The Tribune says if it doesn't get lights, the Cubs will move — the big threat. However, the Chicago Cubs have become the most profitable arm of the Tribune Co. So it's a matter of greed, not a matter of need."

But Alderman William Henry, who supports lights, said: "The real deal is with revenue. No one has talked about the millions of dollars the sports teams generate. Do you know we can generate $45 million to $50 million from the 1990 All-Star Game? No one talks about that. I believe this ordinance is right."

At the team's Mesa, Ariz., training camp, Pitcher Rick Sutcliffe said, "I think the night games will give us a chance to rest up during the day after coming off long road trips.

"A lot of times we don't get home from road trips till 2 or 3 in the morning, and only get about four hours of sleep before heading back out to the ball park," he said.

The measure, endorsed by Mayor Eugene Sawyer, would allow eight night games this season and 18 each of the following years until 2002 at the venerable ballpark.

Wrigley Field, a neighborhood landmark since 1914 with its ivy-covered walls, is bordered by small apartment houses where resident fans can sit on the roof and watch the action for free. But many residents of "Wrigleyville" are vehemently opposed to night games, anticipating rowdy crowds and parking problems.

Tribune Co., owner of the Cubs, has threatened to take the National League team out of Chicago if lights aren't allowed at the field.

By playing only during the day, club executives say, the team misses out on lucrative revenue from TV networks interested in airing evening baseball.

And if the Cubs make the playoffs while the night-game ban is in force, the team would have to play elsewhere, because playoff and World Series games are scheduled to accomodate network requests for prime-time exposure.

The promise of the 1990 All-Star Game was the latest argument for night games. The club owners said if the ban was not lifted the game would be awarded to another club.

Baseball begins Saturday with afternoon doubleheader

From Staff and Wire Reports

K-State baseball season will get underway this weekend with doubleheaders slated for Saturday and Sunday at Frank Meyers Field.

Saturday, the 'Cats open the year with a noon twin bill against the Friends University Falcons. Second-year coach Mike Clark will send left-hander Darryl Rowley to the mound in the opener. Rowley was 0-4 last year, and was sidelined for much of the season due to injuries. In the second game against the Falcons, right-hander Bill Schafer, who transferred to K-State from Butler County this season, will draw the start.

Sunday, K-State will host the Missouri Western Griffons in a doubleheader starting at 1 p.m. Zack Kimbell, a senior right-hander, will start for the 'Cats in the opening game. Kimbell was the ace of the pitching staff last year with a 6-3 record.

In game two, Jim Haller will get the nod. Haller, a southpaw, is also a junior college transfer from Barton County Community College.

"My main concern is that we find out some answers about ourselves more than about what the other teams have, and if we can do that, we'll have a successful weekend," Clark said. "We've got so many new kids on the team. It is also good to start off with a couple NAIA schools because there is less pressure to start off the season right away.

"We played both teams right around the same time last year and I remember Missouri Western being a little bit stronger than Friends," Clark said. "I don't know how they'll be this year."

At the plate, the 'Cats will try to replace the hitting power lost due to the graduations of Otto Kaifes, Jeff Turtle and Mike Hinkle — the third, fourth and fifth men in the batting order.

"I doubt that we'll have the punch we had a year ago, but we had several players enjoy good summers," Clark said.

After the weekend action, K-State will have the week off before traveling to Arkansas next weekend for a three-game series with the ninth-ranked Arkansas Razorbacks.

"It's important for us to play these first four ballgames so that we can get some problems ironed out," Clark said. "We don't want to jump in the first game right away and play an Arkansas-type (game). We'll get a few bugs out and go down and find out from Arkansas exactly whether we are that caliber of team, or what we need to do to become that caliber of team."

Students to attend 13th garden show

By The Collegian Staff

The 13th Annual Kansas Flower, Lawn and Garden Show, sponsored by the Kansas State Horticultural Society and K-State, will be at the Kansas Expocentre in Topeka today through Sunday. This is the first year it will be at the Expocentre.

"I'm excited about the new facility because the show will be expanded," said Larry Leuthold, assistant professor of horticulture and member of the executive committee that planned the show.

Nearly 8,000 people are expected to attend the three-day event, which carries an admission of $2. Proceeds from the show will help fund K-State scholarships.

The show will have exhibits covering educational and commercial aspects of horticulture. The theme for the educational exhibits is "Horticulture in the Future," said Paul Jennings, head of the Department of Horticulture.

Educational exhibits will focus on lawns, flowers, fruits, vegetables and ornamentals, such as trees, shrubs and landscaping.

The K-State Horticulture Club will also compete for prizes in arrangements using the educational theme, Jennings said.

Commercial exhibits will include products that are sold, including flowers and indoor plants. In the past, the Horticulture Club has won first and second prizes in this category.

"The Horticulture Club gains experience by putting together exhibits and contact with potential employers. They also have tremendous exposure in promoting K-State," Jennings said.

"It's the only event where every facet of horticulture is together at one time," Leuthold said.

TV that no officer would replace Noriega.

"He is going first," Col. Leonidas Macias said, referring to Delvalle.

"None of us wants the (Panamanian military) command, the commander stays, and we all stay. The president goes," Macias said.

Justines, also at the garrison, told television reporters: "We have been conversing with him (Delvalle) constantly, and he knows that our position has been that there is too much American interference in this Panamanian affair."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater issued a statement in Washington saying, "We understand that President Delvalle today dismissed Gen. Noriega from his position as commander of the Panama Defense Forces."

"At this time, we want to reiterate our unqualified support for civilian constitutional rule in Panama. There is but one legitimate sovereign authority in Panama and that is the Panamanian people exercising their democratic right to vote and elect their leadership in a free society."

Washington called for Noriega to resign after U.S. grand juries in Miami and Tampa, Fla., indicted him and others on drug trafficking charges on Feb. 5.

The U.S. indictments accuse Noriega of using his position as top military man to let Colombian drug traffickers utilize Panama as a base for smuggling cocaine and marijuana into the United States. The charges said Noriega received a healthy kickback from drug profits. His take was put at up to $4.8 million.

Pentagon spokeswoman Capt. Nancy LaLuntas said in Washington that the U.S. Southern Command in Panama received reports of scattered demonstrations in and around Panama City. She said the command issued a "Bravo" alert, which orders American military personnel and dependents to "decrease their visibility."

The command, initially created to protect the Panama Canal, has become the center for U.S. military operations in Latin America from fighting rebels to drug smugglers. There are 10,000 soldiers and 20,000 U.S. dependents in the command.

Delvalle said in a nationally broadcast message that he asked Noriega days ago to step down voluntarily so an investigation could begin of charges that he engaged in illicit activities. He said Noriega refused.

The president said, "There is no other alternative but the use of the powers that the constitution gives me, to separate Gen. Noriega from his high command and to encharge the leadership of the institution to the current chief of staff, Col. Marcos Justine."

After the speech, Col. Elias Castillo, chief of defense land transportation, declared, "All the chiefs of staff, all the middle commands, officers and classes and troops, support our Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega. He is the only commander of the Defense Forces."

Some drivers sounded the horns of their vehicles shortly after Delvalle made his announcement, and some groups could be seen waving white handkerchiefs. Both are signs of protest used by Noriega's opponents.

But an hour after the speech, the capital's streets were nearly deserted.

Panama has been rocked by protests since last June, when Noriega's recently retired second in command publicly charged the general with illicit activities ranging from drug trafficking to electoral fraud and the assassination of a political opponent.

The only campus reminder of the Vietnam War is an 18-inch bronze plaque dedicated to those who died in Vietnam. Memorial organizers say the plaque, which is located in the Union, is inadequate.

As an example, Arck cited Memorial Stadium and All Faiths Chapel, which are dedicated to those veterans who died in World War I and World War II and the Korean War, respectively.

Bush, Dukakis claim victories in Maine presidential caucuses

By The Associated Press

George Bush, claiming a solid victory Sunday in Maine's Republican presidential caucuses, was attacked by chief rival Bob Dole on the Iran-Contra affair, while Rep. Jack Kemp blasted the two GOP frontrunners on taxes.

Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis won the Maine Democratic caucuses, scoring another victory on his New England home turf, and Jesse Jackson scored a surprisingly strong second, followed by an uncommitted bloc.

"Today our message continued to shine," the Massachusetts governor said in a statement. "Today's victory gives our national campaign another push toward success on Super Tuesday."

The state Republican party provided no official count, but various campaigns agreed Bush, who makes his summer home in Maine, was far ahead, with former television evangelist Pat Robertson next, followed by the uncommitteds.

"I am delighted with what appears to be an overwhelming victory in the Maine caucuses, assuring my campaign of all 22 national delegates," Bush said from Washington.

The Maine caucuses pick delegates to the parties' state conventions this spring, where national convention delegates are chosen.

At a Republican debate in Atlanta — their first full-scale face-off of the Southern campaign — Dole took aim at Bush for the Reagan administration's decision to trade arms for hostages in the Iran-Contra affair. That, he said, was a big mistake.

"We never should trade arms for hostages. We shouldn't issue these reports and say we shouldn't trade arms for hostages — the vice president's report — and then later go to a meeting and say it's all right. We shouldn't do those things," Dole said, holding up a report on terrorism that was written by a presidential commission headed by Bush.

Bush did not respond directly, but did say "mistakes were made" in the Iran-Contra affair.

Kemp, whose campaign has been faltering after poor showings in early contests, accused Bush and Dole of supporting tax hikes.

"They sound alike. They talk alike. They've supported every single tax increase over the last eight years," the New York congressman said. "If they're nominated, the Reagan revolution is over, gone, dead."

Dole hit back, saying: "Jack's never met a deficit he didn't like." And Bush told the New York congressman, "You don't care about deficits. You never have, and they're public enemy No. 1."

The GOP contest was sponsored by the Atlanta Journal-Constitution newspapers, which organized a Democratic face-off on Saturday. There, Dukakis made stinging attacks on rivals Rep. Richard Gephardt and Sen. Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee.

Gore, who largely bypassed early contests in New Hampshire and Iowa, is pinning his hopes on a strong showing on Super Tuesday, March 8. On that day, 20 states, mostly in the South, will hold primaries or caucuses.

Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia, who disappointed many Democrats when he decided to sit out the presidential race, said Sunday he still hasn't decided whether to lend his backing to his fellow Southerner.

"I like Al Gore," Nunn said in an interview on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press." "I like what he says on national security."

But, he said, "I also like Dick Gephardt. ... I'm not ducking it. I just haven't decided who I'm going to vote for yet. I like Gore and I like Gephardt."

Gephardt and Dukakis, responsible for the sharpest sparring among the Democrats lately, were not expected for Sunday night's debate in Houston. The other four Democrats — Paul Simon, Gary Hart, Jesse Jackson and Gore — were to attend.

Dukakis campaigned Sunday from the deck of a fire boat in Baltimore's harbor, and pledged to make affordable housing a priority if elected. Maryland is one of the states voting on Super Tuesday.

Jackson, in Tampa, Fla., visited a crime-ridden neighborhood and decried the despair and frustration that has led to clashes between residents and police.

Jackson has pledged to raise the minimum wage, provide long-term health insurance for all Americans and to make fighting drugs his top priority.

Legislature studies rollbacks

Odometer tampering a problem

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

Odometer rollback. The problem is a major one in the state of Kansas, said Neil Woerman, chief of staff for Attorney General Bob Stephan.

There is action currently before the Kansas Legislature to determine how to achieve better control over odometer tampering, he said.

"The problem of odometer rollback is a major one in Kansas," Woerman said. "In 1983, there was no requirement to check the mileage of cars brought into Kansas, but now there is."

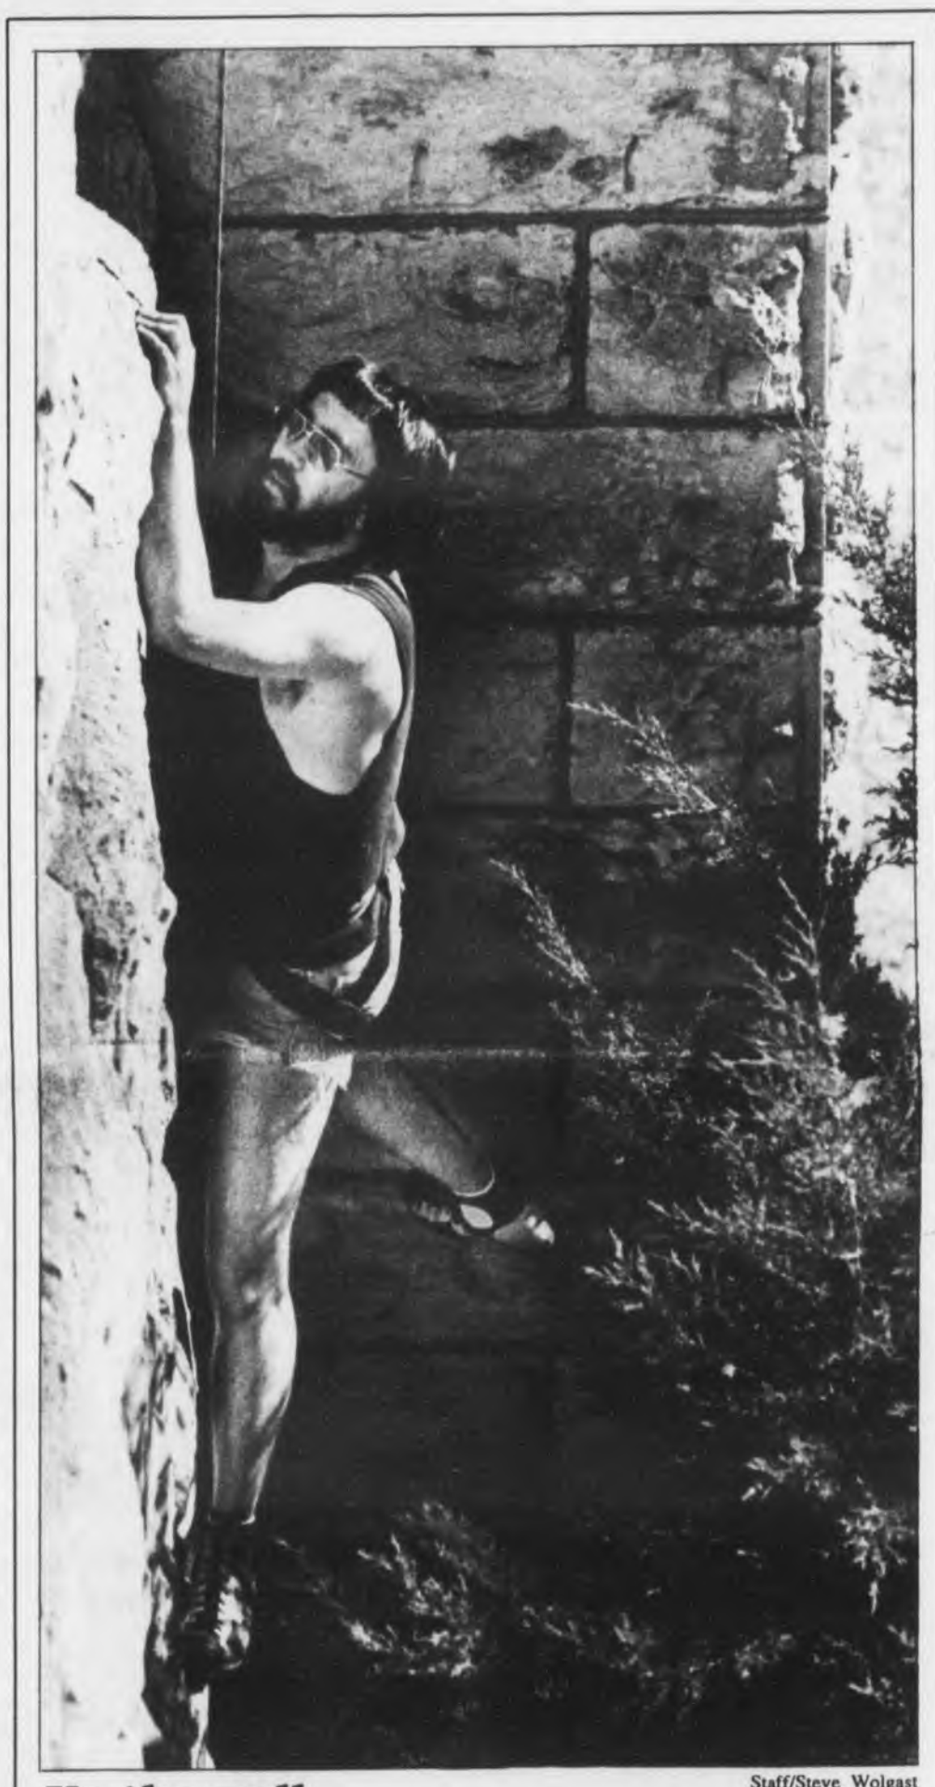
Woerman said the problem of odometer rollback usually originates outside of Kansas, when the odometers of used cars purchased at auctions are rolled back and then brought into Kansas for resale.

As a local man discovered during the past year, the problem of odometer rollback on vehicles is a very real one in the Manhattan area as well.

In March of 1987, Jake (not his real name), was advised by the Kansas Department of Revenue that the odometer on a used pickup he had bought from Dick Edwards Ford-Lincoln-Mercury Inc. may have been tampered with by either the previous owner, dealer or wholesaler.

Following an investigation by the Kansas attorney general's office, Jake received $950 in September from Dick Edwards dealership as restitution for a discrepancy found in the mileage reading on the vehicle and the title.

The attorney general's office had determined that the sale of the vehicle constituted a misrepresentation by Dick Edwards dealership and cited the Kansas Consumer Protection Act, which defines a violation as "the intentional failure to state a material fact, or the intentional concealment, suppression or omission of a material fact, whether or not any person has in fact been mislead."



The investigation was initiated as a result of a consumer complaint, Woerman said.

"There were unexplained differences in mileage recorded on the vehicle title at the time of acquisition by Dick Edwards Ford-Lincoln-Mercury Inc. and at the time of sale," he said.

Woerman said to the best of his knowledge, there had been no prior incidents of odometer tampering, nor had there been any since the incident, by the Dick Edwards dealership.

"We are pleased with the resolution in this matter," he said.

Unrest continues in Panama

Ousted president still in hiding

By The Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama — Deposed president Eric Arturo Delvalle stayed in hiding Sunday and defied Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, the military strongman who ousted him and ordered him out of the country.

The ex-president's whereabouts were a closely guarded secret, but family members said he was in a "safe and secure place" in Panama, in "good spirits" and determined to regain his job.

"I am going to stay here (and) stick it out," Delvalle told ABC television in a telephone interview Saturday night. "I'm going to fight it all the way."

Delvalle did not reveal his hiding place.

Roderick Esquivel, Delvalle's vice president, was also in hiding.

Both men were ousted early Friday in an action by the National Legislative Assembly orchestrated by Noriega, the Defense Forces chief.

Delvalle ignited the latest crisis in eight months of continuing civil unrest in Panama on Thursday when he tried to fire Noriega, who is charged in Florida with corruption and narcotics trafficking. The United States also has urged Noriega to step down as military chief.

On Friday, Delvalle returned to his home in an upper-class neighborhood. Police surrounded the house Friday evening and Delvalle's telephones were cut, leaving him incommunicado and under an undeclared house arrest.

Council undecided on ambassador

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The governing body of the Organization of American States sidestepped a position on political instability in Panama in an extraordinary session that showed the fragility of democracy in Latin America.

Members of the permanent council of the OAS adjourned nearly eight hours after being called into emergency session, unwilling to decide whether to permanently seat an ambassador favored by strong man Manuel Antonio Noriega or one picked by ousted President Eric Arturo Delvalle.

Most of the speakers who took part in an OAS debate Saturday night voiced support for Delvalle. Noriega's representative, Roberto Leyton, protested that the discussion violated the organization's charter. The permanent council was an inappropriate forum for an airing of his country's "internal affairs," he said.

Over the course of the session, the OAS ambassadors heard bitter recriminations about promises the Nicaraguan Sandinistas failed to keep, allegations the United States seeks to destabilize Panama, invocation of the name of the late Panamanian strong man Gen. Omar Torrijos, and questions about America reneging on its commitment in two 1979 treaties to completely transfer control of the Panama Canal to Panama by the turn of the century.

But the council failed to come to grips with the question of whether to recognize the portfolio of Leyton or Lawrence Chewning Fabrege, Delvalle's choice to sit on the council.

Symposium speakers say news reports may be inaccurate

By Robert Short
Collegian Reporter

News reports from Nicaragua and other foreign countries are often inaccurate or politically influenced, said speakers participating in a two-day international news symposium Friday and Saturday in the Union.

"There is a weakness at the core of electronic and print media," said Christopher Hitchens, international reporter and keynote speaker for the seminar.

The seminar, which was titled "International News: Fact or Fiction," included media representatives from all over the world speaking on the accuracy of topics currently being covered by U.S. newspapers.

The American mass media are an "inadequate filter" of the news reports they receive, especially from the Middle East, he said. Equal coverage time of both sides is often wrongly accepted as unbiased reporting, he said.

"There is no such thing as an unbiased reporter — just those willing to admit to it, and those who won't," Hitchens said.

He said there have been many situations in Israel, South Africa and Central America that were reported with certain facts withheld, or were not covered at all.

The Sandinista-Contra issue was used as an example during the seminar in examining the reliability of news stories from foreign countries.

The highlight of the symposium, which was sponsored by International Studies and the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications, was a panel discussion dealing specifically with the Central American issue. A pro-Contra adviser from Washington, D.C., a representative of the Sandinista government and two reporters who cover Central America participated in the discussion.

Manuel Cordero, minister counsel of the Nicaraguan embassy, said the Populist party leader resigns

ANKARA, Turkey — The leader of the main opposition Social Democrat Populist Party stepped down Sunday as party chairman, the Anatolia news agency said.

The agency said Erdal Inonu, son of the late President Ismet Inonu, did not give a reason for his resignation from the party post. He was elected chairman in May 1986.

Anatolia said that after Inonu announced his resignation, the party's secretary-general, Fikri Saglar, announced that he also would give up his post.

The agency said that Inonu told reporters that he also would resign as a member of Parliament. But Hikmet Cetin, deputy head of the party's parliamentary group, later announced that Inonu retracted that decision.

The Social Democrat Populist Party was formed in December 1985 by a merger of the Social Democratic Party and the Populist Party. It has 99 deputies in Turkey's 450-member Parliament.

Hippo attacks man in capital

NAIROBI, Kenya — Rampaging elephants trampled a man to death in southeastern Kenya, and a hippopotamus emerged from a sewage pond and attacked a bicyclist on the capital's outskirt, a newspaper said Sunday.

The elephants rampaged through Vuria village near the Tsavo National Park in southeastern Kenya, crushing to death 60-year-old John Mwakise, the Daily Nation said. It did not say how many elephants were in the Friday attack.

In Embakasi, on the capital's eastern edge near Nairobi National Park, a 35-year-old man riding by a sewage plant was bitten on the head, buttocks and thigh Thursday by a hippopotamus that emerged from the waste water, the paper said.

The man was reportedly hospitalized in serious condition.

Swaggart thanks followers

BATON ROUGE, La. — Television evangelist Jimmy Swaggart, who stepped down from his pulpit after allegations of immoral conduct with a prostitute erupted, thanked members of all religions Sunday for their support during "the darkest week" he has experienced.

During a brief appearance before his congregation at the Jimmy Swaggart World Ministries center, Swaggart thanked about 4,000 worshipers for their backing.

"I'll never have the words to express to you how much that I care, my concern, for you and my thanksgiving. If it hadn't been for you, we would not have made it. It's just that plain and simple," said Swaggart.

Payola reaches Kansas City

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The owner of Kansas City FM radio station KPRS says a station employee acknowledges accepting payment from a record company for consultant work, and that the employee's job is "in jeopardy."

"I do not condone any announcer having a contract representing any record company," KPRS owner Mildred Carter said Saturday. "I don't think you can serve two gods."

The station was mentioned in federal grand jury indictments Friday as having an employee who accepted cash in a payola scheme. The KPRS employee was not charged in the indictments.

Payola is the practice of giving or receiving payment for commercial advantage or special favors, such as disc jockeys accepting payment in return for playing certain records.

93-year-old killed in fire

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — A 93-year-old woman died in a basement fire in a home after her daughter and son-in-law were unable to rescue her, authorities said.

The body of Ninetta Cranshaw was found in a closet of a downstairs area where she lived in the home of her daughter and son-in-law.

A fire apparently broke out shortly before 9 p.m. Saturday when some kind of combustible material got too near an electric space heater, said fire department spokesman Dennis Cranor.

Cranor said the woman's daughter heard pounding in the basement and ran downstairs. She saw smoke pouring from her mother's room and called her husband, but the couple could not reach her, Cranor said.

The victim apparently died from smoke inhalation, Cranor said.

Hayden welcomes B-1 bomber

WICHITA — As about 200 people protested Sunday night outside Century II Auditorium, Gov. Mike Hayden welcomed the arrival of the controversial B-1B bomber to be stationed at nearby McConnell Air Force Base.

"As governor I take great pride in the tremendous Air Force base within our state's borders. It's long been one of our state's greatest resources," Hayden said.

More than 1,300 people attended the $25-a-plate, black-tie dinner sponsored by the chambers of commerce of Derby and Wichita to show support for the bomber program and the 384th Bombardment Wing.

"The people of Wichita, Sedgwick County and all of Kansas are extremely proud of McConnell and the role it plays in our national defense," Hayden said.

"The arrival of the B-1B brings a new spirit of excitement to the base, to the community and to the state. It gives us great confidence in our nation's strength and in its future."

Peace activists protested the arrival of nuclear weapons in Kansas, but their chants did not disrupt the program. The first words of master of ceremonies John M. Bell acknowledged the discord outside.

Meese included in spy case decisions

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — For nine months, the Justice Department has given the impression Attorney General Edwin Meese removed himself from the Pollard spy case. But now it acknowledges he was briefed twice about the case and says he never was excluded.

In what chief department spokesman Terry Eastland called a correction, he said Meese is only excluded from the espionage case against the Israeli Air Force officer who recruited Navy counterterrorism analyst Jonathan Pollard as a spy.

Meese is free to be briefed and even to make decisions in the still-open Pollard case to the extent that they don't involve the case against Israeli Brig. Gen. Aviem Sella, Eastland said.

Meese's own lawyer, Nathan Lewin, was unaware of that distinction as recently as last week even though it was Lewin's work for Meese and Sella in separate cases that triggered the exclusion, known as a recusal.

The turnabout comes as a government source said independent counsel James McKay is examining another Meese recusal for clues about his motives in dealing with a Mideast oil pipeline proposal in 1985.

Meese hired Lewin last May to represent him in McKay's investigation of whether the attorney general and his attorney, E. Robert Wallach, violated or conspired to violate a federal law barring bribes to foreign officials.

In May 1985, Meese was recused from all matters involving Wallach, but arranged for Wallach to meet National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane to promote the pipeline. Investigators say that examining that Meese recusal might help determine whether the attorney general was aiding Wallach's plan or, as Lewin argues, directing it to the proper official.

At the Office of Government Ethics last week, General Counsel Donald Campbell explained: "If you're a federal official and you've hired a law firm to represent you, you should recuse yourself, that is, take no action in any matter involving that firm — just as a matter of appearances even if you have no financial stake."

For that reason, Eastland said, Meese advised Justice officials last May: "I hereby recuse myself from participating in any matter before the department in which the law firm (of Miller, Cassidy, Larroca & Lewin) represents any party."

U.S., U.N. clash on PLO office

By The Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — The United States, its U.N. prestige and influence already at an all-time low, faces a showdown Monday when the General Assembly convenes an emergency session to condemn U.S. efforts to close the PLO mission.

Some Arab leaders say they want to shift the next General Assembly meeting to Geneva to punish the United States for harassing the Palestine Liberation Organization, which the United Nations recognizes.

The entire U.N. operation here, including the General Assembly, funnels $400 million to $700 million year into the U.S. and New York economies, according to the U.S. mission.

The 42nd General Assembly will reconvene for at least three days beginning Monday and consider two resolutions regarding the PLO mission.

One reaffirms the PLO's right to operate and calls on the United States to honor its treaty obligations, the other calls for a ruling by the International Court of Justice.

The move to shut the PLO mission comes as Secretary of State George P. Shultz is on a critical Middle East visit aimed at initiating Middle East peace talks and ending the 11-week Palestinian uprising in Israel's occupied territories.

State Department and United Nations lawyers say Congress' new anti-terrorist legislation, which would close the PLO's U.N. observer mission, is illegal and violates the 1947 Headquarters Agreement.

Former Attorney General Ramsey Clark, legal adviser to the PLO, told the Associated Press Saturday, "We assume the United States doesn't want to be an international outlaw and will, therefore, honor its obligations."

PLO Ambassador Zehdi Labib Terzi told the AP that the U.S. action against the PLO mission is harming Shultz' chances in the Middle East.

"The Palestinians are being killed in their own home, and this is an attempt to stifle their voice in the international community. This is not a message of peace, but a requiem," he said.

The anti-terrorist legislation, passed in December and effective March 22, has put the United States on a collision course with the 159-member world organization.

Before the PLO furor, the U.S. image already was tarnished by its failure to pay legally mandated U.N. budget dues of more than $252 million, its repeated siding with Israel and voting that often isolates Washington from the developing world.

U.S. Ambassador Vernon A. Walters told Congress last week that he was "not optimistic" about the outcome of the session. He said that if the United States continues to neglect its financial obligations to the United Nations, its opinions and policies will not carry their former weight.

Terzi, the PLO envoy, said the United States "has put itself on a collision course with the United Nations."

He said the U.S. action is a slap in the face to the United Nations and if the law is implemented it should be up to Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar to take action.

"If the United States doesn't want the United Nations here and wants to frustrate provisions of the agreement, then it is up to them," the PLO observer said.

The New York Times reported Saturday that Attorney General Edwin Meese III has decided to close the PLO mission despite objections from the State Department. It said an announcement was not expected until Shultz returns from the Middle East.

Court's ruling upholds right of free discussion

Wednesday's Supreme Court decision, which struck down a lower court's "emotional distress" award granted to the Rev. Jerry Falwell against Hustler magazine and publisher Larry Flynt, was welcome news to journalists, satirists, cartoonists and other "opinion makers."

For readers, the unanimous decision by the high court should also be welcome news because it further secures for them robust debate about public issues and about public figures who seek to shape the lives of private citizens.

Falwell's suit against Flynt stemmed from a parody, appearing in Hustler, of an ad purportedly quoting Falwell discussing an incestuous encounter with his mother in a Virginia outhouse and his habit of getting drunk before giving sermons. At the bottom of the ad appeared the words: "Parody ad — not to be taken seriously."

The lower court ruling stated that the ad wasn't libelous, but the "emotional distress" inflicted upon Falwell justified that $200,000 judgment against Flynt. With that ruling, the federal appeals court was leaving the whole issue of libel and its subsequent effects unresolved.

In essence, it was stating that a publication could be guilty of damaging an individual even though it didn't libel the person. The lower court's ruling had all the consistency of saying, "Well, you didn't break the law, but what you did sure wasn't nice."

Fortunately, the Supreme Court chose to put an end to that nonsense. Chief Justice William Rehnquist, in delivering the opinion for the court, wrote that the Hustler parody was "a distant cousin" to editorial cartoons which appear daily in newpapers and magazines across the nation.

But, Rehnquist wrote, outrageous commentary — like Hustler's parody ad or an editorial cartoon — relies on the subjective opinion of its creator for its cutting edge. To make outrageous commentary subject to a jury's judgment that it caused emotional distress would allow jurors to impose their taste or opinions on the tone and quality of public debate.

In short, satirists or cartoonists would have to shape their work to appease the tastes of the 12 people who might serve on juries in all possible suits brought against them. With their work gutted of its force and humor, satirists and cartoonists would no longer be able to "afflict the comfortable."

And harried readers, who have less and less time to interpret more and more information, would lose an opportunity for the succinct and entertaining evaluation provided to them by those who describe the world through biting comedic insight.

With its decision, the Supreme Court has ensured that debate of public issues will continue to be robust and at times even bruising. But it will also be informative.

Selling parking stalls will benefit only a few

As if the parking problem weren't bad enough at K-State, recent actions by the powers that be will almost certainly make it worse.

Those faculty and staff members who want to and can afford to pay $55 a semester — more than $100 a year — will have the privilege of a reserved parking stall.

A Faculty Senate parking committee recommended the change in policy for reserved stalls. In the past, only VIPs and those with handicapped or medical reasons were allowed reserved stalls.

About 110 reserved stalls have been sold already by the K-State Police, and up to 250 more are available upon request.

The purpose is to make K-State a better workplace for its employees. However, the logic behind the reserved parking stalls will more than likely create resentment rather than a better workplace.

What is even more insulting to the intelligence of the normal student or employee is that there wasn't an abundance of parking stalls to begin with. The latest actions indicate a callous disregard of a problem that is important to the whole University community, not just a few who can pay for that problem to go away.

If anything, the latest move is a step backward and perhaps shows to some how the University deals with a problem: not really solving it, but ultimately making it worse.

A puzzling sympathy

KKK incapable of 'dignified' discussion

Commentary

DAVE KINGSLEY
Guest Columnist

This column is a response to the statements of University of Kansas Chancellor Gene Budig, the Kansas State Collegian and all others who have been so dismayed by the decision to deny the Ku Klux Klan a forum at KU. An outburst of sympathy for a terrorist organization which has, for more than a century, attempted to exterminate the African-American community is somewhat puzzling to this writer.

Freedom of speech is not, by any stretch of the imagination, an absolute right in the United States. For example, a member of any organization which advocates violent overthrow of the U.S. government is denied the right to travel about in this country and encourage violence and mayhem in an attempt to drastically alter basic governmental institutions.

Individuals who belong to organizations that advocate armed insurrection are the only class of persons denied protection under equal employment opportunity statutes and civil service merit protection systems. As Justice Holmes stated when he was a member of the Supreme Court: "Freedom of speech does not give one the right to yell 'fire' in a crowded theater."

The question that arises and must be directed to Chancellor Budig, the Kansas State Collegian and the Manhattan Mercury is simply this: Would any member of any organization engaged in violent, terroristic acts be allowed to maintain employment in your institution? If not, then one must ask if the denial or termination of employment for violent political views would be, ipso facto, denial of freedom of speech.

The Collegian editorial stated that, " ... By not allowing the the scheduled appearances of the Klan members to take place, the officials involved have suppressed their views — and have weakened the educational process by limiting the exchange of ideas." Perhaps all of the editorial writers and KU leaders could explain how an exchange of views is carried out with members of an organization which has a very long history of lynching, mutilating, roasting alive and decapitating other human beings for no other reason than that they happen to have black skin.

When the Klaners haven't been involved in these odious activities, they have engaged in attempts to render Afro-Americans subhuman through the spread of foul racial hatred. Possibly the Collegian could also suggest how a nice dignified dialogue could be conducted concerning these matters.

The last paragraph of the Collegian editorial seems to imply that the right of black ministers to speak about their civil rights is equated somehow to the right of a church-bombing, murderous organization to spread hate on a college campus. It is sad to see how utterly insensitive white-dominated institutions have become in the late 1980s.

Dave Kingsley, who is currently a candidate for a doctoral degree in education, has taught political science at K-State and was employed as a program planner with the Midwest Sex and Race Desegregation Assistance Center before it closed Sept. 10, 1987.

When competing in athletics, fun is the name of the game

Commentary

MARK SCHREINER
Collegian Columnist

Two Saturdays ago, I played on a co-ed softball team in a winter tournament, and a fun time was had by all even though we lost all four of our games.

I take sports seriously. In grade school I was called Motormouth because I yelled at the other players so much. But winter softball is not for blood. Winter softball is for mud.

The field was a cow path. It had been muddy and many people stepped in it and then it froze, fossilizing their footprints. Runners could not run and fielders could not field, so we played for fun.

A fence stood 300 feet from home plate. It served only to make the males try to hit home runs and therefore fly out a lot. No home runs were hit the whole day.

After the game we went home to get warmer clothes. We discovered that sports is a good thing to talk about. The people at home asked who won, what was the score, do you need more players, can we get up a team for spring intramurals.

We do things so we can talk about them. Sure, we always have "How about Richmond?" and "When are you going to start cutting wheat?" but it is nice having questions that not just anybody can answer as well as anyone else.

We lost the second game 9-8.

We led 8-5 before the last inning. I was pitching and I walked a bunch of guys. I felt badly, but the team said only positive things. We said "Good catch," or "Nice throw" or, at least, "Good try" even if the person struck out. We said "Good eye" when all the person did was not swing at a pitch.

We overlooked dropped flies and bad throws while cheering for anyone who could just hit the ball. But answering a question in class is as hard as fielding a grounder. Getting across campus in five minutes is tougher than pitching a strike.

We all overlooked Mitch Richmond's mistake in the Missouri game when the team had tied the score but Richmond thought K-State was still behind and intentionally fouled Missouri and so took away any chance of K-State winning in overtime.

Nothing is magic about sports. We could overlook drivers who forget to signal their turns and profs who cannot return papers quickly.

We only let the nice things affect us in sports. If the K-State basketball team wins, we feel good and say, "WE won." If they lose we forget it and say, "THEY lost." We could do that for everything, not just sports.

After the second game we went back to eat lunch. While we ate, our driver's sister took his car with all our equipment in it without telling him.

We planned to borrow gloves and bats from our opponents if we did not find the car. They would have loaned them to us too. But we found the car five minutes before game time.

We lost the third game 13-4.

It did not matter because by then I knew the people on the team well enough that when I saw them on the sidewalk the next week I could say "Hi."

Softball is a great excuse. Someone gets a hit and the team cheers and yells the person's name. Then the person scores a run and goes through the team slapping hands and then you are joking and talking with someone you did not know before the game.

We lost the fourth game 13-8.

We were behind only 9-8 until I walked some more people. Teammates tried to help by yelling, "Throw strikes" or "She's not going to swing." Pitching was not as hard as keeping from yelling back, "Shut up, I'm trying." I wanted me to throw strikes more than they wanted me to throw strikes.

We did not mind losing except that it meant we would not reach the playoffs. We wanted to reach the playoffs because it meant we could play more games.

We decided to have fun and so we overlooked the failures while emphasizing the successes. But there is nothing magic about sports. We could decide to do that with anything at anytime.

Hayden disputes administration poll

By Robert Short
Collegian Reporter

A national poll ranking Gov. Mike Hayden's cabinet in the bottom ten in the nation for appointing women to cabinet positions was a misrepresentation of his administration, the governor's press secretary said.

"These numbers are deceiving. We were very proud of the effort to fill (cabinet) positions with qualified minorities," said Kathy Peterson, press secretary for the governor.

The poll was conducted by the National Women's Political Caucus for the purpose of promoting women in government positions, said Anita Merina, press secretary for the caucus. The organization is a non-profit, independant lobbying group based in Washington, D.C.

Merina said the caucus has its own political action committee, and supports women's issues in the congress.

Peterson was critical of the poll because it concentrated too much on one aspect of each administration, and because it compared administrations without acknowleging the differences between them.

Peterson said the percentages are deceiving to the public when a governor's cabinet with one woman member is compared to a cabinet that has 10 women.

"Each administration is unique; a governor's cabinet may have anywhere from 10 to 50 members," she said.

Merina said the poll represented the women that had been appointed to a cabinet level position within each governor's administration. A woman did not necessarily have to be a member of the governor's cabinet to be included in the poll, she said.

"This is the second year the poll has been taken. Our main goal has always been to get more women into elected and appointed offices," said Merina.

Hayden's Cabinet currently has one woman and one black serving on the nine-member cabinet.

Hayden made a conscious effort to place minorities in his Cabinet, she said.

"There is more to the story than to look at numbers. We have an awful lot of undersecretaries and department positions filled by women," Peterson said.

Peterson said she was not aware of any discrimination charges now or in the past made against Hayden.

The caucus has been critical of Congress in the past because of voting records demonstrating little support of issues the group backs, Merina said. The caucus supports the Equal Rights Amendment, and is active in many coalitions on women's issues, she said.

The caucus is currently conducting an outreach program to college-age women encouraging them to pursue a political career.

Blood drive response lower than expected

By The Collegian Staff

For the first time in seven years, the K-State blood drive did not meet its goal.

The drive, which has a goal of 1,400 units for the four days, netted 1,083 units.

Part of the problem could have been that the drive was Monday through Thursday instead of the usual Tuesday through Thursday, said Troy Millsap, co-chairman of the Bloodmobile and senior in education history.

"It's hard enough getting students out of bed on a Monday morning," he said. "They aren't thinking about giving blood on a Monday.

"Monday was pretty slow," he said. "We were 190 units short of our goal of 350 for the day." The number of units collected Tuesday was 266. On Wednesday, 281 units were received, and 377 units were collected Thursday.

Suzanne Malcolm, a registered nurse with the Red Cross in Wichita, said the K-State blood drive was the only one in the Wichita region last week.

The response from the K-State blood drive usually provides enough blood for the region to meet its needs for the week, she said.

However, Millsap said Malcolm didn't see any shortages because of the drop in donations.

Late steal seals K-State win, 59-58

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Saturday afternoon games in Ahearn Field House are starting to become an enigma for the Wildcats this season.

In an earlier Saturday afternoon clash Feb. 6 in "The Barn," K-State struggled to a 65-63 victory over Nebraska. Against Oklahoma State University Saturday in Ahearn, it took a steal in the closing seconds by reserve Mark Dobbins to seal a 59-58 win against the Cowboys.

After Mitch Richmond missed the front end of a one-and-one with eight seconds left, OSU guard Derrick Davis pushed the ball down the court and tried to work it into the hands of the Cowboys' freshman sensation, Richard Dumas. But a hustling Dobbins stepped into the passing lane and stole the ball.

"No one wants to be the one that gets scored on in the last play of the game, so I just busted my butt to get (into defensive position). I don't think (Davis) saw me. He just threw the ball," Dobbins said.

Davis said he didn't know Dobbins was there.

"It wasn't a play. Coach told us that if (Richmond) missed, get the ball, push it down the court and try to get the last shot. Then I saw Richard (Dumas) come toward me and tried to get the ball to him. I don't know where (Dobbins) came from," Davis said. "I should have thrown a lob."

After Steve Henson's two free throws put the 'Cats up by three, 59-56, with 19 seconds remaining, Davis put Oklahoma State in a position to win by hitting an outside shot from just inside the three-point line with nine seconds left, pulling the Cowboys to within one, 59-58.

Davis thought it was a three-pointer. OSU coach Leonard Hamilton didn't have much to say about the call.

"What I think doesn't make a difference. If the referee says it was two, then it was two," he said.

With the win K-State, 18-7 and 9-3, clinched at least a tie for second place in the Big Eight.

"I think everyone wants to win the championship, but I think realistically we would have taken this position and been tickled to death," Kruger said.

K-State built a 32-24 lead just more than two minutes into the second half, but scored just 16 points during the next 12 minutes. Oklahoma State had a 51-48 lead with 4:50 left.

"Things didn't really click well for us," senior center Ron Meyer said. "I remember thinking to myself with about five minutes left, 'Why are we in this situation?'"

The senior forward scored 10 of his team-high 18 points in the closing minutes, and gave the 'Cats the lead for good after a steal and ensuing layup put K-State up by one. Except for that stretch, though, Richmond was struggling. He shot 7-15 from the field and had five turnovers.

"It isn't anything alarming, but he's had a stretch of three or four games where the shots are not falling for him," K-State coach Lon Kruger said.

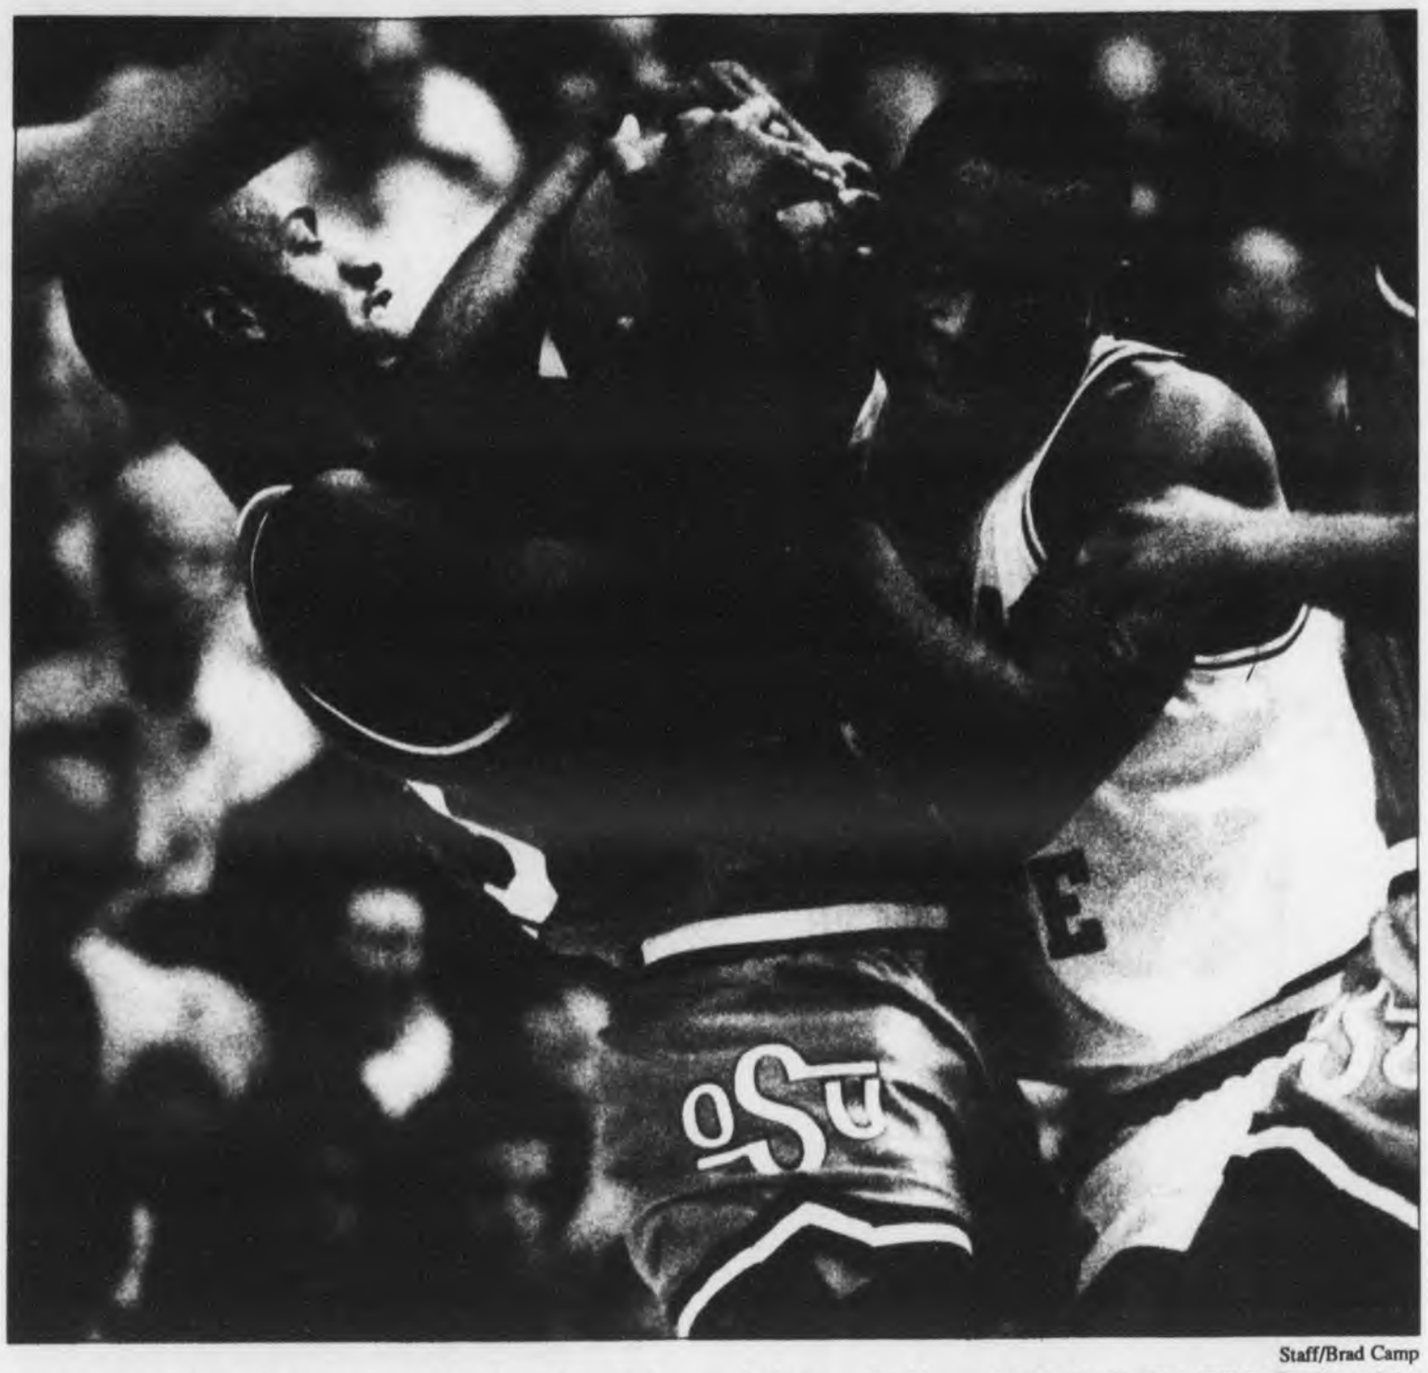
"We're still winning, so it's not bothering me too much," Richmond said.

Meyer said Richmond's play affects the whole team.

"Mitch is a major part of our offense. Every play we run deals with getting Mitch a shot or him getting us a shot. I think a lot of the shots he normally hits just aren't falling. It's hard to see him going through something like that," Meyer said.

OSU, 13-13 overall and 4-8 in the Big Eight Conference, outrebounded K-State 26-23. Paced by John Stark's eight first-half points — the senior forward led the Cowboys with 18 — Oklahoma State trailed by just two at the intermission.

K-State had a seven-point lead with 3:38 remaining in the first stanza, but Dumas scored six of his 13 points in the closing minutes of the half to keep OSU close.



"We were probably the only people here expecting us to have a chance to win," Hamilton said.

NOTES...K-State's games this week include a trip to Nebraska Wednesday and a match up at Ahearn with Missouri Saturday. Oklahoma State plays Iowa State at home Wednesday, then travels to Kansas Saturday.

Big Eight plot thickening as season winds down

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Since upsetting Nevada-Las Vegas two weeks ago and climbing into the Top 20 rankings, Missouri has played like anything but an NCAA tournament-bound team.

Missouri is 1-3 since surprising UNLV, and what appeared to be a certain NCAA tournament bid now seems uncertain. The Tigers stand 17-8 overall, 6-6 in the Big Eight, after losing 82-77 to Kansas Saturday, snapping their home-court victory string at 22 games.

The Tigers, ranked 15th and likely to tumble lower in the next poll, have remaining games with Oklahoma and K-State, then play in the conference tournament at Kemper Arena in Kansas City in two weeks.

"I don't think about the NCAA," Missouri Coach Norm Stewart said after the loss to Kansas, before a record Hearnes Center crowd of 13,610. "I'm thinking about Oklahoma. If a team plays hard all year, and does the best it can, it will be selected."

The Tigers couldn't stop Kansas' senior center Danny Manning, who scored 37 points, including nine in a 20-0 spurt in the first half that put Missouri in a hole it never could crawl out of.

"People have been talking about Danny having an off year, but this is his best year ever," Kansas Coach Larry Brown said. "All you've got to do is look out there and see."

In other games Saturday, Oklahoma routed Colorado 134-84 in Norman, K-State edged Oklahoma State 59-58 in Manhattan and Iowa State edged Nebraska 85-84 in Lincoln.

The Jayhawks' victory concluded what Brown dubbed the "Death March" — consecutive games against K-State, Duke, Oklahoma and Missouri. It also brightened Kansas' chances of getting an NCAA tournament bid. The Jayhawks moved to 18-10 overall, 7-5 in the Big Eight.

Manning scored 23 points in the first half, hitting 9-of-11 field goals, as Kansas opened up a 38-29 halftime lead. Several Tigers tried in vain to guard the 6-foot-10 Manning, including 7-1 Gary Leonard.

"There's not a whole lot you can do with him," Leonard said. "He's got a really good spin for a big man. We tried to contain him as much as we could, but he's going to get his points. You've got to give him that."

Derrick Chievous led Missouri with 20 points.

The high-powered, fourth-ranked Sooners won their 12th straight game, ran their record to 26-2 (11-1 in the league) and tied or broke several conference offensive records against Colorado.

"If they don't have Final Four written all over them, then I don't know who does," Buffs Coach Tom Miller said. "Oklahoma is the most explosive team I have ever seen."

Stacey King led the way with 29 points and Harvey Grant had 27. King also blocked seven shots to become the Big Eight's single-season record holder with 86, four more than former Sooner Wayman Tisdale had in the 1982-83 season.

"It meant a lot to me because Wayman was a great player, and there's not too many people who can say they blocked 80 shots in a season," said King, who had five blocks in the opening 11 minutes.

Oklahoma's 134 points were the most ever scored in a Big Eight came, breaking the previous high of 133 the Sooners scored against Nebraska last year. The Sooners clinched at least a tie for the league title with the victory.

Scott Wilke led Colorado, 7-18 and 3-9, with 23 points and set a school record with his 45th consecutive double-figure game.

Mike Born hit one of two free throws with 13 seconds remaining to lift Iowa State past Nebraska for the Cyclones' first road victory in the conference. They improved to 18-10 and 4-8.

Henry Buchanan missed a last-second shot for Nebraska, 13-15 and 4-8.

Track teams place 4th, 6th

From Staff and Wire Reports

The Big Eight Indoor Championships were held in Lincoln, Neb., this weekend with the host team Nebraska taking both the men's and women's titles.

K-State's squads finished fourth in the men's division, while the women placed a disappointing sixth.

The Nebraska men won a close race with Iowa State, as they outdistanced them in the team totals 114 ⅗ to 96 ⅓. On the other side of the coin, the Nebraska women dominated the meet, taking seven first-place finishes.

For K-State, All-American Kenny Harrison took two more titles in the long and triple jumps to bring his total of Big Eight titles to 14. Harrison posted a conference record jump in the long jump with a leap of 26¾ Friday. That performance set the track record, was a national qualifying mark and an Olympic trials qualifying mark. His triple jump mark of 54-5¼ gave him his fourth title in that indoor event.

Jeff Reynolds also contributed to K-State's cause, claiming the 600-meter dash championship with a time of 1:09.97. The men finished with 69 points for their fourth place finish.

"I thought the men competed real well," Coach John Capriotti said.

In the women's division, K-State got just one first-place finish, as Kim Kilpatrick won the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 7.89. That time qualified her for the national meet.

"We just had too many things go wrong," Capriotti said. "We just couldn't afford to lose as many as we did and expect to do better."

The team victories for Nebraska were the men's second straight and the women's ninth straight.

Plans in the making to honor last game

Svoboda on Sports

DAVID SVOBODA
Sports Columnist

The best ideas are often those you beg, borrow or steal from someone else.

Thus, with no claim here as to this being my own idea, I'd like to propose that we, as K-State basketball fans, do something special this week to pay tribute to a building that has come to mean so much to us down through the years.

The K-State men's basketball team will play its final game in Ahearn Field House against Missouri Saturday, ending 38 years of legalized madness in a place that, to many of us, has become all but a second home.

After several weeks of thinking of how we might best say thanks to a building (that in itself is a rather odd idea), one of my fraternity brothers came to me and said: "Why don't you suggest in your column that everyone put a candle in the window of his room on the night before the game? We could have a candle light vigil."

Not a bad idea by itself, but one I'd like to add to a bit. Why don't we do just that and a bit more. Here's the plan:

■ On Wednesday night, following the return of the team and fans from the game at the University of Nebraska, let's set up tents outside the building one last time. Tents outside Ahearn are a major part of the mystique of the building.

It might be a bit colder during the coming week than it was over the past weekend, but three nights outside in what could be rather nice weather is a small price to pay for what could be a great deal of fun.

■ On Friday afternoon outside the Union or in front of the field house, let's make big signs for use at the game Saturday to let those looking in on regional television know how much Ahearn means to each one of us.

Let's have so many signs at the game Saturday that the fans watching at home don't see any of the railings between sections of the stands.

■ On Friday night, let's have candles in the windows of every apartment, residence hall room, fraternity or sorority room or wherever K-State fans reside. Those of us at Ahearn will have candles of our own, to be sure.

Let's show Missouri fans what class is all about. The Antlers — Missouri's rowdy group of student fans — pounded on doors of hotel rooms and shouted obscene things at players when Iowa State visited Columbia earlier this year. What a lack of class.

Candles in windows and tents all over Manhattan would be the epitome of class.

■ Finally, let's be at Ahearn early Saturday, with signs in hand, ready to make so much noise the building shakes. Let's get Ahearn "rockin' one last time" and root the Wildcats on to victory against the Tigers.

Let's be clean in our cheers and louder than anyone would ever have imagined we could be. The building and our team deserve at least that much.

I hope these ideas — though they might sound a tad bit corny to some of you — might bring a few of you out with me on Wednesday night at Ahearn's "tent city". Who knows, maybe the athletic department and some area businesses will get involved as well and make this Wednesday through Saturday four days we can remember forever.

Regardless, let's make Saturday something special for a place that has given us so many special memories.

Wildcats win twinbill Saturday, split Sunday

Baseball team opens successfully

By Russ Ewy
Sports Writer

K-State began its 87th baseball season successfully this weekend, sweeping a double-header from Friends University Saturday, 22-2 and 7-1. The 'Cats split their Sunday double-header with Missouri Western, winning the first game, 13-1, and dropping the second, 5-3.

"I thought we played pretty well for our first time out," Coach Mike Clark said. "I'm happy with the offense. We hit the ball really well. The top of (K-State's) order can put some pressure on you."

The 'Cats put Saturday's first game away early, scoring 10 runs in the first inning. The big blow was a three-run double by third baseman Jim Donohue. K-State banged out a total of 18 hits in the contest and recieved help from seven Falcon errors.

Centerfielder Kent Gleason had three hits, including a two-run homer. Left fielder Kris Meis also slammed a solo shot. Shortstop Scott Spangenberg pounded out three hits, while Sean Collins, Tony Braddock and Gleason all scored three runs.

Darryl Rowley, who pitched five innnings, was the winning pitcher. He allowed six hits and three walks, but pitched 10 strike outs.

In game two Saturday, K-State again struck early, scoring three runs in the first inning. Collins and Braddock reached base and scored on a double by Mike Rosenboom.

Gleason, who was 4-for-6 on the day, again led the offense with two hits.

The pitching victory went to Bill Schafer, who went the distance. He allowed just four hits and two walks while striking out four.

The 'Cats continued to pound out the runs Sunday in the first game of the doubleheader with Missouri Western, but couldn't quite make up the difference in game two.

Rosenbloom led K-State in the first game Sunday, going 2-2 from the plate with five RBI's. Jeff Hulse also had a fine game, going 3-4, with 3 RBI's.

Lady Cats fall in OSU matchup

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

Oklahoma State's women's basketball team had 10 players score — two more players than were dressed out to play for K-State — in Saturday's 73-54 victory over the Lady Cats in Ahearn Field House.

Only eight Lady Cats were in uniform for the matchup with OSU, as Kristie Bahner is still battling mononucleosis and Janet Madsen has a hyperextended knee. Neither player is expected back before the Big Eight Conference Tournament this weekend in Salina.

"The fact we can take the floor with the eight players we had, and do without two people who are averaging 18 points a game for us, makes me very proud of our team," K-State coach Matilda Mossman said. "I'm still proud of our effort even though we lost.

"We are out two of our starters and we're expecting somebody else who has only been getting four or five points a game to all of a sudden get in double figures," she added. "And that is too much to expect."

With the loss, K-State dropped to 8-19 overall and 1-13 in Big Eight play. The Cowgirls climbed to 17-10 and 7-7.

Shooting percentages revealed much of the story behind the game. Oklahoma State outshot K-State 47 percent to 40 perecnt in the first half. And things worsened for the Lady Cats in the second half, as they shot a dismal 29 percent, compared to OSU's 46 percent. For the game, the Cowgirls shot 46 percent from the

'Fixing mess' theme of U.S. plans for '92

By The Associated Press

CALGARY, Alberta — In the wake of one of the United States' worst Winter Olympics, American athletes are looking dubiously at George Steinbrenner's plans to fix the mess.

The New York Yankees boss won't find it as easy as firing a manager or swinging a trade, they say, and he might even have his priorities backward.

One area where he may be able to help, everyone agrees, is in finance. Money can't buy love, happiness or Italy's Alberto Tomba, but a lot more hard cash can go a long way to ending America's Olympic woes.

Officials and athletes say it will take millions and a wholly revamped training program to put U.S. Olympic athletes on the same level with their top rivals.

There is considerable debate, though, about how the money can be raised, how it should be spent and whether the United States ought to put as much emphasis on winning in the Olympics as the leading medalists — the Soviet Union and East Germany.

However, by any measure the U.S. team had a feeble showing this year and everyone feels the time has come to act.

No American team in the Winter Olympics ever won fewer medals relative to the total number awarded. Of the 138 medals available, Americans won six. In the first Winter Games in 1924, Americans won four of the 43 medals awarded. In 1928, they won six of 41; in 1936 four of 51; in 1964 six of 102.

No U.S. Alpine skier won a medal. Only twice before, in 1956 and 1968, were Americans snowed out on the slopes since the current type of downhill and slalom began in 1948.

The U.S. hockey team failed to reach the medal round for the second consecutive Olympics and wound up seventh.

There were wonderful moments of triumph, of course, and great efforts in losing causes.

Brian Boitano skated beautifully in winning the gold in men's figure skating. Bonnie Blair sparkled as the gold medalist in women's 500-meter speed skating and the bronze medalist in the 1,000.

Eric Flaim won a silver in the 1,500, Debi Thomas took the bronze in women's figure skating and pairs skaters Jill Watson and Peter Oppegard also captured a bronze. Bobsledders missed a bronze Sunday by just two-hundredths of a second.

Dan Jansen fell down twice in speed skating, never finished a race after years of training, but won over a nation that admired his courage in trying despite the trauma of his sister's death.

"Sometimes I think it gets a little carried away with the medal counts," Jansen said. "It's just everybody doing their best and that's all the public and press can ask of us."

Steinbrenner, named by the U.S. Olympic Committee to head a panel to find ways of improving American fortunes in the Summer and Winter Games, said "the bottom line" is the medal count.

Many athletes disagree.

"I don't think, really, the bottom line is medals," Blair said. "It's great if you're able to come away with them, but there are so few people that are able to achieve that goal."

Reaching one's personal best in an event is just as important, she said.

Lane MacDonald, one of the top U.S. hockey players who gave the gold medal-winning Soviets their toughest game, dismisses doom-and-gloom talk about the state of the U.S. Olympic effort.

"Each country goes through good cycles and bad cycles," he said. "In 1980, we won a lot of gold medals. This year we're down a little."

The USOC budget for the four-year period ending Dec. 31, 1988, was $140 million, or $35 million a year. The projected budget for the next four years is $200 million, "and that's not enough," said Robert H. Helmick, president of the USOC.

"We could use at least double what we have," he said. "We need to build certain training facilities and revamp some programs."

P.E. requirement evaluated

By The Collegian Staff

Although the core University requirements are being evaluated by Faculty Senate, the chances of the physical education credit being dropped is unlikely.

The course — Concepts of Physical Education — is important, said Larry Noble, head of the Department of Physical Education and Leisure Studies.

It teaches students the concepts of keeping the human body running, instead of teaching exercises, he said.

"We want to affect attitudes and lifestyle habits (along with) arming the student with facts," Noble said.

There is also a nationwide movement of developing knowledge and concepts for taking of the human body, he said, and, the need for this change can be seen by looking at children.

"Children of our graduates are fatter than ever before," Noble said.

Education and understanding are the solutions to the problem. Teaching the concepts to students allows them to use the knowledge they gain from the course in their personal life, Noble said.

The requirement has been reviewed twice in the past five years to ensure that it is in line with the University's peer institutions' requirements.

Both times it has been considered acceptable, said Miriam Satern, assistant professor in dance and leisure studies.

Some of the students who have worked for the military and are in the class complain that they have participated in similar exercises in the military and know how to stay in shape, Satern said.

"They may be in good shape, but they have had others structuring for them. We want them to be their own coach and leader," he said.

The course originated as one "based on military defense and motives," said Noble. The two-semester course was required, but not given credit.

Activist, comedian to perform tonight

By Brad Atchison
Collegian Reviewer

Tonight singer, comedian and political activist Dave Lippman will offer a blend of humor, music and politics when he performs in the Union Catskeller.

Lippman is from California and is currently on a nationwide tour. His performance at 8 p.m. in the Catskeller is being sponsored by K-State's chapter of Students in Solidarity with Central America (SISCA).

Paige Nichols, junior in English and member of SISCA, was in the audience when Lippman made his fall appearance in Manhattan.

"We are very excited to have Dave Lippman back," Nichols said. "We didn't know what to expect from him when he played for us in the fall, but he put on a great show. I am sure that everyone who saw his first show will jump at the chance to see him again."

Dave Lippman's show is divided into two parts. The first features Lippman's alter ego, "George Schrub," of the CIA (Committee to Intervene Anywhere). "Schrub" is Lippman's arch-nemisis, who bills himself as anti-folksinger (Peter, Paul and Mary's worst nightmare come to life).

Schrub is a parody of "Reagan Rhetoric" and U.S. foreign policy.

The personality of George Schrub is created as well as conveyed through Lippman's use of monologues mixed with songs of political satire.

Bringing in David Lippman is the latest of several activities SISCA has sponsored to raise public awareness of the current U.S. intervention in Central America. Some of Lippman's material has been motivated by several personal visits to Central America.

"Lippman's show is very funny, but he is not just saying 'here is the world, let's laugh at it,' Nichols said. He is saying 'here is the world, let's try to make it better.'"

Study shows why people don't help

By Victoria Ohmacht
Collegian Reporter

Second-graders are often as insightful as college students in their responses to a study on why people don't help others, said Mark Barnett, professor of psychology.

In a research project that began in 1986, Barnett and two undergraduate students asked 140 elementary-age through college-age students to describe and explain five situations where the students would not help others.

Responses became more varied and sophisticated as the students' ages increased, but Barnett said even young subjects easily produced "subtle, insightful" answers that helped him identify 10 "not helping" categories from the interviews.

These responses ranged from risk or cost to self ("I wouldn't help Daddy fix the car because I might get cut up or hurt") to a lack of desire to help ("I wouldn't help somebody if I had something more important to do").

Barnett said he found age-related differences between the younger and older students. Younger people more frequently used the category of "perceived self-incompetence" as a reason for not helping.

For example, respondents said, "I wouldn't help my dad fix a flat tire because I don't know what to do" and "I wouldn't help if someone were drowning because I can't swim."

High school and college students tended to cite a desire not to violate their own values or interfere in another's personal situation. Responses included "I wouldn't help someone do something that I think is wrong," and "I wouldn't help make a decision for an unwed mother because it's her life."

Although differences by sex were examined in the study, male and female responses to the questions were found to be similar in all age categories, Barnett said.

Second-, fourth- and sixth-grade students from Manhattan's Eugene Field Elementary School and Westmoreland Elementary School were included in the study, as well as students from Manhattan High School and K-State.

The study was published in the recent edition of the "Journal of Genetic Psychology."

Barnett said he decided to conduct research in the area of "not helping" after years of reviewing literature that focused on "helping" behaviors.

"It occurred to me that a lot of the time we choose not to help, or we simply don't help, and we don't know very much about why we don't help," he said. Mark Thompson and Jane Schroff, both 1985 graduates, assisted Barnett in the study.

Barnett said he believes the study is the first of its kind to use the open-ended methodology to assess developmental differences in reasons for not helping.

Even young children "decide not to help sometimes, and they can tell us pretty easily when and why they decide not to help," he said. "People think about 'not helping' (as opposed to 'helping') more than studies suggest they do."

U.S. Catholics told to pay Vatican debt

By The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Roman Catholic Bishop Donald Wuerl says U.S. Catholics should help pay the Vatican's $56.7 million operating deficit.

Wuerl, named head of the Diocese of Pittsburgh on Feb. 12, said the deficit was created when Pope John Paul II "raised salaries substantially" to help employees keep up with the cost of living.

"How do we pay for this?" he said Friday. "In the past we have always said to the pope, "Good Luck."'

Details of the 1986 deficit were made public at the insistence of U.S. bishops. Wuerl said the bishops told Vatican officials that Americans must "see balance sheets" before they would help pay.

The bishop also said the Vatican's administration costs have increased considerably since 1965, when reforms by the Second Vatican Council added commissions, secretariats and other boards. Church officials also have increased their missionary work, he said.

Students present research results

By The Collegian Staff

Crayfish, the Konza prairie and DNA were a few of the topics discussed at the 14th Annual Forum for Student Research Saturday morning in the Union Big Eight Room.

Thirteen graduate students and one undergraduate student presented the results of their on-going research. The forum, sponsored by the Division of Biology, was attended by about 100 people.

The forum was a showcase of the quality research that is being conducted in the department, said Jim Guikema, professor of biology and co-chairman of the graduate affairs committee.

"The students can formally present their research findings to the faculty," he said. "This is a place where they can really strut their stuff."

The students participated in the forum on a voluntary basis, Guikema said.

The forum allows students to have professors critique their work and gain experience in presenting research.

Task force evaluates athletic ticket sales

By The Collegian Staff

A student task force on the sale of athletic tickets met Sunday evening to review various ticket sales policies of Big Eight Conference schools, but efforts to come up with a specific policy will be delayed until a seating plan is developed for the new Fred Bramlage Coliseum.

Dave Whetstone, chairman of the task force, said one possibility the group will be considering is that of a combined ticket package, where students would pay one lump sum for both football and basketball tickets. The problem, he said, will be the student who may want tickets for basketball but not for football.

Another aspect of ticket sales policies the task force is considering is the possibility of a lottery-type selection rather than a first-come, first-serve method where the students usually 'camp out' to get a good place in line. General admission vs. reserved student sections policies are a consideration of the task force as well.

However, nothing can be decided until the coliseum planners decide on a seating plan and how many "chair-backs" will be installed. Until then, the task force will have no idea what will be designated as student seating sections and cannot accordingly develop a ticket sales policy.

Carol Adolph, ticket manager for the athletic department, said the department has not yet seen a seating plan, but hopes to have one in several weeks.

"It's very strange they do not have a seating plan," she said. "We have alumni concerned about seating arrangements — along with students and faculty."

The task force will meet again at 5:30 p.m. Thursday in the SGS office. One of the main topics of discussion will be the ICAT organization and the athletic department's opinion of that subject.

problems with media coverage of Nicaragua are poor reporting and television's condensation of the news. Sandinista responses to distorted Contra news accounts often go unreported, he said.

"Nicaragua has been given the image of an aggressive country in Central America, threatening the security of the United States," he said.

Cresencio Arcos Jr., White House coordinator for public diplomacy on Central America, said the problem is in distinguishing stories that the Sandinistas call inaccurate from ones that they simply do not like.

All viewpoints are reported in different media, but not everyone gets represented on the front page of a major newspaper, he said.

Andrew Selsky, former Associated Press reporter in Nicaragua and Honduras, criticized Cordero for his claim that Nicaragua isn't covered fairly by the American press. Selsky said he knew of several instances where the Nicaraguan government had released false stories and expected to see them in print.

Selsky said problems of distortion also occur when many short clips of news out of context are sent out of Central America. Since people do not have the background necessary to understand the stories, they get a distorted view of the news, he said.

June Erlick, reporter for Time and The Miami Herald, attributed many of the problems in news reporting in Central America to the inaccessibility of many areas in Nicaragua and the three- to four-day wait for official news releases from government sources.

Other topics covered during the symposium included a discussion of who and what are considered the controllers of the news sources from around the world. Also discusssed was the formation of The New World Information Order, a news service created and controlled by Third World countries.

Rollback

Gary Seley, business manager for the dealership, said, "It was a plain old mistake. When you run as many cars through here as we do, there is the potential for an error.

"The front side of the title read 14,620 miles and the back side read 27,193 miles. When we accepted the truck in, we should have checked closer," he said. "We are extremely careful not to sell a car we know has been messed with. We don't buy them, and we don't sell them."

No criminal or civil action has been filed against the Edwards dealership regarding odometer tampering.

A federal law exists to protect car buyers from the practice of concealing a car's true mileage by turning back or disconnecting the odometer.

The law prohibits odometer tampering and requires anyone selling a motor vehicle to disclose the accuracy of its odometer reading. The law also provides for action to be taken against violaters.

The following is a rundown of information published by the U.S. Department of Transportation on the subject of odometer rollback.

Requirements of the law

The seller must provide the buyer, at the time of the sale, a written statement of the registered mileage, to include:

- Odometer reading at the time of transfer.
- Date of transfer.
- Seller's name, address and signature.
- Make, body type, year, model and vehicle identification number.
- A statement certifying that the seller is complying with the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act of 1972.
- A statement indicating the odometer reflects actual mileage driven or that the odometer is not accurate (it must also state whether the odometer has passed 100,000 miles).

Prohibitions under the law

- Disconnecting or resetting the odometer with intent to change the mileage reading.
- Operating a vehicle with a nonfunctional odometer with intent to defraud.
- Advertising, selling, using or installing a device which causes an odometer to register incorrectly.
- Knowingly falsifying the written odometer statement.
- Removing the notice attached to the left door frame attached at the time of any odometer service.
- A dealer or distributor from accepting an incomplete odometer statement.

Recognizing alterations

- Check the vehicle for evidence of tampering — marks on the odometer, misaligned numbers, oil stickers, inspection stickers or tire warranty cards that can provide clues to the car's actual mileage.
- Check for disclosure statements from previous owners, kept on file with the dealer for four years — a law since March 9, 1978.
- Try to contact former owners if a resident of your state. The department of motor vehicles should have names and addresses.

Victim retaliation

Victims of odometer tampering can sue the seller in either state or federal court. Courts can award $1,500 or three times the amount of damages, plus court and reasonable attorney's fees.

The state attorney general can bring civil actions on behalf of consumers. The federal government can impose both civil and criminal penalties on violaters.

field and K-State hit for 33 percent.

Things were just as bad from the free throw line. The Cowgirls, who are shooting only 66 percent from the charity stripe as a team for the year, hit perfection with a 10-10 performance from the line. K-State, which also is shooting 66 percent from the line, connected on only 9-of-17 attempts for 53 percent.

"Oklahoma State shot the ball extremely well," Mossman said. "They took us out of our zone defense early. We felt like really that was the only way we could defend them."

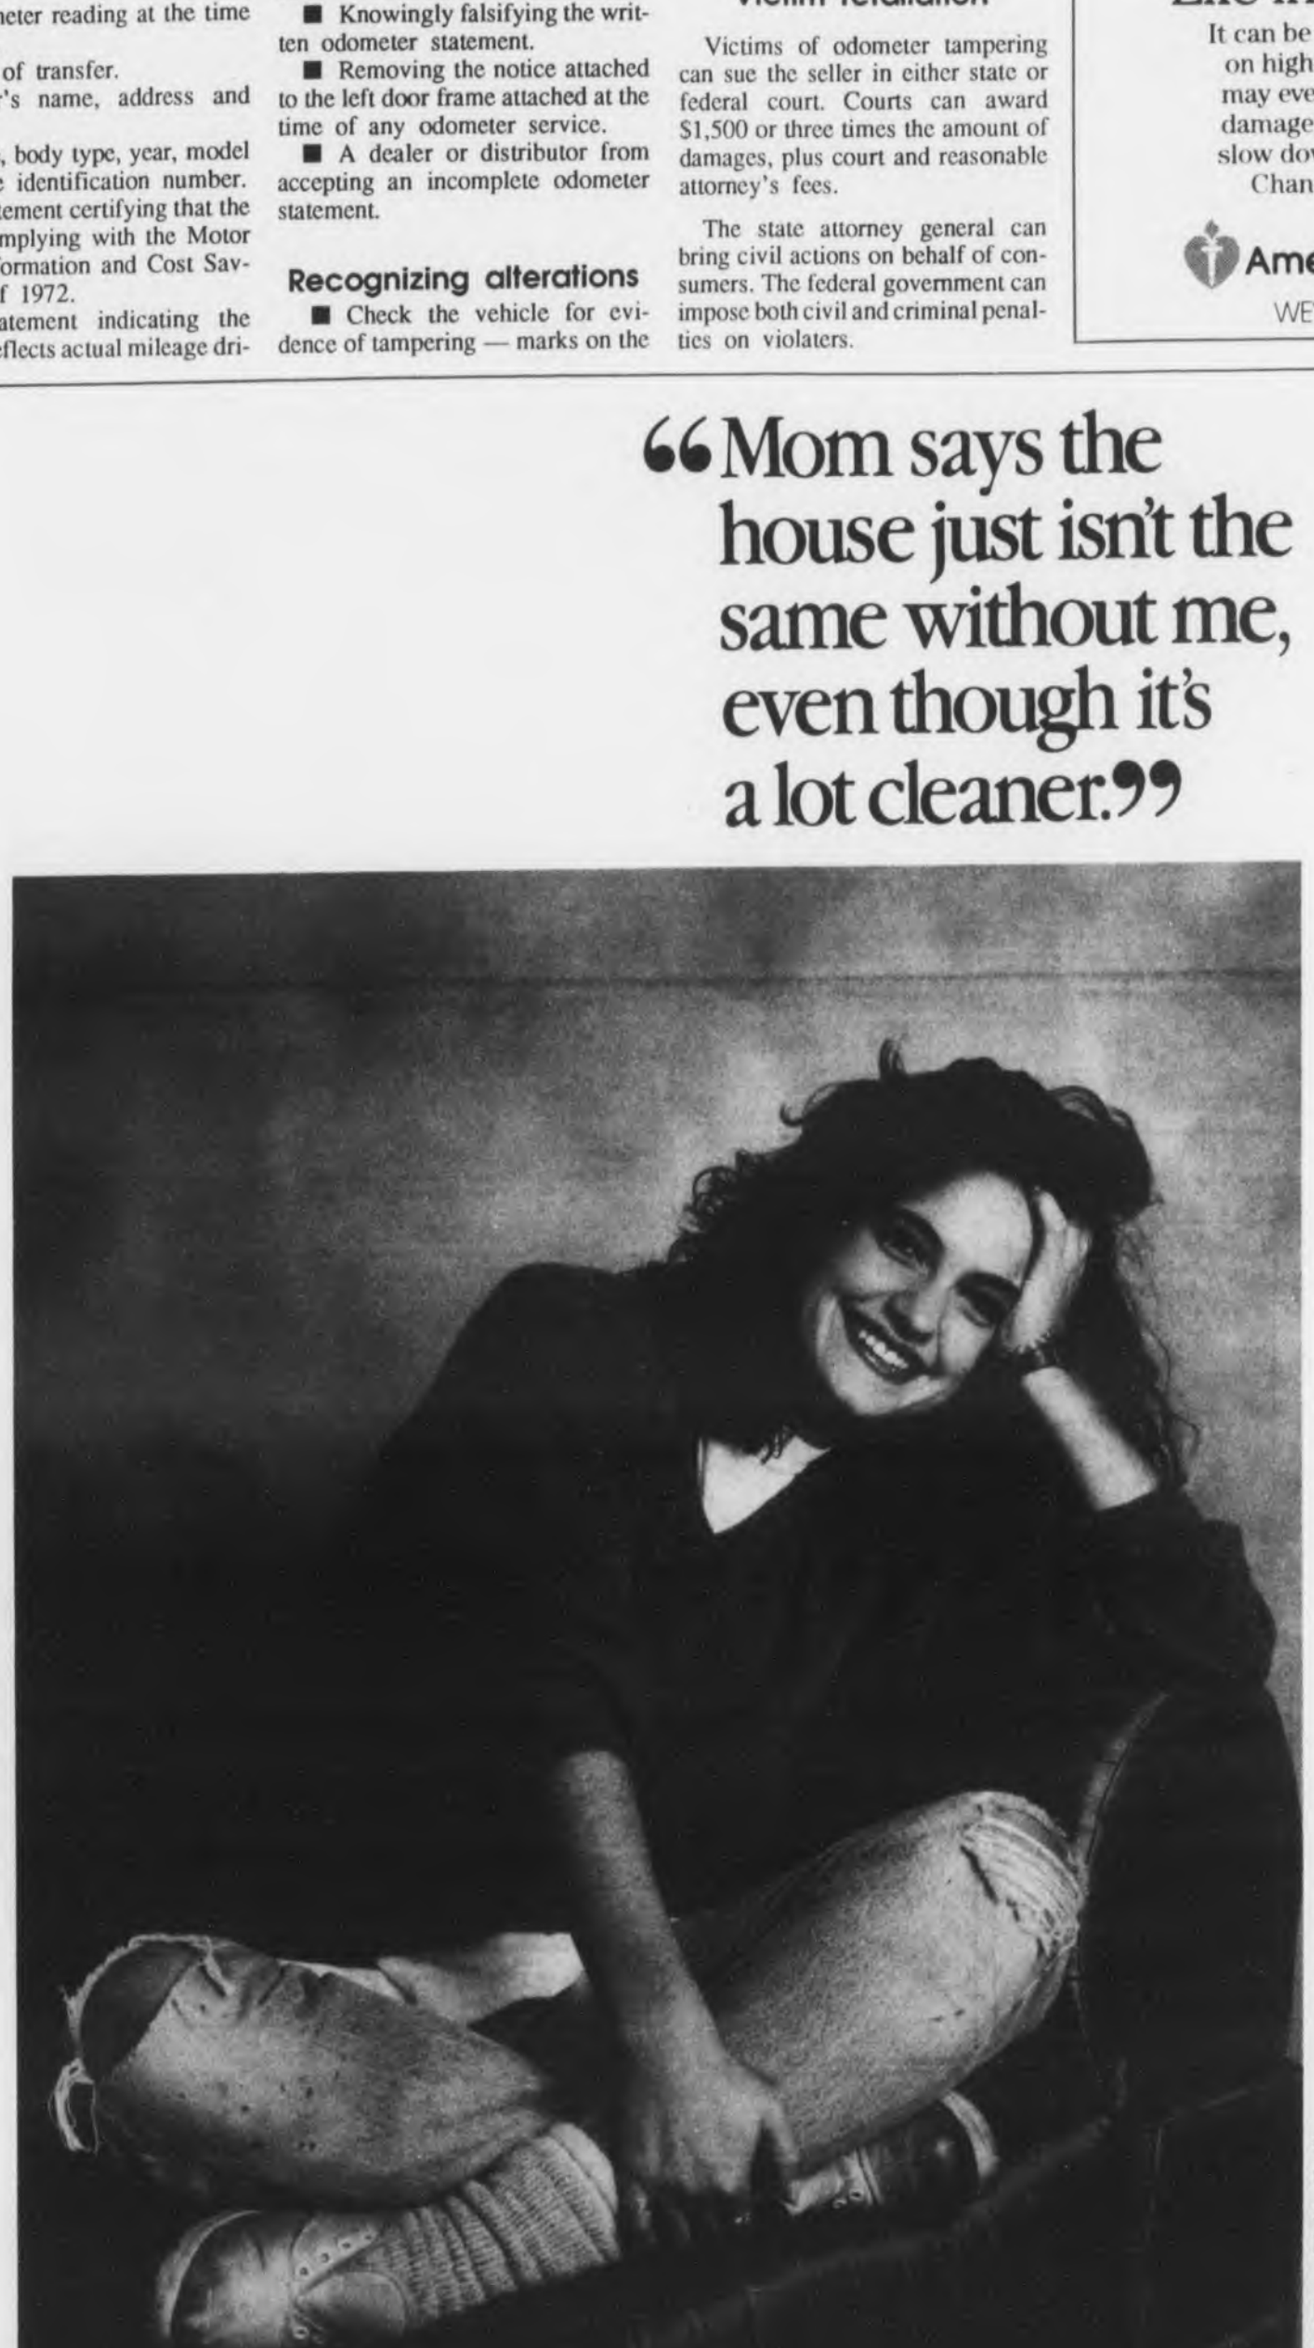
K-State took its only lead, 2-0, off a layup by Nadira Hazim in the opening seconds of the game. Oklahoma State came back to take the lead, but the Lady Cats stayed within five points until the 10 minute mark of the first half.

K-State slumped and didn't score for six minutes, while OSU collected 12 points to take a 28-17 lead with six minutes left in the period. K-State and the Cowgirls traded baskets for the rest of the half, and OSU went into the lockerrooms at halftime with a 15-point lead, 38-23.

"We didn't score for six minutes because we stopped doing the things that were successful in the first eight minutes of the game," Mossman said. "We'd go down and make four, five passes and get a short jumper or a layup. And then the next time down, make one pass and crank it, and nobody else on the floor knew what to do when we did that."

The Cowgirls built a 27-point lead midway through the last stanza and went to the bench to give their reserves playing time. K-State, which had been using its bench throughout the game, fought back to close within 15 points, 65-50, with 1:57 left to play. But the Cowgirls held on to win by 19 points, 73-54.

"I'm very proud of our effort in the second half," Mossman said. "We stayed within four points of them in the second half. They were ahead of us by 27 at one time and we got back within 15. That really shows a lot of character from our kids."



Seven Lady Cats scored in the contest. Elyse Funk came off the bench to lead the team with 14 points. Rita Matteucci scored 13 points and collected 11 rebounds. Diana Miller and Nadira Hazim netted eight points each.

Liz Brown and Clinette Jordan scored 17 points each to lead the Cowgirls in scoring. Jodi Fisher netted 10 points, and Shelia Hughes scored seven points.

Religious leaders protest apartheid

By The Associated Press

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu and other religious leaders from all races were arrested Monday while kneeling near Parliament with a petition against government bans on anti-apartheid groups.

Members of a procession Tutu and his colleagues had led recited the Lord's Prayer as police sprayed them with with jets of water and loaded them into vans.

All the detainees were freed in a few hours and the churchmen said they would continue protests regardless of the consequences. Their petition referred to an order last Wednesday prohibiting political activity by 18 anti-apartheid organizations.

Riot police blocked Tutu and two dozen other clergymen, wearing robes and holding Bibles, as they tried to march toward Parliament from nearby St. George's Cathedral, the main Anglican church in central Cape Town.

They knelt and linked arms as a policeman called through a bullhorn that the gathering was illegal. Officers escorted the protesters into vans as others aimed jets from water cannons at scores of protesters who remained on the sidewalk prayng and singing an African hymn.

After being told at a police staton that charges might be filed later, the white, black, mixed-race and Indian clergymen were freed. They held a news conference at St. George's, which was surrounded by policemen.

"We are not defying the law," said Tutu, the black foe of apartheid who won the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize. "We are obeying God. We also obey God every day."

"In the past, it was possible for people to say it was the usual rabble rousers demonstrating. They can't say it any more. It's the church."

The Rev. Allan Boesak, mixed-race president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, said the white authorities would view the protest as "an act of subversion."

"We told the South African government that we had decided we would be obedient to God," he said. "That is a higher law to us."

In the petition addressed to President P.W. Botha and Parliament, the churchmen said in part: "No matter the consequences, we will explore every possible avenue for continuing the activities which you have prohibited other bodies from taking."

The Rev. Khoza Mgojo, head of the Methodist Church, said the petition would be mailed to Botha. The document was drenched in the confrontation.

State Department spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley said in Washington the United States condemned the repression of the demonstrators.

Collision east of town sends three to hospital

By The Collegian Staff

Two cars collided east of Manhattan shortly after 5 p.m. Monday off U.S. Highway 24 near The Ranch Saloon. Tom Beier, Manhattan, the driver of one car, and Charles Harper, Manhattan, Beier's passenger, collided with a car driven by Alice Ward, rural Manhattan. Beier's Ford Mustang was southbound when it struck the right front portion of Ward's northbound Oldsmobile as she was attempting to make a left turn. All three persons were taken by ambulance to Memorial Hospital and were listed in stable condition Monday night.

Ariz. Senate begins impeachment trial

By The Associated Press

PHOENIX, Ariz. — The Arizona Senate on Monday opened the first impeachment trial of a U.S. governor in six decades, and within hours an attorney for Gov. Evan Mecham lost a plea for dismissal of the charges against the first-term Republican.

"This man hasn't dipped his hands into public funds," attorney Jerris Leonard said. "He hasn't ripped off the treasury. He hasn't committed high crimes in office, and I urge you to dismiss these articles of impeachment."

But the 29 voting senators gave Mecham an overwhelming rejection. On 11 different motions to dismiss portions of the charges, the largest number voting for Mecham was seven and the smallest was two.

The rest answered firmly, "No," when asked if they would drop the challenged articles of impeachment. They also refused to recess early at Leonard's request and continued to address motions brought by the governor's laywer.

Attorney Paul Eckstein, one of the prosecutors, had responded to Leonard that even if it turned out that Mecham didn't violate state laws, his conduct would be "grossly offensive to the people of this state."

"The articles of impeachment ... cry out for conviction," Eckstein said. He urged speedy resolution of a raft of pending motions to allow testimony to begin.

At the conclusion of Monday's session, senators said they expected opening statements and testimony to begin today.

Mecham, who was not required to be present when the senators convened, stayed at the suburban Glendale offices of his "government in exile," and said he was too busy to Strike in Panama ineffective

By The Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama — A general strike called by opponents of Panama's military regime faltered Monday, with transportation and most commerce proceeding uninterrupted.

But the strike, called to press for the resignation of strongman Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, appeared somewhat more effective in industry.

Intimidation, censorship and an apparent lack of faith in the effectiveness of mass action conspired against the strike's success. The fact that Monday was payday also hurt the strike call.

"There's fear," said a middle-aged bank employee as he stepped from a bus early Monday. "We lack unity to confront these people, who have all the arms."

"The people don't have means to resist," said a woman, a domestic employee, who was walking with him.

Like all those asked, they spoke on condition of anonymity for fear of reprisals.

Noriega, commander of the Defense Forces, has been charged in the United States with involvement in the smuggling of Colombian cocaine and with allowing narcotics traffickers to launder profits in Panamanian banks.

Last week President Eric Arturo Delvalle ordered him to resign. But on Friday, Noriega engineered a vote in the National Assembly, dismissing Delvalle.

Bill requests $13.5 million for construction at K-State

By Robert Short
Collegian Reporter

A bill requesting $13.5 million in federal matching funds was submitted Monday to both houses of Congress for construction of an addition to Throckmorton Hall and the adjacent greenhouse complex.

Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture, said the present plant science facility is not adequate to meet the needs of the state and the University.

The minimal space in the greenhouses is restricting the research in plant sciences and limiting an effective environment for teaching, he said.

"The old greenhouses, particularly for horticulture, do not have the physical construction or the quality environment needed for research," Woods said.

The $27 million facility will house classes and research laboratories for the Departments of Agronomy, Plant Pathology, Horticulture and Forestry.

Throckmorton Hall is currently only one-third the size of the originally planned complex for K-State's plant science needs, Woods said. Original plans included an additional wing on each side of the building and a larger greenhouse area.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., said she presented the legislation in response to the lack of modern laboratory and greenhouse space at K-State. Kassebaum called the greenhouse the University's most limiting factor in plant science research.

Kassebaum said state-of-the-art laboratories are needed to translate biotechnology research into new crops and other agricultural products.

The addition would also benefit the state agricultural program for the development of new seed varieties and for all phases of agronomic and horticultural crop research, Woods said.

"The research programs this building would support are vital to Kansas agriculture," Woods said.

The University will authorize plans for the new facility as soon as money becomes available, Woods said.

"I am hopeful that if planning money becomes available this year, that construction will follow," he said.

Pat Roberts, R-Kan., introduced similar legislation into the House of Representatives last January.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Union may face revenue loss when games move to Bramlage

By Vera McMinimy
Collegian Reporter

The Union Food Service is battling the possibility of losing more than $1,000 in revenue for each home basketball game that will be played in Fred Bramlage Coliseum next fall.

Malley Sisson, Union food service director, said the loss could cause problems.

"It (the revenue) is really important to us in our budget when you consider there are 13 to 14 home games," she said.

In anticipation of the change, food service employees are polling people who dine in the Union before games.

"We know it's going to be a big change, and we're trying to find out what our loyal customers want us to do," Sisson said.

Surveys were handed out to people eating in the Union Stateroom before the last three home basketball games. About 100 surveys were dispersed, and about 75 were returned, Sisson said.

An additional 1,200 surveys will be mailed to faculty, staff and community season-ticket holders this week, Sisson said.

The student surveys are available in the Student Governing Services office, the Union Program Council office and in the Union Stateroom near the suggestion box. Completed student questionnaires can be returned to the Stateroom cashiers.

The survey asks what Union services the person uses, which ones they would like to use next season and any additional services they would like to have offered.

"While it's still on people's minds, and they remember their traffic and use patterns, we want people to fill out surveys. We know it's going to be a big change, but we're not sure how to react to that change," Sisson said.

"What we're finding out from visiting with people is that our customers want a shuttle service that stops at the Union," she said.

Food service is considering two options, Sisson said.

The first is to offer a shuttle service to the coliseum from the Union so that people could park at the Union. The second is to allow people to park at the coliseum and offer a shuttle back to the Union.

2 more Arabs die in Israel

JERUSALEM — Israeli troops shot a Palestinian dead Monday and another died of earlier wounds. Jewish settlers urged even tougher polices in the occupied lands, where 12 weeks of violence have cost at least 76 Arab lives.

The peace mission of Secretary of State George P. Shultz ran into trouble. Sources said Jordanian leaders, who believe Palestinians are entitled to their own negotiating team, rejected talking with Israel as part of a Jordanian-Palestinian delegation.

Maj. Gen. Amram Mitzna, military commander of the West Bank, said Israel has four times as many soldiers there as it did before riots began Dec. 8. In keeping with army policy, he gave no figures.

The latest deaths brought to 76 the number of Palestinians killed, according to U.N. figures, most of them shot by Israeli soldiers. Hundreds have been wounded.

Iran reports 16 killed by bomb

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Iraq said it retaliated for pre-dawn missile attacks on Baghdad by firing long-range rockets into the heart of Tehran Monday. Iran reported 16 people killed in the bombing of a hospital.

The official Iraqi News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, said its gunners fired five surface-to-surface missiles into Tehran after two similar projectiles had exploded in Baghdad, killing and wounding "many civilians."

Iran's Islamic Republic News Agency IRNA, also monitored in Nicosia, said in urgent dispatches that "two loud explosions" were heard after nightfall in Tehran and "there may have been casualties and damage."

Swaggart's future discussed

ALEXANDRIA, La. — Officials of the Assemblies of God met Monday to discuss the future of TV evangelist Jimmy Swaggart, who stepped down from his pulpit amid allegations of immoral conduct.

A police officer guarded the parking lot of the Assemblies' state headquarters, and officials issued a statement saying the denomination would have no comment.

"Decisions made by the Louisiana district presbytery today will be returned to the executive presbytery. There will be no further announcement or comment from the Louisiana district counsel," district superintendent Cecil Janway said in the statement.

There was no indication Swaggart, who confessed a week ago to committing a sin, was present.

Judge recommends bike ride

GUNNISON, Colo. — A driver whose vehicle struck a bicyclist has been sentenced to community service, most of which could be waived with a bicycle ride on a narrow highway near Crested Butte.

"It might be a real eye-opener for you," Gunnison County Court Judge Gerry Reese told Bruce Hartel at his sentencing last week. "Riding a bicycle along the highway while three-ton vehicles hurl by can only be appreciated by experiencing it."

Reese decided that if Hartel, 59, of Littleton, rides a bicycle on a section of the highway between Crested Butte and Crested Butte South within 90 days, 100 hours out of 124 hours of court-ordered community service will be waived.

Reese told Hartel he can walk part of the way if he gets tired, as long as he has a bicycle with him. Colorado 135 is a two-lane, narrow, winding mountain highway with no shoulders.

In a plea bargain, Hartel pleaded no contest to careless driving and driving too fast for conditions.

The charges stemmed from a Sept. 22 collision with bicyclist Eliane Wiscocq of Crested Butte. She was knocked off her bike and suffered facial lacerations, a broken wrist and whiplash.

Schools may require history

TOPEKA — The House Education Committee Monday endorsed a bill that would require Kansas schools to teach their students Kansas history between grades seven and 12.

Current law requires public school districts to teach Kansas history, but doesn't say in what grades or for how long it should be taught.

Most school districts now teach some Kansas history in elementary school, often as part of the state's annual celebration of Kansas Day, marking entry into the Union. Some districts also teach Kansas history in junior high, history teachers testified earlier this session.

Under the bill, districts would be required to teach students Kansas history sometime in grades seven through 12. The bill also would require students to successfully complete the course in order to graduate from high school.

Rhodes Scholar bill endorsed

TOPEKA — The Senate Education Committee Monday endorsed a bill designed to attract Kansas residents who are named Rhodes Scholars to Kansas schools.

The bill, proposed by Sen. Jack Steineger, D-Kansas City, would provide full tuition for Kansas residents who are named Rhodes Scholars if they attend a Kansas university.

Under the bill, a Rhodes Scholar would not have to attend a school within the state to be eligible, but would have to be a Kansas resident. Committee members amended the bill to allow Kansas students attending out-of-state schools to be eligible to receive the scholarship to do graduate work.

Every year, 32 Rhodes Scholars are named in the nation. The scholarship gives them an opportunity to either receive a second bachelor's degree or a master's degree from Oxford University in England.

B-1 demonstrators speak out in Wichita

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — Protesters and counterdemonstrators rallied Monday outside McConnell Air Force Base as more than 1,600 invited guests ceremonially welcomed the B-1B bomber to the base.

A collection of peace groups sang hymns and peace songs at McConnell's west gate. A base spokeswoman said 64 of the protesters crossed the property line and were detained.

Six people previously had been barred from the base after crossing onto it during a May protest and were arrested Monday. Authorities planned to charge them with trespassing on a military installation.

The other 58 people, including three children, were held for about an hour, issued letters banning them from the base and then released after being bused to a nearby park where they had left their cars.

More than 130 peace activists gathered at the base gate. About 50 people demonstrated in support of the bomber.

"I consider it an insurance policy," Thelma Tillery, 67, of Wichita, said of the plane. "It's like buying homeowner's, or auto or life insurance. We all scream about the price, but we buy it and hope we never have to use it."

Two Boeing Military Airplanes engineers, David Price and Scott Dort, organized the counterdemonstration.

Price presented one of the peace movement leaders, Mary Harren, with a bouquet of red, white and blue carnations. Until they ran out, she gave a flower to each of the protesters, who planned to cross the base boundary as an act of civil disobedience.

The protesters began reciting the Lord's Prayer before sending groups of five or six at a time across the boundary. The prayer was drowned out by an overflight of two F-16 and two F-4 jet fighters. The planes were greeted by cheers from the counterdemonstrators.

A B-1B flying about 700 mph made a loud pass a few seconds later and also was met with cheers and applause from the pro-military group.

Inside the base, Strategic Air Command chief Gen. John T. Chain told invited guests the bomber represents the United States' response to the Soviet Union's military buildup the past few years.

"This is a day for celebration because it demonstrates in a very visible way the payoff of our national program for modernizing our strategic forces," Chain said.

Gov. Mike Hayden said the formal welcome was a big day for Wichita, Kansas and the United States.

"This aircraft has brought us new technology. It's brought us new people. And it's brought us new ideas. Perhaps most importantly, it's brought us increased capability for our national defense," he said.

Chain flew the B-1B that thrilled the on-base crowd with a slow, low, wheels-down pass that ended with a steep climb and sharp banks first to the left and then to the right to demonstrate the maneuverability of the plane. He landed the craft and presented documents to Col. Phil Ford, base commander, formally assigning the plane to McConnell.

By May, 17 of the high-technology bombers will be based in Wichita. The first of the B-1Bs for the 384th Bombardment Wing began arriving about a month ago.

Leaders of both demonstrations said they accomplished what they set out to do.

Shultz to end peace mission

No committed responses on Middle East settlement

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Secretary of State George P. Shultz neared the end of a peace mission Monday with inconclusive responses from Israel and the Arabs on his plan for negotiations this year on a Middle East settlement.

Final word from Jordan, the key Arab country, awaited a meeting today with King Hussein in London but the king clearly was no longer pressing the Palestine Liberation Organization to form a joint delegation.

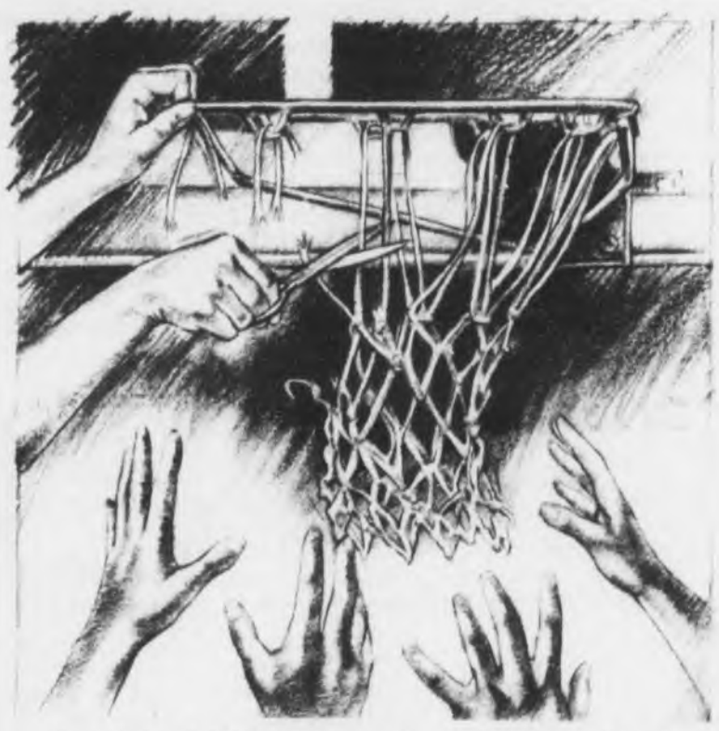
Israel was divided between Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's conservative Likud bloc, which opposes the Shultz idea of trading land for peace, and the center-right Labor Party of Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, which favors it.

"We're not at the point where anybody is saying yes or no," a senior U.S official said. The secretary of state kept his distance from reporters accompanying him on the diplomatic air shuttle.

The official said he did not know whether Shultz would return to the area after seeing Hussein and attending a North Atlantic Treaty Organization meeting Wednesday and Thursday in Brussels. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

Shultz did not make a departure statement after talks in Amman with Prince Hassan, Prime Minister Zaid Rifai and Foreign Minister Taher Masri. He stopped speaking with reporters on his plane, and has held no news conferences in the Middle East.

Only Egypt has taken a positive position on the Shultz plan for Israel, Jordan and Palestinians to hold two sets of talks this year.



In the first, the goal would be immediate self-rule for the 1.5 million Palestinian Arabs living in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, where at least 76 Arabs have been killed since riots began Dec. 8. The second stage would explore an overall settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Reporters with Shultz in Amman were told the position of Jordan and other Arab nations had hardened because of Israel's harsh suppression of Palestinian protests.

Jordan was said to be backing off the idea of a joint delegation with Palestinians approved by the PLO. The Americans had assumed Jordan still was amenable to a joint delegation, which would solve a problem for Israel and the United States because they refuse to deal directly with the PLO.

Palestinians in Israeli-held territory and elsewhere now look to the PLO as their sole representative.

Giving peace a chance

U.S. can ensure Afghans' freedom

Commentary

MICHAEL NICHOLS
Collegian Columnist

Much like the United States during the Vietnam fiasco, the Soviet Union seems to have finally realized that, size and superpower status aside, you cannot always kill what you stomp on. This specifically applies to Afghanistan, where Soviet attempts to subjugate a hostile population have met with failure. Sadly enough, it took more than eight years of pointless warfare and the commitment of more than 115,000 troops for this repetitive history lesson to become clear in the minds of some bureaucrats.

Fortunately, though, peace in Afghanistan seems to have a very good possibility of occurring within the next year. If, that is, Soviet Premier Mikhail Gorbachev's offer to begin pulling out troops by May 15 is reciprocated with an effort of good will from the United States. What the situation eventually boils down to is whether or not the United States is prepared to accept peace between the Soviet Union and the Afghan rebels.

It would be foolish to assume that the United States has little influence in determining the outcome of the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan. Those weren't American troops invading Afghanistan in December 1979, but since then, we also have become inextricably involved in the conflict, although in a relatively unpublicized manner.

Take Pakistan's role in this conflict, for example.

It should be no big surprise that Pakistan is deeply interested in the removal of menacing Soviet troops from neighboring Afghanistan. Pakistan's position is even more easily understood when one takes into account that Pakistani President Zia al-Haq has a deep ideological commitment to the Islamic fundamentalist wing of the mujahedeen guerrillas.

But what does this have to do with the United States?

Only that Washington, D.C., is an ardent supporter of Zia's regime, and, according to the Feb. 20 issue of The Nation, also the patron of a $480 million aid package to Pakistan for 1988. And also to be taken into consideration are the billions of dollars already spent in Pakistan by the United States, as well as probably billions yet to be awarded. Assuming the realistic position that money does talk, $480 million could very well be enough to convince Pakistan to delay any negotiations until the United States is conveniently satisfied.

The next logical question, then, is why would the United States ever want to delay the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan? Recalling troops would certainly be admitting defeat, a serious blow to the reputation of the Soviet Union, as well as to communism worldwide. And what of the freedom and self-determination of Afghan citizens? Surely their best interests come before any attempt at denigrating Soviet influence in the field of international relations.

According to research done by Jefferson Morley for The Nation, there is a distinct split in the Reagan administration concerning the Soviet proposal to end the war in Afghanistan.

On one side are the "negotiators," headed by Under Secretary of State Michael Armacost, who recently traveled to Pakistan to confer with Zia on Pakistan's position in upcoming negotiations. The "negotiators" approach the situation pragmatically, slowly edging toward a settlement to end the 8-year-old war.

On the other side are what have been cynically termed "bleeders" by Selig Harrison, senior associate of the Washington-based Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. According to Harrison, "bleeders" are those who wish to inflict as much damage as possible upon the Soviet Union, regardless of the fate of the Afghan people or the immediate future of the Middle East.

The "bleeders" have perhaps found their most eloquent spokesperson in Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Texas, who has been quoted as saying: "There were 58,000 dead in Vietnam, and we owe the Russians one." Also argued by the "bleeders" is the notion that the Soviets are planning to annex several Afghan provinces during the withdrawal. According to Elie Krakowski, head of the office of regional defense in the Pentagon's International Security Affairs Division, the entire withdrawal proposal is a scheme to lure the Western nations into buying the Soviet plan while they stealthily incorporate sections of Afghanistan.

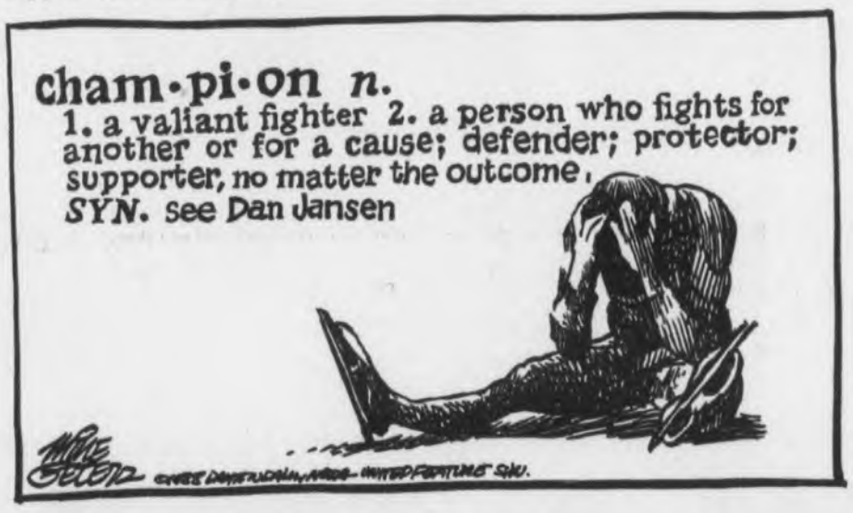
Counting against the "negotiators" are the vast sums of funds already spent in Afghanistan. U.S. involvement there is being viewed as an investment of time, money, technology and commitment in combatting the "expansion of communism." To allow the Soviets to pull out now would seriously hinder the decades-old American position against communist expansion, according to many hardline conservatives.

Obviously, the United States isn't the only potential deterrent toward a Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan. The most difficult group to appease will be the fundamentalist rebels, but then again, they are also directly or indirectly funded by the United States. While there is no certainty for peace, there is definitely a very strong possibility, needing ultimately, of course, the approval of the United States. The Soviets have unilaterally dropped almost all of their major demands; maybe now it will be up to certain little minds in Washington to do the same.

Olympic games show best of human spirit

The flame has been extinguished.

Another Winter Olympics has been completed, and all things seem right in the world — at least for a while. No, the United States didn't come away with its most gold medals ever, but those who participated gave it their best.



And that's all anyone can expect.

Who didn't feel the agony Dan Jansen went through when his Olympic hopes were dashed following the unexpected death of his sister? Who didn't want to reach out and console Debi Thomas when the gold — and then the silver — medal slipped from her grasp?

And who could ignore the exuberance Bonnie Blair experienced when she set a world record in speed skating? That — the individual effort — is what the Olympic games embody.

Likewise, though political and geographical boundaries are difficult to overcome, it was undoubtedly difficult for any American to take anything away from the sparkling performance of East Germany's Katarina Witt.

Indeed, the Olympics provide one time when the world can put its political baggage away for awhile and enjoy what the human race has to offer.

Not all big businesses concerned with profit

The telephone may be a wonderful invention, but some of its uses have expanded into areas that aren't so wonderful. Indeed, one of the newest uses — the availability of sexually explicit messages over the phone — has more problems than benefits.

Both parents and employers have had to face monumental phone bills from inquisitive children and employees taking a break. But more severe than the bills are the messages' lasting effects. Experts rightly condemn the service on the basis that some of the messages provoke sexual misconduct and abuse by the listeners.

However, one company is finally making an effort to control this industry's growth and its negative effects.

The Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. is offering to block the 976 phone numbers in the Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston and San Antonio areas free of charge. On the first day the service was offered, the company received about 8,000 calls, but about 12,000 customers had called previously about acquiring the service.

Southwestern's commendable initiative is one that shows big businesses aren't always more concerned with profit than those people it serves.

Cable television has offered parents the option of locking out objectionable stations, and Southwestern Bell's program is not only comparable, but also just as necessary.

Religious error

Editor,

Re: Commentary by Rizwan Mithani on religion and women published in the Collegian Feb. 19.

Mithani's inclusion of Buddhism among other religions that show sexism was unjustifiable. Nirvana has been independent of gender and it will continue to be so. How can one limit the ultimate goal of Buddhism to only half of the population? Nirvana can be attained solely because of an individual's state of mind; it has no restriction regardless of sex or age.

I base my argument on my own knowledge as a Hinayana Buddhist. (Hinayana Buddhism is believed to be the same form of Buddhism during Buddha's lifetime, about 2,600 years ago.) On his argument that Buddhist nuns have to be deferential to Buddhist (male) monks, it can be easily explained because the nuns are simply any female Buddhists who want to practice their religion on a limited basis.

In general, they voluntarily dress in white, shave their heads to express their devotion to the religion and practice the so-called "eight-forbidding-rules." Men may do the same too, but we don't call them "nuns." On the other hand, buddhist monks must be ordained (accepted by a group of senior monks), shave their heads and each dress with only three pieces of herbal-dyed clothes.

They must live by 210 forbidding rules formulated especially for the priests and learn 84,000 items of dharma taught by Buddha. Therefore, the status of the monks is higher than the status of nuns in Buddhist culture. In fact, women could also become "female monks" too, but unfortunately that happened only in the past.

Due to the lack of Buddhist female monks for 2,000 years, and also because of absolute separation between the monasteries and institutions of male and female monks, it is thus no longer possible to have an ordination for females to become Buddhist monks. I hope it is clear now for Mr. Mithani that his description of Buddhism was wrong. If he would argue that he was talking of Mahayana Buddhism (a more culture-oriented form), he should have indicated so, otherwise he misled readers intentionally.

Myopic view

Editor,

Rizwan Mithani has a myopic view of religion. If religion is nothing more than a set of beliefs that a person can choose to believe or change at will, then there is no need to change the world religions to reflect changes in human world views — just invent a new religion the way you like.

If, on the other hand, religion is correct in claiming to describe the ultimate reality behind the physical world we see, then it is nonsense to hope any religion can or should change as our opinions change — except for those religions that give ultimacy to our opinions.

The best we can do is ask which religion most likely describes that ultimate reality accurately and to correct any corruption we can detect in that description. The major world religions make sufficiently different claims about what is ultimate that it is not possible for more than one of them to be right.

Ahearn Garage?

Editor,

I have just returned from what could have been a very enjoyable lunch hour. Instead, I had to play that game I call "ring around the parking lot." Yes, you guessed it — all the places were filled. First I drove to three different lots. Then, after I finally found a place, I sat in my car eating my lunch and noticing all the dirty looks from all those others who did not have a parking place.

That this is a beautiful day and people used to walk if they lived closer than some of the rest of us really bothered me as I thought about what the appropriate solution to this serious problem is.

With our enrollment higher than ever, I wonder if we could keep the good name of Ahearn Field House by converting it to a multi-level parking garage.

Authors find textbooks valuable experience

250 books originate at K-State

By Vince Huser
Collegian Reporter

Jacqueline Spears, co-director of rural clearing house for education and development, and her husband Dean Zollman, professor of physics, wrote "The Fascination of Physics". Spears and Zollman started writing the textbook in 1978 and it was finally published in 1984.

Authors write textbooks for a number of reasons, but money is not one of them. Textbook authors are not guaranteed they will make money, but this hasn't stopped the faculty of K-State, whose members have published approximately 250 textbooks since 1980.

For Jacqueline Spears, co-director of rural clearing house for education and development, and Dean Zollman, professor of physics, writing "The Fascination of Physics" as a husband-and-wife team turned out to be a valuable experience.

"If you truly get involved in the task (of writing), the sense of accomplishment when you're finished and what you've learned — not only about your topic, but about the process of writing — is a pretty valuable experience," Spears said.

Spears and Zollman began writing the textbook in 1978. It was finally published in 1984 by The Benjamin/Cummings Company, Inc.

"We became convinced that there was a different way to look at teaching a course like (The) Physical World than had been tried before," Zollman said.

Zollman explained that everyone else who had written a textbook in the area of physical world had taken a rather large encyclopedia look at physics, covering a little bit of everything.

They decided to write their book at a level they called a "an introductory non-science students course."

Writing for this market is difficult, Spears said, because most students representing this market have had bad experiences with science courses in high school or junior high and are not motivated to take physics courses.

"We felt that there were some really important topics people could learn from that would build toward a better understanding of what physics is today," Zollman said.

The underlying idea for their book was to explore a fewer number of topics than other books, explaining them in-depth. Their hope then was that, when finished, students wouldn't have just a little bit of knowledge about everything, but more knowledge about a fewer number of topics.

Another goal for the textbook was to integrate ideas of physics that had been developed since the 1900s with what had been done prior to that, allowing students to see how current perceptions of the concepts of physics had emerged from work done prior to the present, Spears said.

Zollman and Spears worked in a kind of tandem while writing the book.

"We generally worked out an outline together and then one of us would write the first draft of the chapter then pass it on to the other," Zollman said.

Zollman said he generally wrote the first draft because he was quicker at getting the first ideas down on paper.

The chapters were then re-written, revised and passed back and forth until both authors were satisfied.

"None of the final drafts looked exactly like my first drafts," Zollman said. "Jackie would completely re-write every chapter and I would never look back at the previous ones (after they were done)," he said.

After the first sample chapters had been written, Spears and Zollman sent them to the publishers who said they were interested.

After reviewing the sample chapters, four of the publishers sent offers back.

Through negotiations, Spears and Zollman narrowed the field to two companies.

"The question then became not so much one of money as much as which one will help you do what you want to do with the book," Zollman said.

They were no longer interested in which company would give them 50 cents more per copy, Zollman said.

They chose The Benjamin/Cummings Company, Inc., because Spears and Zollman believed it offered the support they wanted in terms of artwork, editing help and sales. The company also had a reputation as a science publisher.

In the book they decided to use a mixture of visuals, including photographs and various types of line drawings.

"There are line drawings that are somewhat technical and are meant really to be clear about the physics they are representing," Spears said. "And then there are some visuals that are cartoonish in nature that also communicate physics but in a less serious way."

Most of the ideas they had sketched out themselves or borrowed from other books and modified them in ways that would not intrude on copyright laws.

The editor decided, with their agreement, to hire artists to do the technical drawings and the cartoon drawings.

The book hasn't sold very well on either coasts but has been used in the Midwest.

"Our publisher tells us our book has achieved critical acclaim, but not market acclaim," Spears said.

One reason for this is that on the coasts, professors may deal with only a narrow band of students, while here at K-State someone may deal with the whole spectrum of students — from those with very a basic background in physics, to those with a broader knowledge base of physics, Spears said.

After a book has been on the market for a while, publishers usually do one of two things. They either reprint the book as it is or come out with a second edition revised by the authors.

"As an author, (the) second edition strikes me as being boring," Zollman said. The first edition is when a person thinks about the knowledge and thinks about how to put it together, he said.

However, if the publisher wanted a second edition they would probably do it, but not right away, Zollman said.

Albert Strafuss, professor of veterinary diagnosis, also did not write his textbook for monetary gains.

"I guess the thing for me isn't really the money. As it is, if the book in the future is accepted in the profession, then that would be the reward that I'd be satisfied with," Strafuss said.

Albert Strafuss, professor of veterinary diagnosis, wrote "Necropsy: Procedures and Basic Diagnostic Methods for Practicing Veterinarians."

Strafuss' book, titled "Necropsy: Procedures and Basic Diagnostic Methods for Practicing Veterinarians," was published in January of this year.

Necropsy is designed for animals like an autopsy is for humans. An animal is opened up so the veterinarian can discern the cause of the animal's death.

The beginning thoughts for Strafuss' book began about 10 years ago and stemmed from an outgrowth of teaching junior veterinary medicine students.

"The thought of them learning a simple necropsy procedure, a uniform procedure for all animals ... would make it much easier then for the veterinarian to necropsy different species of animals if they had just one set procedure," Strafuss said.

The book was actually written in sections. Strafuss would do a part of it and then would set it aside, and after awhile, start again.

"The first part of the book, the procedural part, was done first," Strafuss said. Other chapters about necropsy were added to help veterinarians form a diagnosis about why an animal may have died.

Strafuss said he decided to write the textbook because most books on necropsy dealt with specific species. None encompassed all of them, he said.

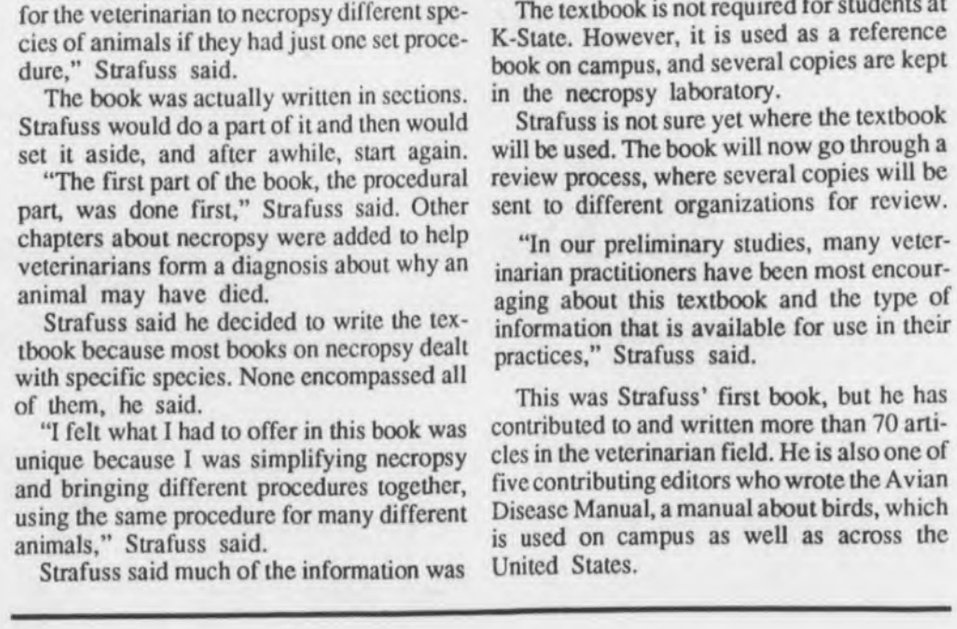
"I felt what I had to offer in this book was unique because I was simplifying necropsy and bringing different procedures together, using the same procedure for many different animals," Strafuss said.

Strafuss said much of the information was pulled directly from his own personal experiences. He arranged and put these experiences into a logical sequence, he said.

The book was edited by Eileen Schofield, associate editor at the agriculture experiment station and was published by Charles C. Thomas, publisher.

Strafuss sent a title and a prospectus (a formal summary of his ideas) to six publishers and those that were interested gave him encouragement.

"I had not previously communicated with (the publisher) at all," Strafuss said. "I sent them the total manuscript and they accepted it right away."



The textbook is not required for students at K-State. However, it is used as a reference book on campus, and several copies are kept in the necropsy laboratory.

Strafuss is not sure yet where the textbook will be used. The book will now go through a review process, where several copies will be sent to different organizations for review.

"In our preliminary studies, many veterinarian practitioners have been most encouraging about this textbook and the type of information that is available for use in their practices," Strafuss said.

This was Strafuss' first book, but he has contributed to and written more than 70 articles in the veterinarian field. He is also one of five contributing editors who wrote the Avian Disease Manual, a manual about birds, which is used on campus as well as across the United States.

Board discusses school crowding

By Robert Short
Collegian Reporter

Options for alleviating overcrowding in USD 383 were outlined for city and county officials by members of the Manhattan Board of Education at an intergovernmental meeting Monday at the University Inn.

Hal Rowe, superintendent of schools, said he saw the need for a general information meeting to inform city and county representatives about solutions the board is considering for solving the problem.

Several possible spatial and scheduling solutions to handle the increasing number of students were presented.

The school district can build, buy or rent additional space that would handle the overcrowding in the district, Rowe said. Year-round school and an extended-day schedule have also been considered by the board.

Rowe said there has been an unexpected increase of 700 students in the last four years. Of these, 500 are from military or Fort Riley-employed families, and 200 are from normal community growth.

Manhattan and Ogden elementary schools are experiencing overcrowding, while Manhattan Middle School is at capacity.

Manhattan High School will not have a serious overcrowding problem until this year's third-graders reach the ninth grade, Rowe said. This is currently the largest class in the school system, and the classes under it are the second-largest.

Rowe said alternate scheduling plans would inconvenience people accustomed to the traditional school year. An advantage of shortening the three-month summer break between semesters is that it improves the retention by students of the material they learn, he said.

The immediate solution to overcrowding is going to be increasing class size, Rowe said. Unfortunately, studies show that oversized classrooms affect student-teacher interaction both on the primary and secondary levels, he added.

Marjorie Morse, Riley County commissioner, said intergovernmental meetings allow city and county officials to meet together to attempt to solve problems affecting local residents.

Intergovernmental meetings include members of the Board of Education, city and county commissions, Riley County Public Works Department, University officials and the city manager.

Soldiers now eligible for in-state tuition

By The Collegian Staff

Active duty personnel and their families can take classes at K-State and qualify for in-state tuition fees, according to Capt. Robert Shoemaker, recruiting officer for Army ROTC.

To qualify, the soldier or family member will need to produce an identification card that shows active duty status. Once the soldier is separated from the Army, he or she will no longer be able to take advantage of the policy.

The only exception is for the children, Shoemaker said.

"If a military family had children that graduated from a Kansas high school, (the children) are considered Kansas residents even though the parents are still out-of-state residents," he said.

If a soldier wants Kansas residency, the key is to begin the process as soon as the soldier is transferred to Fort Riley, Shoemaker said.

"Get everything to say Kansas," he said.

K-State is basically looking for "disassociation" from any other state, he said.

If a soldier is tied in any way to another state, he is "liable to be called a non-resident," Shoemaker said.

When declaring residency, there are several steps that need to be taken:

- Pay Kansas taxes (which will show up on the leave and earning statement).
- Register to vote in Kansas.
- Register license tags as a Kansas resident.
- File a Kansas income tax return.

Temple still on top; Xavier ends dry spell

By The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Coach Pete Gillen was surprised and concerned to learn that his Xavier University team has made the Associated Press Top Twenty poll for the first time in 30 years.

Gillen's Musketeers gained national attention last year when they stunned No. 14 Missouri in the NCAA tournament and nearly beat Duke. They've compiled a 22-3 record this year with a schedule that doesn't include any current Top Twenty clubs.

"Frankly, we're surprised that we're ranked so high because there are so many great teams in the United States today," Gillen said. "The parity throughout college basketball is unbelievable."

Xavier was No. 20 in the AP poll released Monday, its first Top Twenty ranking since December 1958.

Temple, 25-1, landed 44 first-place votes and 1,234 points from the panel of 63 sports writers and broadcasters to remain No. 1 in the poll. Purdue, 24-2, with 12 No. 1 votes and 1,185 points, stayed second.

Arizona and Oklahoma, each 26-2, were third and fourth, separated by just 12 points. The Wildcats received three first-place votes and 1,126 points, while Oklahoma had one more No. 1 vote.

Nevada-Las Vegas, 25-3, jumped from eighth to fifth with 905 points, while North Carolina, 21-4, advanced the same number of spots to sixth with 890.

Pittsburgh, 20-4, fell one place to seventh after losing 89-72 to Seton Hall last week. Kentucky rejoined the Top Ten after its 62-58 victory over then-No. 10 Syracuse Sunday. The 20-5 Wildcats, 12th last week, received 786 points.

Duke and Michigan, fifth and seventh last week, rounded out the Top Ten.

Iowa led the Second Ten with 581 points, followed by Syracuse, Georgia Tech, Bradley, Brigham Young, North Carolina State, Wyoming, Loyola Marymount, Vanderbilt and Xavier, which replaced Missouri, 17-8, in the Top Twenty. The Tigers lost both their games last week, falling to Colorado 87-78 and Kansas 82-77.

Although Xavier has won a school-record 11 consecutive games, 18 of its last 19, and its last 25 home games, its schedule has weighed against Top Twenty ranking until this week.

The Top Twenty teams in The Associated Press' men's college basketball poll, records through Feb. 28 and last week's ranking:

1.	Temple (44)	25-1	1
2.	Purdue (12)	24-2	2
3.	Arizona (3)	26-2	3
4.	Oklahoma (4)	26-2	4
5.	UNLV	25-3	8
6.	N. Carolina	21-4	9
7.	Pittsburgh	20-4	12
8.	Kentucky	20-5	12
9.	Duke	20-5	5
10.	Michigan	22-5	7
11.	Iowa	20-7	13
12.	Syracuse	21-7	10

K-State's Mitch Richmond plays tight defense on Nebraska's Jeff Rekeweg during the 'Cats' 65-63 win over the Huskers on Feb. 6. In the last 13 games, only three leading scorers, including Nebraska's Derrick Vick, have met their season average against the 'Cats.

Defense big key to 'Cats' success

By Mike Rouse
Sports Writer

K-State's defense has lent itself to many outstanding achievements this season, and its presence in Saturday's 59-58 win over Oklahoma State was no exception.

The Wildcats held the Cowboys to 58 points, 17.9 points below their average in Big Eight Conference games. And while K-State outscored OSU by just one point to win the game, the 'Cats 59 points is considerably fewer than its average of 75.3.

But the name of the game is to win by putting more points on the board than your opponent, and K-State did just that.

Many of the Big Eight's top players have found out how tough the Wildcats' defense has been. In the last 13 games only three of the opposing team's top scorers have met their averages. Oklahoma State's Richard Dumas, Missouri's Derrick Chievous, and Nebraska's Derrick Vick are the three who have played well against the tough defense. On the other hand, Kansas' Danny Manning, Oklahoma's Harvey Grant, and Iowa State's Jeff Grayer have all been denied their averages.

Team-wise, the defense has allowed only three teams (Oklahoma, Purdue and Southern Mississippi) to score over 90 points this year.

"We go into ballgames (looking to) minimize the team's top player and make the other players step up and do things they aren't used to doing," K-State coach Lon Kruger said.

Saturday, OSU's "other players" were unable to "step up." Dumas wasn't able to reach his average this time. Neither was William Woods. And the "other players" — namely OSU reserves Todd Christian, Robert Smith and Royce Jeffries — scored just two points combined.

Those two points are 17.5 points shy of what the trio's combined average was prior to Saturday's game. Smith scored the lone basket in the first half, while Christian and Jeffries were unable to connect on anything in 25 minutes of combined playing time.

"Our defensive awareness has been really good," Kruger said. "Knowing what the strengths are of the team and trying to make them go to something different has helped us a lot."

Sand, surf, sun, Royals await spring breakers

Planning on heading down to Florida over spring break, but need a better incentive than glistening white sand beaches and quaranteed sunny days?

Well, then ... does Monty has a deal for you!

For only $20.95, you can be the proud owner of a reserved seat for one of the Kansas City Royals' 16 spring training games.

Sure, you could buy one for the much cheaper price of $6, but the $20.95 ticket is for more than just a game of baseball. It is a one-day passport to a fun-filled adventure at Boardwalk and Baseball — an amusement park.

Die-hard Kansas City Royals fans may have a little problem grasping the last statement, but it is true. The Royals, after 19 years, have left their spring training camp at Fort Myers, Fla., behind and moved to an amusement park in Haines City, Fla., about a 25-minute drive southwest of Orlando.

Boardwalk and Baseball is more than a carnival, though. It is a combination of two great American pastimes — baseball and amusement parks.

No, you won't see Mickey Mouse or Pluto strutting around, but you might see George Brett or Brett Saberhagen riding the Hurricane, a roller coaster, in the park or throwing a ball around in Baseball City Stadium.

The amusement park, formerly known as Circus World, was bought by Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Inc., a publishing company that also operates SeaWorld and Cypress Gardens. HBJ remodeled the park at a cost of $50 million and added an extensive baseball facility for another $13 million.

The facilities include six fields — all with the same dimensions of Royals Stadium — indoor batting tunnels, spacious offices in the new headquarters building for the Royals' minor league teams, a giant Ferris wheel, the Hurricane — which can be seen from pitcher's mound in the main stadium, and 28 other rides. A mile-long boardwalk, live entertainment, restaurants, and many shops and exhibits are scattered throughout the park.

Commentary

CHASE CLARK
Sports Writer

But the prevalant theme is baseball. Batting cages, fielding cages, pitching cages and baseball souvenir stores are also located in the theme park.

HBJ and the Royals may appear to be mad lunatics by some, but the odds are there won't be a major league team around that doesn't wish they hadn't done it first.

As novel as the idea is, it is already starting to catch on. About 1.3 million people are expected to visit the park this year, and the Royals figure to draw an average of 5,000 fans to its 16 preseason outings in the new 6,500-seat stadium.

Boardwalk and Baseball is paradise to the players and managers of the Royals organization.

"It's like Fantasy Island," Royals Manager John Wathan said. "I keep expecting Tattoo to pop out any minute."

The new training center has three not so obvious advantages to the average visitor. It is much closer to the other training camps than Fort Myers is, and the minor league camp has been moved to Boardwalk and Baseball from Sarasota, Fla. This allows players to be summoned up from the lower ranks at a moment's notice to practice with the Royals.

Third, HBJ takes care of all the preparations like selling tickets, hiring ushers, handling the concessions stands and other odd jobs at the stadium — leaving the Royals to concentrate on baseball.

"We're the only club I know that comes to Florida just to play baseball," said team president Joe Burke. "We don't have to set up an entire baseball operation."

After negotiations with Lee County for improved facilities at the Fort Myers camp had gone nowhere, the Royals were overjoyed to be approached by HBJ to become partners in the new entertainment venture.

"When they offered it to us, we jumped at it," said Royals' general manager John Schuerholz. "After a year of disappointing negotiations with Lee County, I looked at Joe Burke and said, 'I think the guardian angel has landed.'"

The new training facility is just one more sign that the Royals are taking steps in the right direction to bring the team back to the World Series in 1988 and many years to come.

And if you happen to be in Florida during spring break, don't forget that when the beach gets old, you can always spend a day at Boardwalk and Baseball, all for the low price of $20.95.

Big 8 honors to Madsen, Miller

From Staff and Wire Reports

K-State's women's basketball team had two honorable mention selections to the All-Big Eight team released Monday.

Sophomore Janet Madsen, Elk River, Minn., and freshman Diana Miller, Hutchinson, Kan., were both honorable mention on the list.

"It's kind of a bright spot for our entire team in a dismal season to have those two recognized," K-State coach Matilda Mossman said. "They are both very deserving of the honor."

Madsen leads the team in scoring this season with 12.0 points per game and is third on the team in rebounding with 4.5 per game. She has completed 92 of 194 field goals this season and 105 of 151 free throws. Madsen has also tallied 34 assists and 40 steals. Madsen suffered a knee injury in the Lady Cats' game against Kansas and has missed their last three games. She is not expected to play Saturday in the Big Eight Conference Tournament.

The honor was somewhat of a surprise to both players.

"I guess with my knee injury, I really didn't think I'd get (the honor)," Madsen said. "I'm really grateful I got the award."

"I just came here to play basketball and didn't look forward to worrying about honors," Miller said. "(The award) really does surprise me. It keeps my confidence going."

Miller, who has started in 26 of K-State's 27 games this season, leads the team in rebounding this year. She has collected 190 rebounds for a 7.0 per game average. She is third on the team in scoring with 10.4 points per game, and is second on the team in Big Eight play with 11.4 points in Big Eight games. She has made 116 of 319 field goals and 41 of 61 shots at the charity stripe. She has also collected 58 assists and 42 steals this season.

The Lady Cats, 8-19 and 1-13 in the Big Eight, head to Salina this weekend for the Big Eight Tournament. The Lady Cats, who finished last in the conference, will play Nebraska at 2 p.m. Saturday.

Slugger 'embarrassed, wants to play ball'

Tartabull dismayed, asks for trade

By The Associated Press

HAINES CITY, Fla. — Danny Tartabull, the young slugger who is holding out for a better deal from the Kansas City Royals, says it would be embarrassing for him to come to camp now and suggests the team ought to trade him.

"If they don't feel I'm that important to their team, then send me to a team that does," said Tartabull. "My market value is very high right now. I just want to be treated fairly, so if they don't want me, trade me. I want to play ball."

General Manager John Schuerholz said there have been no trade talks involving Tartabull, adding: "They can't make us trade him."

Tartabull, who hit .309 with 34 homers and 101 runs batted in last year, could be fined if he doesn't show up by Wednesday.

"I know I'm facing fines and whatever else," he said. "I don't care. They want somebody they can jerk around. Well, they can have someone else then."

Tartabull, who made $145,000 last season, his first with the Royals and second in the majors, is asking $425,000, down from his original request for $550,000. The Royals have increased their offer by $100,000 to $325,000, and Schuerholz said if Tartabull doesn't accept that, his contract will be renewed automatically today.

Tartabull's representatives said that if the contract is renewed, it will be for only $290,000.

"I can't come into camp now," Tartabull said. "If I took that contract, it would be an embarrassment. Instead of coming to camp and being happy, I'd be coming in embarrassed. They leave me no choice but to stay at home."

Tartabull and his representatives bristle at the fact that the Royals recently offered $800,000 to Carlton Fisk, the veteran free-agent catcher, and $375,000 to another veteran, Don Baylor, who signed instead with Oakland.

Raiders hire Denver assistant as coach

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Mike Shanahan, who has been trying to beat the Los Angeles Raiders the past four years, was introduced as the club's head coach Monday and said his immediate goal was to help the team win another championship.

"It's going to be a privilege to me to keep up the tradition of a Tom Flores, a John Madden and an Al Davis, that kind of tradition and the championships that were won here," Shanahan said at a news conference. "I know these goals can be achieved. "My concern is not really with the playoffs because my standards are higher than getting into the playoffs. Our standards are to win world championships. It's been a situation of great tradition and great success. I'm going to try and add to that success."

The Raiders are the only AFC team to win a Super Bowl in the 1980s, having accomplished the feat following the 1980 and 1983 seasons. But the club has missed the playoffs the last two years, going 8-8 and 5-10, respectively.

The Broncos, aided by offensive coordinator Shanahan, won the AFC West championship the last two years and advanced to the Super Bowl, while the Raiders finished well down in the standings.

The Raiders' record last year was their poorest since 1962. Flores announced his retirement as head coach on Jan. 20 at the age of 50 after nine years on the job. His teams were 83-53 in regular-season games.

Flores had succeeded Madden, whose teams were 103-32-7 in 10 years and won the Super Bowl following the 1976 season.

"It's indeed a great honor and a privilege to be the head coach of the Los Angeles Raiders," Shanahan said, adding that he signed a three-year contract to coach the team.

Shanahan, who at age 35 becomes the youngest head coach in the NFL, was an assistant under Dan Reeves at Denver the past four seasons and served as the Broncos' offensive coordinator for the past three.

"His record while at Denver is synonymous with greatness," Davis said. "You have to respect what's been going on in Denver the last few years. We certainly respect it. I was looking for an excellent coach."

Aerosmith brings fans to their feet

By Judd Annis
Collegian Reviewer

Wednesday night's Aerosmith/Dokken concert in the Kansas Coliseum provided fans with a closer look at a classic rock group and a newer metal band under the same roof.

Aerosmith, candidates for comeback group and rock album of the year, showed the near-sell-out crowd that the members are rock veterans on stage as well as in the studio.

Without wasting time, the band dusted off its collection of good-time classics, starting the show rolling with "Same Old Song and Dance" and "Big Ten Inch Record." Looking in top form, lead singer Steven Tyler then led the band into newer material with "Rag Doll" and "Magic Touch" from its latest album "Permanent Vacation."

Concert Review

Aerosmith proved its '70s hard-rock style is still top-notch, with favorites like "Back In The Saddle" and "Home Sweet Home." "Dream On," a contender for the night's best song, was the most demanding of Tyler's voice as he hit the song's unforgettable wailing screams right on the money. The crowd, holding blazing lighters overhead throughout the song, thoroughly enjoyed his effort.

Aerosmith's last song of the set was its recent hit, "Dude (Looks Like A Lady)," which peaked crowd response and brought everyone to their feet.

Answering shouts for more, Aerosmith returned to the stage with "Sweet Emotion," highlighting bassist Tom Hamilton, whose pulsing sound kept the band solid all night. The final encore song was a jazzy version of "Walk This Way," featuring Tyler doing front handsprings across the stage.

Aerosmith's past success and strong comeback is due partly to Tyler's raspy blues-style singing and his dynamic stage presence. Making use of elevated walkways on either side of the stage and a catwalk behind drummer Joey Kramer, Tyler galloped from ramp to ramp and shuffled to the beat when at center stage.

The dual assault of guitarists Brad Whitford and legendary Joe Perry was impressive all night, from Whitford's screaming solo on "Permanent Vacation" to Perry's wailing riffs on "Home Sweet Home." Perry got his chance to have some fun with the audience during the encore, playing a rock version of the theme from "The Avengers," which put a grin on every face.

Lead act Dokken got an enthusiastic response from the crowd for its show, despite an average performance. Opening with "Kiss Of Death" from its latest album, the band performed a sampling of songs from its last three albums within the 45-minute set.

Lead singer Don Dokken handled the vocals well, although the band's sound mix was muffled and failed to do justice to its album sound. By the time they played "Into The Fire" and an encore of "Just Got Lucky" and "In My Dreams," however, Dokken had sufficiently warmed up.

Students have been flooded with credit card application forms lately, as companies try to sign up likely college graduates.

Students offered credit cards

Companies using campus directories

By Patrice Macan
Collegian Reporter

While some might think college students aren't a good credit risk, many credit card companies do — just check the mailbox.

American Express recently sent out applications to coincide with the company's calendar year which began in January, said Betsy Ludlow, vice president of personal card acquisition with American Express in New York.

With the beginning of the year, she said, the company receives a new mailing list with students' names.

Ludlow said that most of these lists are obtained through student directories, student subscriptions and other on-campus sources of information.

The applications are sent only to students who are enrolled at four-year universities, because the company wants upper-level students to apply, she said.

Gunile Devault, assistant registrar at K-State, said she doesn't know how companies acquire lists of students. She said that to her knowledge, no companies have made a request for a student list.

In addition, Devault said it is against the University's policy to give or sell a list of students to any group that isn't in some way associated with the University.

Student Publications Inc. publishes the campus directory.

Dave Adams, director of Student Publications Inc., said the directory is a public record.

He said credit card companies have requested a campus directory, but Student Publications Inc. did not sell it to them. The directory has, however, been sold to various other organizations.

"If it were us (where the companies get their lists) via the campus directory, the only solution would be to not sell it at all. I suppose that would make a lot of people mad," Adams said.

Ludlow said American Express will be mailing additional charge applications in March or April, after the company receives more current student lists.

College Credit Card Corp. in Philadelphia markets 30 to 40 credit cards nationally on more than 1,000 campuses.

Meredith Naples, vice president of College Credit Card Corp., said Macys, Dillards, Sears, Amoco, and Citibank Mastercard and Visa are just a few of the companies it represents.

To obtain a credit card, Naples said, students must fill out a special application and provide a valid student ID. The application is then checked by College Credit Card Corp. to ensure that it is complete. However, all final decisions on granting credit are made by each company, Naples said.

"The applications are designed for the lifestyles of students. Therefore, they get special consideration by each and every credit grantor," she said. "They (the companies) have their own set of criteria, but students have the best chance of being approved through the program."

Richard Morey, product manager of credit card marketing of Amoco in Chicago, said Amoco begins mailing applications as soon as it gets the new student lists.

Morey would not disclose the number of applications sent out; however, he did say more applications are packaged to be sent out about March 15.

"They (student lists) are compiled by companies. That is their business — not only for colleges, but they also work with credit bureaus. In this case, they work with the college administrators, and they first have to get a directory of the students," Morey said.

Amoco works with College Credit Card Corp., but strictly with its on-campus programs, Morey said. Amoco does another mailing on its own.

Gerry Paden, senior in marketing, said the applications he has received are often a waste of his time.

"I get applications for cards I already have, and in my opinion that's just bad management," Paden said.

Doubling up like that shouldn't happen, Morey said.

"If that happens, it's an error, because whatever mailings we get are merged against a pre-existing file," he said.

Despite this, a student's name may be listed with the company in different ways, resulting in more than one file, Morey said.

Of those applications that are pre-approved, Morey said a majority of the students actually receive the card.

"If they turn it in complete and legible — so that everything can be read — then 100 percent will get the card," Morey said.

Date rape program offered by Chimes

By Angela Hale
Collegian Reporter

The scenario: The man is a college basketball player. He meets a woman at a party where they talk and get to know each other. They leave around midnight to go back to his dorm room. Later in court, the woman claims she was raped. The man says she consented.

Although the preceding scene, from an episode of NBC's "L.A. Law," is fiction, members of Chimes Junior Honorary will be showing it in an attempt to educate students about the reality and dangers of acquaintance rape.

Susan Scott, associate dean of student life and former Chimes adviser, defines acquaintance rape as "a woman sexually assaulted by a man known to her."

Chimes' program is designed to inform students that date rape is a growing national problem, said Theron Krizek, junior in agricultural economics and service chairman for Chimes.

The members chose the clip from the television show because it sets the stage for the program and makes a point, he said. It is intended to spark discussion during the program.

The clip will be shown at 6:30 tonight at the Sigma Nu house. It will also be shown Thursday night at 6:30 at the Fiji house and 7:30 at the Alpha Xi Delta house as part of the Chimes program.

Since the programs will be given at greek houses, Scott hopes to be able to reach some students who have not attended programs like this before. Chimes is not planning to offer the program to residence halls since the halls have already had similar programs, she said.

The survivor of a date rape may experience fear, insecurity, sexual disfunction and loss of trust, Scott said.

"They (survivors) can't trust their instincts about who is a friend and who isn't," she said.

Phil Kirk, junior in agricultural economics and president of Chimes, said the Panhellenic Council and the Interfraternity Council were receptive to the film, and he hopes Chimes will continue to offer the program next year.

Chimes members attended a training session given by Scott while planning the program. During the session, Scott said she explained the seriousness of date rape and the services available to help victims.

Scott said Chimes was selected to sponsor the program because it is an honorary, service organization.

Also, she said, students teaching students seems to be effective.

Political satirist states views on Reagan, CIA and advertising

By The Collegian Staff

Dave Lippman, a comedian, political activist and folk singer, was featured Monday night in a presentation sponsored by Students in Solidarity with Central America in the Union Catskeller.

Lippman's act consisted of two characters: George Schrub, the anti-folk singer, and Dave Lippman, the activist folk singer. Schrub, who is from the CIA (Committee to Intervene Anywhere), was used by Lippman to present a satirical look at Reagan and the CIA.

Lippman's witty look at modern society included songs from folk to pop as well as anecdotes of subjects ranging from Nancy Reagan's war on drugs to the methods of modern advertising.

Lippman said it is important to analyze society.

"The nature of our society has people being trained primarily for jobs that they cannot really hold without being total airheads," he said.

Advertising is one of these jobs, he said.

"(Advertising) is a method to entrap you and to make you stupid," he said. "It has succeeded with me. I'm not as smart as I used to be because I watch too many ads.

"Advertising is to make you think that by buying a product you will be happy," he said. "There should be a book that tells you the relative merits of the different products, and they shouldn't spend billions of dollars competing for your attention, making you generally sick."

Lippman has had several records and tapes released, one of which was banned from Yugoslavian television. He sang several songs, such as "Comin' on 1981" and "Nice Car," which helped establish Lippman's character as a political satirist.

Saturday and remained in hiding Monday, defying Noriega's order that he leave the country.

Along downtown's Central Avenue on Monday, more than 80 percent of the stores were open. Some businesses kept shutters or security grates pulled down over show windows, but their doors were open and clients came and went.

Some Panamanian banks were closed, but international banks were open, as were government offices.

The strike call was issued Friday by the National Civic Crusade, an alliance of 200 political, labor, professional and business groups that has been campaigning since June for Noriega's ouster. Opposition leaders say they want the strike to last until Noriega steps down.

After his dismissal by the Legislative Assembly, Delvalle also called for a nationwide strike.

Opening his shop downtown, the owner of a candy store said he did not support the strike because he distrusts the Civic Crusade.

"It's not that we support Noriega," he said. "But who are these others? Oligarchs who robbed Panama for 60 years."

He said Noriega's regime was "corrupt, like all goverments. But it has understood better than previous goverments the needs of the small businessman. I prefer to remain with a known evil than risk myself with these others."

Panama Canal authorities said operation of the waterway was "completely normal."

The stoppage was supported by the Industrial Workers' Union of Panama and most factories in the industrial zone were closed.

Raul Arias, spokesman for the Christian Democratic Party, a member of the Crusade, contended construction work was completely halted. Most sites were indeed idle, although there were a few exceptions.

When asked by The Associated Press, he did not concede the measure's failure. But he also said, "Its success would be difficult to put into a percentage figure."

In commercial zones, pedestrian traffic was only slightly less than that of an average working day.

Buses full of people circulated normally early Monday.

Bus companies are privately owned, but several high-ranking military officers have financial interests in them.

The pro-government newspaper Critica blared in a red-ink banner headline, "A Closed Business is a Taken-over Business."

Police Chief Col. Leonidas Macias told journalists hungry people might understandably try to loot a closed supermarket, and his forces would not try to prevent them. Supermarkets, like the great majority of businesses, were open.

watch the proceedings on television. He told reporters that he remained optimistic.

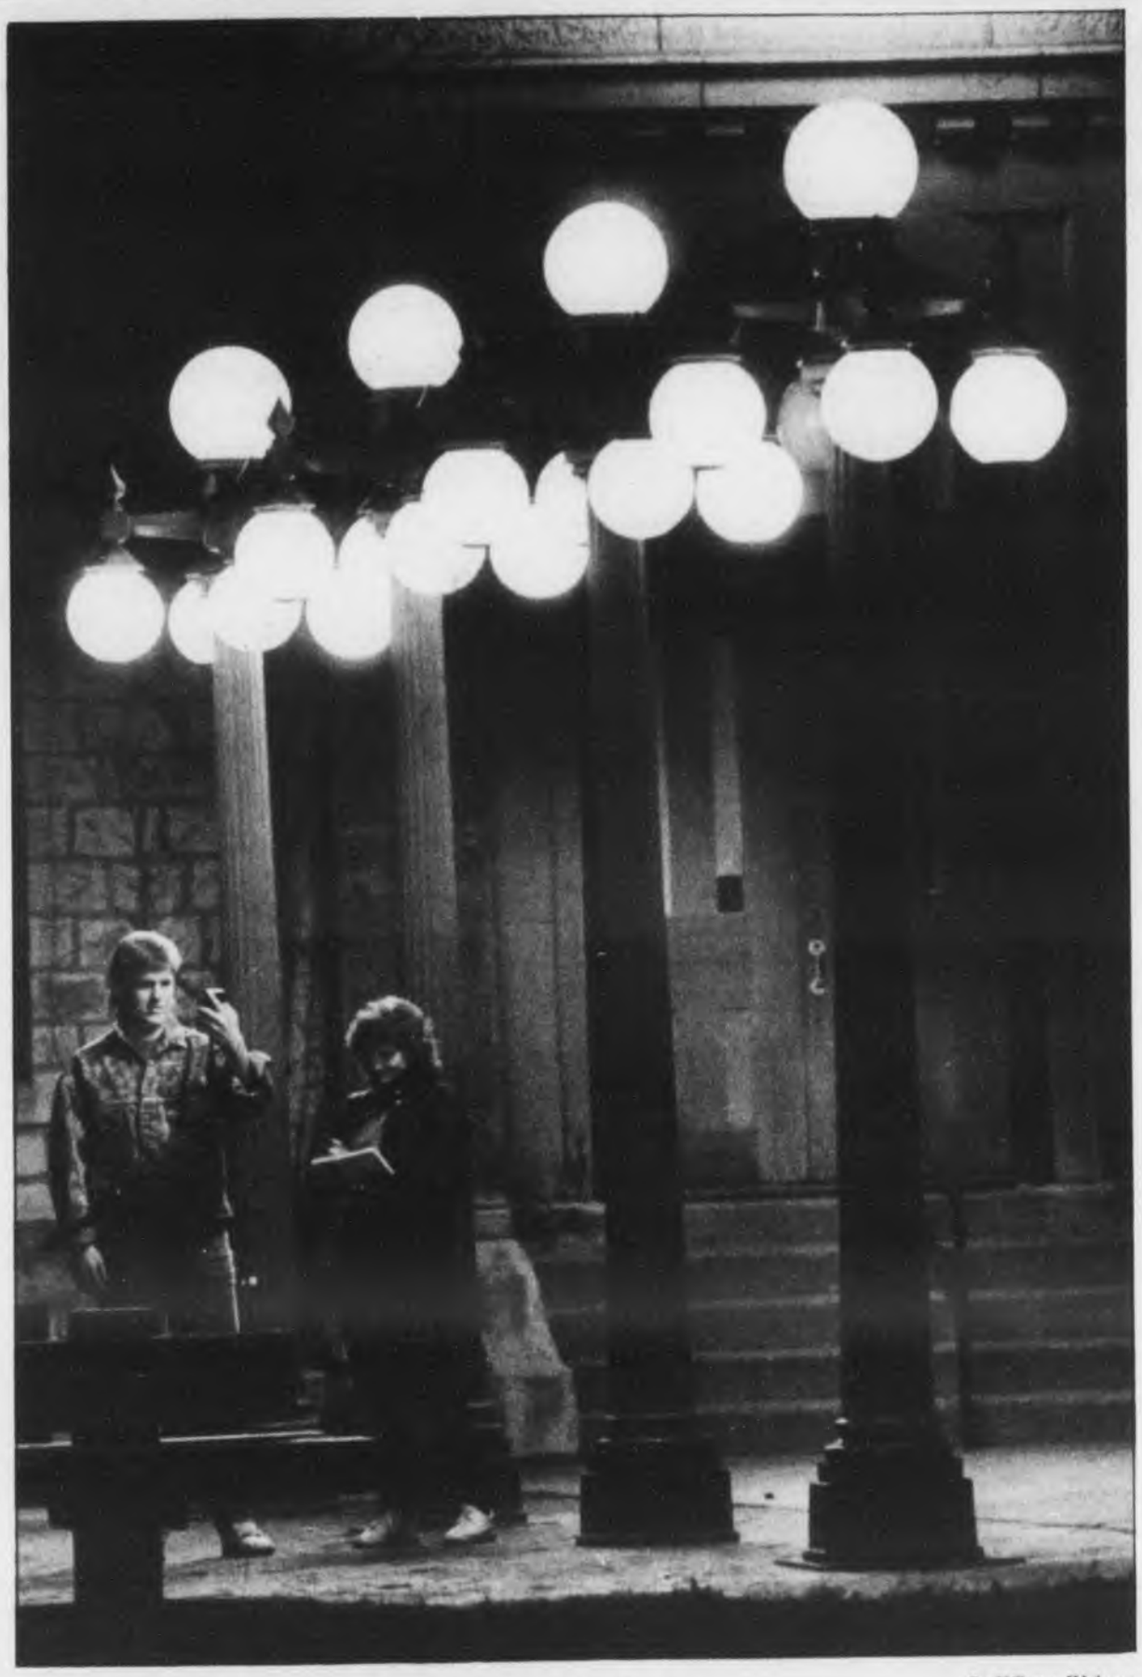
"I remain convinced that if I receive a fair trial, the truth will prevail and I will be acquitted," Mecham said.

Of his absence from the trial, he said, "When my attorneys tell me to be there I'll be there."

His absence was not mentioned during the proceedings on the Senate floor.

Following Monday's session, Sen. Jeff Hill, a Republican who once strongly backed Mecham, said that judging from the heavy vote against him on dismissal, things looked bad for the governor.

"I think it's not likely he's going to prevail," he said.



Mecham, a political outsider, has drawn criticism for comments which critics considered slurs against blacks, homosexuals, Jews and the Japanese. He spurred controversy by eliminating the state's Martin Luther King holiday on his second day in office and defending an author's use of the word "pickaninny" in a history book.

Leonard, who took over Mecham's defense only last week, addressed his major concern to Mecham's failure to report the $350,000 loan. He challenged the senators to recall whether they themselves hadn't committed similar acts and accused them of putting the governor to a stricter test than other officials.

"The rules of the game have been changed overnight," Leonard said. He contended Mecham should have been given a second chance to amend his disclosure forms.

Eckstein responded that he was "in no small amount of shock" at such an argument.

"That's commonplace?" he said. "God save us all. And if it is commonplace, that conduct must be offensive to the people as a whole."

Bush, Dukakis win in Vermont

By The Associated Press

MONTPELIER, Vt. — George Bush, extending his New England winning streak, defeated Bob Dole Tuesday night in the Vermont Republican presidential primary. Michael Dukakis won easily among the Democrats, with Jesse Jackson the runner-up in "the whitest state in America."

In the low-stakes tuneup for Super Tuesday, Vice President Bush was picking up 49 percent of the Republican vote to 40 percent for Dole. Dukakis had 55 percent of the Democratic vote and Jackson 27 percent.

Gary Hart, the big winner here in 1984, was dead last.

"It's terrific, we're rolling 'em up," Dukakis enthused. Gov. Madeleine Kunin, a supporter, said, "I think it will give him a big boost before Super Tuesday. The wide margin is really a shot in the arm."

The elections were "beauty-contest" primaries. Vermont's national convention delegates won't be apportioned until next month in party caucuses, and the candidates have practically ignored the state to concentrate on the South. The primary took place on Town Meeting Day when Vermont's 328,466 voters decided town budgets, road repairs and a host of other local issues.

Jackson was runner-up to Dukakis for the third time in two weeks — trailing the Massachusetts governor previously in Minnesota and Maine. From his mother's home in Greenville, S.C., he looked forward to next week's showdown in his native South.

"We have found the common chord that is linking the American people, whether they are in Iowa or Maine or New Hampshire or Mississippi," Jackson said. "... This is a referendum on economic violence. People who are unemployed are rebelling. People who have jobs are insecure. People feel abandoned by the government."

"We are the whitest state in America (1,139 blacks at last count)," said Burlington Mayor Bernard Sanders, who had endorsed Jackson. "I think it's an extraordinary showing."

"It shows people ... think it is safe to vote for him now," said Jackson supporter Liz Blum. "People are starting to think he's electable."

Bush had the strongest Republican organization, but Dole was helped by endorsements from Sen. Robert Stafford, Rep. James Jeffords and former Gov. Richard Snelling. Pat Robertson and Rep. Jack Kemp put up little effort and lagged far behind the GOP front-runners.

Steve Watson of the Bush campaign said, "In some of the northern towns, where I expected Dole to have strength because of the farm issue, we have done well. We are cautiously optimistic."

With 77 percent of Vermont's precincts reporting, Bush had 15,855 votes for 49 percent, compared to Dole at 12,969 and 40 percent. Robertson, whose supporters said they were focusing on the April caucuses, had 5 percent and Kemp had 4 percent. Dropout Pete du Pont had 1.6 percent.

Bush had established his standing in New England with a dramatic victory in New Hampshire over Dole and a victory over Robertson in the Maine caucuses. Despite his strength in the caucus process, Robertson has yet to make inroads in a primary election.

"We had virtually no organization in Vermont," Robertson said. "It was just a few delegates. I'm down here campaigning in the South. That's all that matters."

Dukakis had 20,026 votes for 56 percent and Jackson had 9,714 votes for 27 percent. Rep. Richard Gephardt, who visited the state several times, had 8 percent of the vote and Sen. Paul Simon, who made no real effort, had 6 percent. Hart had 3.7 percent, and Sen. Albert Gore Jr. was not on the ballot.

State unemployment rate increases

From Staff and Wire Reports

TOPEKA — The state's unemployment rate increased for the fourth consecutive month in January, as seasonal job losses pushed the figure up a half-percent, to 5.6 percent, the state Department of Human Resources reported Tuesday.

Riley county had an unemployment rate of 4.5.

However, Tom Whalen, general manager for the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, said although he had not yet seen the report, the rate was up only about three-tenths of 1 percent.

"I sometimes have to convince businesses who look at our unemployment rate that we do have people to work for them," he said.

Whalen attributed the state-wide increases to the bad but usual winter weather.

"January is usually a bad month. Construction jobs tail off, and road construction comes to a halt," he said.

Unemployment has been increasing steadily in the state since October, when the reported jobless rate was 4.3 percent. It was 4.7 percent in November and 5.1 percent in December.

However, the agency also said the unemployment rate was significantly lower than it was a year ago, when it was reported at 6.3 percent.

The agency reported decreases in January for the number of jobs in "weather-sensitive" industries, such as agriculture and construction. The agency also reported decreases in the number of manufacturing and government jobs.

"January often has the highest unemployment rate and the lowest

Moon accepts Marshall job

File/Brad Fanshier

Lee Moon, K-State associate athletic director since 1985, was named athletic director at Marshall University in Huntington, W.Va.

From Staff and Wire Reports

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. — K-State's associate athletic director Lee Moon was named Marshall University's athletic director on Tuesday.

"Lee Moon has had some excellent experience at Kansas State, including dealing successfully with an athletic department which was having budget problems," MU President Dale Nitzschke said.

Moon said he was fully informed of Marshall's financial problems before he accepted the athletic director's job, and said he has faced such problems successfully before.

"I've stayed and fought, and I'm not about to change," Moon said, adding that he planned to stay in Huntington, at least until his fourth-grade son is ready for bigger athletic challenges.

"I wouldn't think about leaving Marshall until my sons are old enough to get into high school," Moon said. "I want them to grow up in a quality community, and I think Huntington is a quality place."

Moon said he had been a candidate for the position since January. According to The Parthenon, Marshall's campus newspaper, Moon was not among a group of three finalists originally recommended for the position by a nine-member selection committee. He came into consideration for the job when James C. Weaver, athletic director at the University of Florida-Gainesville and the committee's first choice, withdrew his name from consideration for "personal reasons."

Moon said he received a call from Nitzschke Feb. 23 asking if he was still interested in the job. He traveled to Huntington and was interviewed Feb. 24 and 25, and returned Monday to accept the position, which was announced Tuesday.

"I'm extremely proud and excited to take over the reigns as the athletic director at Marshall University," Moon said.

"This speaks well for Kansas State University," he added. "People recognize what a tough job K-State is, and they recognize what

State products have 'homemade' image at Bloomingdale's

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Kansas may present a "homemade" image when its products go on display this spring in Bloomingdale's department stores in New York, Washington and five other states, but Gov. Mike Hayden said Tuesday the state is grateful for the chance to show its wares.

Two Bloomingdale's representatives were at the Statehouse for a news conference at which the governor thanked the store publicly for selecting 52 Kansas companies to display their products in May and June.

One of the store's spokesmen, Ray Fisher, was asked what sort of image Kansas would present to his company's sophisticated clientele when its variety of foodstuffs, crafts and art works go on display in all Bloomingdale stores for six weeks starting May 10.

"Probably homemade," Fisher replied.

He said he wasn't being derogatory, but that Bloomingdale's is looking for unusual products to introduce to its customers, and in recent years it has invited merchants of other states and foreign countries to do the same thing Kansas is doing this year.

Kansas is the fifth state chosen to display its products in Bloomingdale's 16 stores in New York, Massachusetts, Pennslyvania, Florida, Texas and the District of Columbia. Other states chosen have been Vermont, Maine, Louisiana and Oregon.

"They want natural foods and unique things they've not been exposed to," Hayden told reporters. "Bloomingdale's customers are pretty sophisticated. The fact they chose Kansas to display our products means they think their customers will buy these products."

The other Bloomingdale's spokesman, Tom Saporita, said not only will the Kansas products be displayed and sold, but the store will have a series of exhi-

Demonstrators mock police

WARSAW, Poland — Authorities in southwestern Poland detained 20 people for a march in which demonstrators wore hats, black raincoats and dark glasses to mock secret security police, an opposition activist said.

The event in downtown Warsaw was staged by the opposition group Orange Alternative, which often uses satire to poke fun at Poland's communist government.

Spokesman Jozef Pinior said young men dressed in traditional spy garb and sporting arm bands with the letters "SB," the Polish initials for Security Service, evoked laughter from onlookers.

After about a half-hour, they were intercepted by real police and 20 were taken into custody, he said. Authorities began releasing them shortly afterward, he said.

In the past, Orange Alternative demonstrators have donned Santa Claus outfits and costumes of Lenten penitents to mock the government's economic policies.

Moslem kidnappers free two

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Moslem kidnappers freed two Scandinavian relief workers Tuesday, nearly a month after they had been kidnapped in southern Lebanon, and left a note saying the hostages were "proved innocent."

Swede Jan Stening, 44, and Norwegian William Jorgensen, 58, employees of the U.N. Relief and Works Agency, were released in Sidon, 25 miles south of Beirut.

Norwegian Charge d'Affaires Peter Raeder told The Associated Press, "I saw them. They looked a little bit pale but in fairly good condition."

Reporters in Sidon said the U.N. workers were freed at 8 p.m. and turned over to Salah Salah, a representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Stening and Jorgensen were abducted near Sidon on Feb. 5. Their release reduced the number of foreign hostages held by extremists in Lebanon to 23.

Reagan in Belgium for summit

BRUSSELS, Belgium — President Reagan, urging Western solidarity in arms talks with the Soviets, arrived Tuesday for the first NATO summit in six years.

After Air Force One touched down on the tarmac at Brussels Zavantem Airport in windy conditions, Reagan was reunited with Secretary of State George Shultz, who had arrived from London, and met briefly with Belgian officials.

In a gesture of reassurance given in a departure statement Tuesday morning at the White House, Reagan pledged that American troops will remain in Europe "so long as Europeans want them to stay."

He also promised to protect NATO's interests in any arms deals with the Soviet Union. "We will never sacrifice the interests of this partnership in any agreement with the Soviet Union," he said.

After stepping down the ramp from his Boeing 707 jetliner, Reagan smiled and chatted amiably as he was greeted by Shultz.

Cyanide spill closes highway

CARSON CITY, Nev. — Sodium cyanide pellets were spilled on a snowy section of Interstate 80 because of a truck wreck, and nearly 100 miles of the highway was shut down as a small amount of deadly cyanide gas formed.

A nearby rail line crossing the unpopulated area was also closed for a time.

State Motor Vehicles Director Wayne Teglia said a tractor-trailer rig overturned seven miles east of Battle Mountain, injuring the driver and spilling about 100 pounds of pellets.

Some gas formed when the pellets, used in mining operations, reacted with the wet snow, Teglia said.

"If it had been raining it would have been worse," said Teglia.

He said clean-up crews from the trucking company, Wells Cargo, and a mining company were dispatched to clean up the spill.

Official warns against teen sex

WASHINGTON — Surgeon General C. Everett Koop told a White House panel Tuesday he is concerned about the spread of the AIDS virus among teen-agers and expressed outrage at suggestions the disease cannot be spread through heterosexual intercourse.

Reiterating his call for sex education programs beginning at the elementary grade levels, Koop said, "I think it is quite possible to raise a generation of adolescents down the road that would be far less sexually active than the present one."

He emphasized that such programs should involve parents and incorporate moral and social values along with anatomical studies.

Texan wins Miss USA — again

EL PASO, Texas — Courtney Gibbs became the fourth Texan in a row to win the Miss USA crown Tuesday, besting Miss California in the nationally televised pageant.

"It feels fabulous," Gibbs, 21, said moments after being crowned by her predecessor and fellow Texan, Michelle Royer. "One of the gifts Michelle gave me was a dictionary with the word 'impossible' whited out. So of course it was possible."

Gibbs, of Fort Worth, won the right to compete in the Miss Universe pageant May 23 in Taiwan. Royer, of Keller, came in third in last year's worldwide competition, which was won by Miss Chile.

The blue-eyed brunette, a junior in advertising and public relations at Texas Christian University, won over Diana Magana, 22, of Rancho Palos Verdes, Calif., the first runner-up.

Second runner-up was Miss Georgia, Donna Rampy, 24, followed by Miss Florida, Monica Bruni Farrell, 23, and Miss Mississippi, Dana Michele Richmond, 20.

Actress Tracy Scoggins and actor Alan Thicke served as co-hosts for the program, televised by CBS. Ten semifinalists, who had been chosen last week, were announced as the pageant opened Tuesday night.

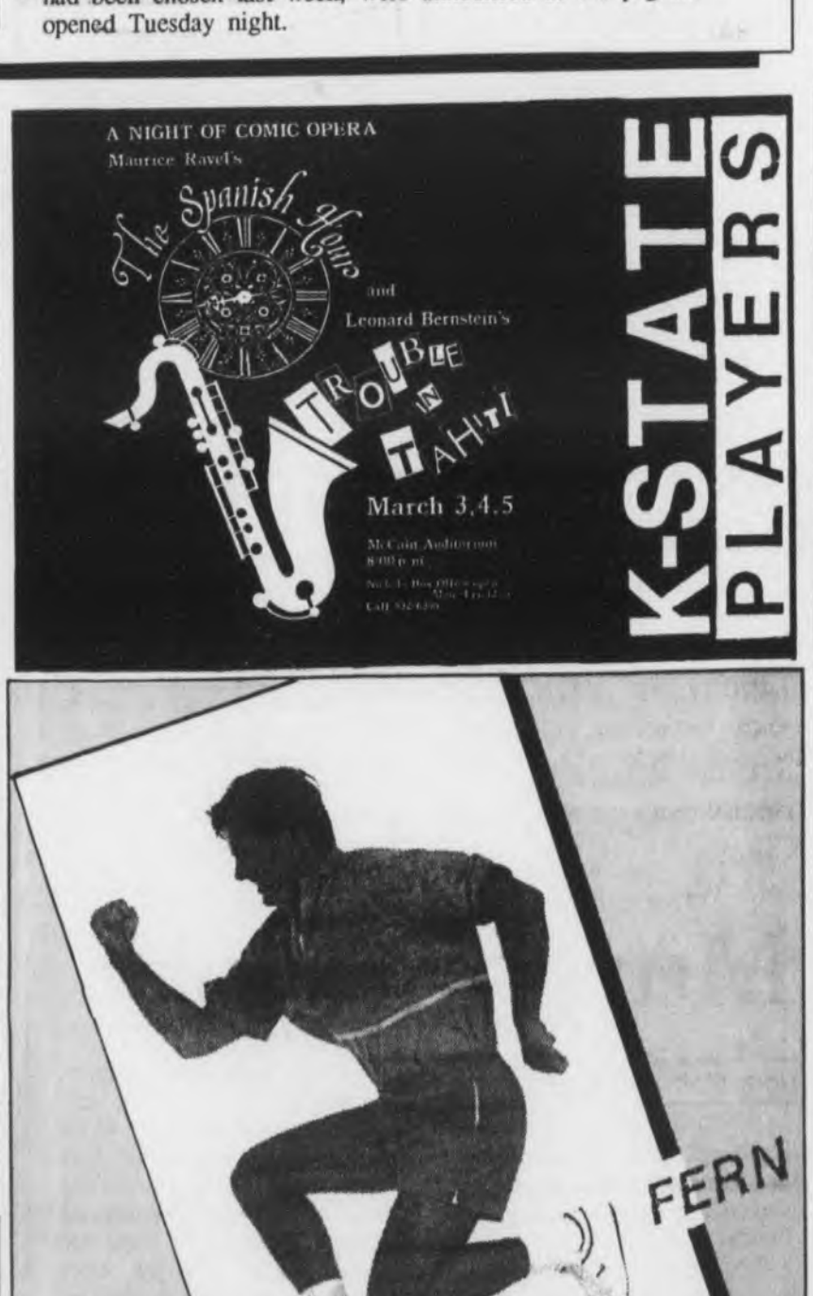
Students chosen as interns

Three engineering students will spend 10 weeks in Washington, D.C., this summer learning how engineers contribute to public policy decisions on complex technological matters.

Sheila Hayter, junior in mechanical engineering, Kim Warner and Deborah Tauscher, both juniors in industrial engineering, were selected in the nationwide competition for the Washington Internships for Students of Engineering.



The students were selected on their leadership skills and interest in public issues. They will receive college credit for the experience.

Acid rain pollutants could cause cancer

Untested theory may explain elevated rates

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The pollutants that cause acid rain may be indirectly responsible for elevated rates of colon cancer in parts of the United States, researchers said Tuesday.

The theory, which has not yet been tested, is an attempt to explain why colon cancer and other cancers are more common in the north central and northeastern United States than in other parts of the country, said Cedric Garland of the University of California, San Diego and his brother Frank of the Naval Health Research Center in San Diego.

According to their theory, sulfur dioxide, one of the principal contributors to acid rain, absorbs certain ultraviolet rays in sunlight that trigger the skin to produce vitamin D. Studies by Cedric Garland and others have suggested that vitamin D may help protect against colon cancer.

The Garlands, who described their research at a press conference Tuesday morning and at an afternoon symposium at the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York, said that vitamin D aids the absorption of calcium, and that calcium and vitamin D together appear to lower the risk of colon cancer.

Dr. Martin Lipkin of Sloan-Kettering said that the Garlands' theory "is a legitimate theory" and work is in progress to clarify the role of vitamin D and calcium in colon cancer.

"We're looking into how many individuals might be benefited by calcium — and the degree to which they might be," said Lipkin. Two years ago he showed that calcium supplements could change the growth of cells in the colons of people at high risk of colon cancer and might, therefore, lower colon cancer risk.

Regina Ziegler of the National Cancer Institute in Bethesda, Md., an authority on diet and cancer, cautioned that because this was only a theory people should not begin taking vitamin D supplements to protect against colon cancer.

"People have trouble distinguishing theories from proven effects," she said. "With evidence such as this, you certainly don't want to start taking large doses of vitamin D. Vitamin D in high doses can be hazardous to your health."

The Garlands' explanation is not the only theory to explain why colon cancer rates are highest in the north central and northeastern states.

"Other people have hypothesized that increased exercise, increased fruit and vegetable intake and differences in drinking water may lead to the lower incidence in the south," said Ziegler.

The Garlands also cautioned that people should not spend more time in the sun to increase their vitamin D production, because exposure to sunlight increases the risk of skin cancer. They suggested, instead, that people eat foods high in vitamin D, which include anchovies, sardines, salmon and tuna. Milk is fortified with vitamin D, but many other dairy products are not, they said.

Breast cancer also occurs at an increased rate in the areas where colon cancer is highest, and the Garlands suggested that breast cancer, too, might be indirectly related to sulfur dioxide in the atmosphere. That theory is more speculative than the colon cancer theory, Frank Garland said.

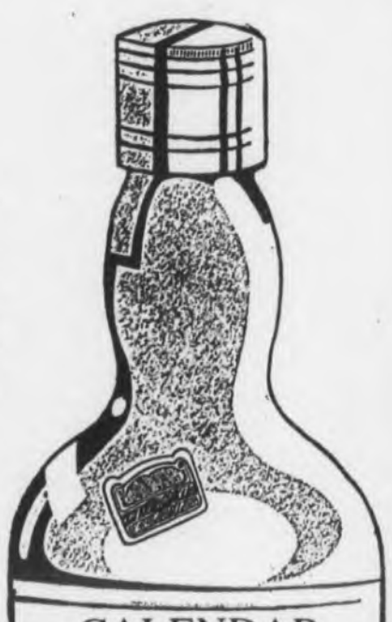
U.S. still chastising Panama for leaders' drug involvement

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration on Tuesday added Panama to the list of countries ineligible for aid because of its poor anti-drug efforts, and said 1988 would be a boom year for cocaine production in Peru and Colombia because of ineffective crop-killing programs.

In its annual report on the international drug situation, the State Department found major faults with drug programs in Mexico and Colombia, but stopped short of placing them among countries that have suffered aid cutbacks.

The administration, citing national security considerations, also declined to list Lebanon, Paraguay and Laos among nations not doing enough to stop drugs.



Laos was kept off the list out of concern that a condemnation would harm U.S. efforts to win Laotian help in accounting for more than 500 U.S. servicemen listed as missing there after the Vietnam War, said Ann Wrobleski, assistant secretary of state for internatonal narcotics matters.

Under a law designed to help Congress decide who deserves U.S. assistance, President Reagan is required to certify each year that countries are taking proper steps to stop drug production and trafficking.

Wrobleski told a news conference that Panama was denied certification this year because its military chief and de-facto leader, Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, was indicted on drug conspiracy charges by a U.S. grand jury.

"Panama has been a drug traffickers' and money launderers' haven," she said.

Panama will not lose U.S. aid as a result of Tuesday's action because its assistance from the United States already has been cut.

Christianity shouldn't suffer because of sleazy evangelists

Commentary

WALLY BROCKHOFF
Collegian Columnist

"Preacher man talking on TV, puttin' down the rock 'n' roll. Wants me to send a donation, says he's worried about my soul. Now Jesus walked on the water, and I know that it's true. But sometimes I think that preacher man would like to do a little walkin' too."

Long-time country music fans might recognize these lyrics from Charlie Daniels' song "Longhaired Country Boy." For those who only associate Daniels with Skoal advertisements and "The Devil Went Down to Georgia," you might be surprised to learn that Daniels has been making music for many years — music that is very often perceptive in interpreting how politics affect people.

"Longhaired Country Boy" has always been one of my favorite songs, and the lines I quoted are my favorite ones in the song because they are so true. The amazing thing is that the lines were written in 1974, yet they have never been more true than today.

The public's awareness of TV evangelists has never been greater than it is today. The Jim and Tammy Faye Bakker scandal, Oral Roberts' appeal for money to prevent being "called home," Pat Robertson's presidential campaign, Jerry Falwell's unsuccessful libel suit against Hustler magazine and, most recently, Jimmy Swaggart's indiscretions have all contributed to an increased — if somewhat notorious — visibility for TV evangelists.

These blunders have made for easy pickings by satirists like David Letterman, Johnny Carson and a multitude of others. And rightly so. Acts like those committed by the evangelists are both wrong and inappropriate for individuals who, according to themselves, are "chosen by God."

This is not to say that there are not good examples. One who comes to mind is crusader Billy Graham. Instead of looking for personal glory, he is sincere and dedicated to spreading the word of God, and more power to him. What I do not understand is why we have to put up with the bozos also.

This is not an attempt to be judgmental of the TV evangelists I have mentioned, for then I would be putting myself in their shoes. Besides, it is not the role of any person to be judgmental of those around them. However, as a life-long student of the Bible, I have to wonder how the Bakkers' amusement park and mansion meshes with the teaching in the Bible that says, "It is harder for a rich man to see the kingdom of God than for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle," or how Robertson's personal attacks on Jack Kemp in the New Hampshire primary emulate with the Biblical teaching to "not speak ill of thy neighbor." (Maybe it's because Kemp does not live next door to Robertson's Virginia Beach mansion!) Furthermore, I do not feel that I am alone in these thoughts, and many other Christians look at the evangelists and wonder also.

The Bakkers, the Falwells, the Roberts, the Robertsons and the Swaggarts assume a responsibility when they become public representatives of the Christian faith, a role they have failed at miserably. Each individual on this earth has to answer for his or her own actions on a one-on-one basis, including our jolly evangelists. That does not bother me as much as the image it gives Christianity and the ammunition it provides to those who would tear it down.

I would challenge anyone to count the number of articles, political cartoons and jokes that have been made about the evangelists in the last year. Suffice it to say, it is a high number. Pesonally, I think they are hilarious, but only when taken as a parody of the individual and not when used as an indictment of the mission the evangelists are trying to achieve, albeit in a poor way.

Too often, I have seen the acts of the evangelists used as justification for tearing down Christianity as a whole. Their actions are great examples for atheistic liberals who would characterize all Christians as pompous hypocrites who are "fundamentalist freaks." The real shame is that these very perceptions of Christianity keep some people from finding out what the faith is truly all about.

Robertson's campaign rhetoric is right: There is something very wrong with the moral structure of America. However, he should "remove the log in his own eye before pointing out the splinter in his brother's eye." Maybe then the evangelists would be more understanding of "Longhaired Country Boys."

K-State athletes help children, community

Athletes just aren't what they used to be.

Once upon a time, people used to think of athletes as dumb jocks who have a selfish "me-first" attitude. That image is finally changing, thanks to an increasing commitment to academics and programs that allow athletes to make contributions to the community.

A good example of this is the recent drug awareness program in which 40 top intercollegiate athletes from K-State are participating. These students have volunteered to go out on their own time to schools in the area and talk about the dangers of drugs.

The student-athletes go out in pairs, along with an adviser trained in the effects of drug abuse, and present a program to the school children using skits and distributing purple, "Just say no!" buttons. The skits are designed to help children understand drug abuse on their level.

The advantages of this program are significant. College athletes, who are often regarded as people who are practically famous, are often respected by grade school children. Thus, when these athletes come into the classroom to talk about the dangers of drug abuse, children are more likely to listen.

This program not only aids the children in the community, but it also enhances the image of student-athletes at K-State. It proves to the community that K-State is an active member of the neighborhood and willing to take responsibility for trying to stop some of the social problems.

The coordinators of this program, and especially those athletes who have participated, should be commended.

Drunk-driving device not a foolproof savior

People who are intoxicated soon may no longer have to decide whether to drive. Their cars may decide for them. Actually, the ignition interlock device, a recent innovation, would make the decision.

A bill, which would require the installation of one of these devices in the car of anyone convicted of drunk driving, was considered by the state's Senate Judiciary Committee Friday. The bill was presented by the senators as a way to further enforce drunk driving penalties.

The senators who proposed the legislation see it as a workable alternative to jail, especially because people convicted of drunk driving frequently return to court after being arrested for driving on suspended licenses.

The device, which would cost $500 to rent for a year (more than likely at the expense of taxpayers), requires a driver to breathe into a tube three times. If a driver fails the test, a red light on the machine turns on and the ignition will not work.

The driver can retake the test twice. If the driver fails all three times, the system shuts down for 45 minutes and the driver will be unable to start the car.

While it is an obvious benefit to the public to keep drunk drivers off the road, it is also clear that there are many problems involved with this device.

Cigarettes, mouthwash and improperly breathing into the device can cause a person to flunk the test even if he or she has not been drinking.

Another problem is that drivers could have a friend, or even a dog, breathe into the device. Of course, if the friend is sober it is hoped that he or she would just drive the car. Unfortunately, this would not always be the case.

Legislators should be applauded for their efforts to halt drunk driving in Kansas, but the ignition interlock device, although it is being used in California, Washington, Oregon, Texas and Michigan, is not a viable alternative to incarceration as the supporters of the bill have stated.

The senators need to discuss the possible misuses and problems involved with the device before they pass the bill just because it sounds good to be against drunk driving.

Those people who have lost a family member or friend to a drinking driver deserve more than a good-intentioned but empty piece of legislation.

Want a thankless job? Try teaching

Commentary

BECKY LUCAS
Collegian Columnist

Three good reasons to become a teacher — June, July and August. Right?

Wrong.

Somewhere along the line, the public has gotten the idea that high school and elementary school teachers have great jobs since they get a regular salary yet work only nine months out of the year. Unfortunately, this ignorant thought graces the mind of almost anyone who is not a teacher.

Teaching is a year-round job. Teachers must spend their time constantly learning new procedures, machines and ideas which apply to their content area. Would a person go to a doctor who hadn't kept up with the most recent advances in medicine? No, and likewise, teachers must keep up with the newest technology.

In addition to the idea that teachers have an easy job with only nine months of work, there is the idea that during the school year teachers go to work for eight hours, come home and have the rest of the day to themselves. Of course, there are always a few exceptions to the rule, but the majority of teachers spend a good part of their evening grading papers from their classes.

Elementary teachers must plan a day full of learning activities for their students. And secondary teachers are responsible for teaching four different classes during the course of one seven-hour day.

Now you are finally beginning to understand that teaching isn't simply a nine-month, eight-hour a day "easy" job. Rather, teaching is a job many people would hold in little regard, But, where would any of us be without an education? Let's trace an average day for a secondary English teacher.

Somewhere between 5 and 6 a.m., the alarm rings and another day has begun. The teacher walks into school at 7:15 a.m. and prepares to teach the first class at 7:40.

Class one is the junior English class, and today the students are studying Mark Twain. Most high school students will not tolerate being lectured to for an hour, and some classes are particularly unresponsive, so an elaborate trivia game has been constructed for the benefit of the class.

Second hour arrives and so does the remedial junior English class. This class requires an entirely different approach and a watered-down topic. These students try the patience of any English teacher, and some days it's just hard to care.

Third hour is the planning period, but since another class has the room, the teacher must vacate it. The teacher would go to the teacher's lounge, but it's also housing a class. So the teacher heads to the library and hopes to get some work accomplished.

Fourth hour is an honors juniors class, and the teacher usually looks forward to the class. These students are both bright and articulate, but sometimes too articulate. These students are working on independent projects about the period of regionalism in American literature.

Fifth hour is a repeat of fourth, and sixth hour is a repeat of first. Seventh hour is spent as a hall monitor, checking students' passes.

Once the day is over, at about 3:15 p.m., the teacher must spend time researching the next week's topic and devising times and plans of actions for each of these four classes.

Once the teacher arrives home, he or she peruses a periodical on teaching English, looking for updated methods and ideas in the field. After dinner, the instructor spends the evening grading papers so they can be returned the next day. Maybe he or she can watch a few minutes of television to relax.

So, the next time you think teaching is an easy career choice, think again. It's a really tough career made only for people who care about the future of U.S. education.

Sweet dreams

Editor,

Re: The editorial "Nebraska threatens to dissolve compact" in the Feb. 18 Collegian.

Whoever wrote this editorial ought to be commended for his/her excellent use of our right to free speech, because that is exactly what it is: "free speech." It is free of foresight. It is free of knowledge. It is free of understanding. And most of all, it is free of concern.

Who are you to speak so ignorantly, so nonchalantly, so dispassionately about something that will critically affect our lives for hundreds, maybe thousands, of years? Do you really care about what happens to the nuclear waste generated by these five states, or are you just tired of hearing about the issue?

If you are simply tired of hearing about the issue, I'm sure the people of Nebraska are truly sorry for dragging it on for so long and would be more than delighted if you would take the waste off their hands and store it in your bedroom. I'm sure they're tired of hearing about it too. So why don't you do us all a big favor and take the stuff off our hands.

I must warn you though, nuclear waste is deadly poisonous so you better wash your hands before you eat. By the way, did you know that one ounce of plutonium in the atmosphere can be lethal to 20,000 people? Not to worry though; it usually comes in cans.

Sweet dreams!

Job prospects may be better for grads

Employers look for leadership skills

By Shelly Tierney
Collegian Reporter

Job prospects for graduating seniors are better this year than they were a few years ago, a placement center official said.

"Specific industries are experiencing a turnaround," said Bruce Laughlin, director of the Career Planning and Placement Center. "Some industries believe the changes in the international monetary exchange rate is making them more competitive in the market.

"Companies in the grain and food processing industries rely on K-State a great deal," he said, adding that General Mills and Cargill are among some of the industries which recruit many K-State graduates.

There are also a large number of K-State alumni hired by petroleum companies such as Conoco, Phillips Petroleum Co., Exxon Corp. and Amoco, Laughlin said.

Interviewing as well as information gathering are important when looking for a job, he said.

"The job search process should be a strengthening process," Laughlin said. "Each person should examine his own skills and the needs of potential employers.

"The more contact a student can have with employers, the better," he said.

College students hoping to have an edge on the job market need to sharpen their leadership skills and have good analytical abilities, Laughlin said.

Although the development of these skills may be associated with undergraduate programs such as business or engineering, some companies will also consider hiring students graduating with other degrees.

Harold Shewmaker, vice president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City, said he would not hesitate to talk to students with liberal arts or other degrees.

The Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City recruits at least 10 graduates each year — most of them being spring graduates, he said. While the company as a whole recruits from many of the Big Eight Conference schools and some Missouri colleges, Shewmaker's recruiting area is exclusively K-State.

"We're not only interested in business majors," he said. "We're just looking for really good people with analytical ability and leadership skills.

"We're more interested in the individual than in the degree," Shewmaker said.

There is no particular grade point average required to interview with the reserve bank, he said.

"Folks who don't have outstanding GPAs can be good workers," Shewmaker said.

The reserve bank offers an internship program for summer interns or full- or part-time students during the academic year.

"The internship program gives us a chance to evaluate an individual's performance and make a judgment on whether we would like to hire him for a permanent position," Shewmaker said. "It also gives the intern a chance to evaluate us."

Becky Bates, employee relations representative for Koch Industries, said the company comes to K-State twice a year to interview engineers, accountants and people interested in marketing and sales jobs.

"We'll interview anyone for sales jobs, but it is generally the business students who are interested," Bates said. "We've had a good strong hiring at the college level for the last four or five years, and that hasn't changed this year."

Israeli soldiers invade hospital, seize Palestinian boys in raid

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Israeli soldiers broke into a Ramallah hospital Tuesday, fired tear gas and rubber bullets, beat doctors and took away two Palestinian boys suspected of throwing stones at troops, the hospital director said.

Soldiers shot an Arab protester in the shoulder at Sebastiya, a West Bank town near Nablus, hospital officials in Nablus reported.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said Israel was willing to exchange for peace those parts of the occupied territories not crucial to its security, but Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir has opposed trading any land for peace. The two men are partners and rivals in Israel's tenuous coalition government.

A leaflet distributed by leaders of what Arabs call "the uprising" — the violence that began Dec. 8 — urged Palestinians to intensify an economic boycott of Israel through strikes and other actions.

At Ramallah, in the occupied West Bank eight miles north of Jerusalem, Dr. Yassir Obeid said three soldiers burst into the hospital with guns drawn shortly before noon, fired tear gas and rubber bullets and broke several windows.

He said it was the second time in a week that soldiers invaded the government-run hospital, apparently searching for protesters. He said they arrested two boys aged 10 and 11, one inside and the other at the entrance.

An army spokesman confirmed the detentions of two Palestinians, but said an initial check showed both occurred at the hospital's entrance. He denied any doctors were beaten.

Arab protesters have used hospitals as hiding places during 12 weeks of riots in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, where 1.5 million Palestinians live. At least 76 Arabs have been killed in the violence, according to U.N. figures, and hundreds have been wounded.

Israeli soldiers have broken into hospitals at least seven times. Some doctors say injured Arabs stay away for fear of being arrested.

Obeid said soldiers struck him and Dr. Wadah Badah with their weapons when Obeid asked to see an order authorizing them to enter the hospital.

"The soldier hit me in the abdomen with the back of his gun and said 'Get away!'" he said in a telephone interview. "Then he hit Dr. Badah in the chest and slammed him against the wall."

He said he saw soldiers drag the boys to a grove of trees behind the hospital, bind their wrists and beat them for about 15 minutes.

Israel's national news agency, Itim, said 700 Palestinians have been tried on rioting charges since the protests began and another 800 trials are in progress. Fifteen of the defendants have been acquitted, the agency said, quoting the chief military prosecutor.

Peres mentioned the willingness to give up territory for peace at a meeting with American Jewish fundraisers in Jerusalem.

He said parts of the occupied territories were not negotiable, including Arab east Jerusalem, but added: "Is that a reason to remain in Gaza?"

"People are saying, if you give up Nablus, you will have to give up Jerusalem. That is not so," he said. "We shall defend what is really needed by us, and we shall give up what is in excess and disturbs the balance."

Israel captured the West Bank and Gaza Strip from Jordan and Egypt in the 1967 Middle East war.

Answers on AIDS

Q. What is the difference between carrying the virus and having the disease AIDS?

A. Just because a person is infected with the AIDS virus does not necessarily mean that the person will develop AIDS. At this time, scientists believe that it is quite possible to be a carrier of the AIDS virus and remain healthy and not display any of the symptoms of AIDS. Some carriers may develop illnesses varying in severity from mild to serious. It is not known if these people will eventually develop AIDS symptoms.

An unknown percentage of those infected with the AIDS virus will develop AIDS. AIDS is indicated by specific life-threatening diseases such as pneumocystis carinii pneumonia and Kaposi's sarcoma. So far, the great majority of those who have developed severe symptoms have died.

Q. Can AIDS be treated or cured?

A. There is currently no treatment that will destroy the AIDS virus in the human body or that will restore the immune system. Research on antiviral drugs is under way in the United States and other countries.

However, people with AIDS are often successfully treated for specific infections and may lead active lives for long periods. People with AIDS, like people with other life-threatening illnesses such as cancer or heart disease, may need extra social and emotional support.

Researchers are not optimistic about the development of any effective cure for AIDS in the immediate future. A cure would require a two-fold solution: a way to stop the virus from doing any further damage to the body; and a way to restore the damage that has been done. Just as we do not yet have a literal "cure" for cancer even after decades of research, a cure for AIDS may remain elusive for a long time.

However, AIDS is very preventable and is not easily spread. Education is currently our best preventive measure.

Q. If AIDS is a sexually transmitted disease, why isn't it curable like other STDs?

A. Not all STDs are curable even today; most were not curable until this century.

Sexually transmitted diseases have been a problem for many centuries. Gonorrhea and syphilis were epidemic diseases in many countries from about the 16th century into the 20th century. These diseases were incurable, painful, disfiguring and often led to death.

Syphilis was especially difficult, usually leading to insanity and death. Many famous people had the disease.

Herpes, a sexually transmitted disease caused by a virus, is still incurable.

This column is a joint effort between the Collegian and Lafene Student Health Center to inform people about AIDS. Questions may be asked by writing to the University health educator at Lafene or by calling 532-7755.

Soviet riot causes curfew rule

Tensions still high between two groups

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Authorities have clamped a curfew on a southern city where weekend rioting broke out and tensions are still running high because of a territorial dispute between ethnic groups, a Soviet official said Tuesday.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov suggested that the Sunday unrest in Sumgait, as well as demonstrations and other violence elsewhere in the Caucasus region in which at least two people died, were due to "mistakes" made 65 years ago when a territory composed largely of Armenians was made part of neighboring Azerbaidzhan.

"There is a curfew."
—Gennady I. Gerasimov

He told a government news briefing that "there were certain injuries" in Sumgait, an industrial city of more than 160,000 people in Azerbaidzhan where hooligans were blamed for touching off the Sunday riot.

"The situation is calm there today, but it is tense," Gerasimov said.

The official was peppered with questions about the civil unrest in the southern Soviet republics of Armenia and Azerbaidzhan at his regular Tuesday news briefing, but he said he had few details about events there.

Moscow-based foreign journalists have been barred from the region, and only sporadic reports from witnesses, activists and the official media have reached the Soviet capital.

"When passions calm down and life starts to normalize, the appearance of some journalists in this region can lead to intensification of nationalistic feelings," Gerasimov said, explaining why restrictions have been imposed to keep correspondents from visiting the area.

Asked about reports that Soviet tanks are patrolling the streets of Sumgait, that ethnic Azeris are attacking Armenians in the streets, and that there have been at least two deaths in the city, Gerasimov said, "There is a curfew."

He said he had not heard anything about tanks being sent to the city.

Asked if troops remained in the city Tuesday, Gerasimov said, "I don't know, but I guess so. Presumably."

The violence in Sumgait, reported Monday by the official news agency Tass, followed earlier outbreaks 150 miles away in Nagorno-Karabakh, the contested region in Azerbaidzhan, and massive but apparently peaceful demonstrations in Yerevan, the capital of Armenia.

The demonstrators demanded that Nagorno-Karabakh, which has been part of Azerbaidzhan since 1923, be made part of Armenia. About three-quarters of the region's population of 157,000 are ethnic Armenians.

Gerasimov said he did not have detailed reports from the entire region but that what information he had indicated "everything is calm" in Yerevan and surrounding areas.

Soviet authorities have pledged to reconsider the issue of whether Nagorno-Karabakh should remain part of Azerbaidzhan. Gerasimov's remarks seemed to indicate the region would be turned over to Armenia. He did not, however, say when that might occur.

Asked if he was indeed saying Nagorno-Karabakh should be made part of Armenia, the spokesman said, "I meant there were some mistakes in Nagorno-Karabakh."

Gerasimov described the region as "a kind of enclave" in Azerbaidzhan with 49 nationalities represented among the population that is nonetheless mostly Armenian.

Azerbaidzhan is the largest of three Soviet republics in the Caucasus. It is bordered on the west by largely Christian Armenia and Georgia and on the north by the Russian Republic. The Caspian Sea runs for nearly 800 miles along its eastern edge.

CEREAL

—more than a morning meal—

Cereal. It's not just for breakfast anymore.

Oh sure, some of your fondest childhood memories revolve around the Saturday mornings you padded to the kitchen to open that new box of cereal you had begged your mother to purchase the day before. Once you had your bowl, spoon and favorite 'toons on the television you were a happy camper.

Then, of course, there was the battle with your siblings for the prize in the bottom of the box. No one seemed to care that it was a plastic dinosaur that broke in the scuffle.

But the market for breakfast cereal has expanded to more than just a childhood food.

Granted, most people still enjoy their cereal the usual way — in a bowl with milk and possibly topped with fruit. But hey, get a little crazy. There are different flavors and textures of cereal that are sitting on the shelves of supermarkets just waiting for you to take them home and create a new dish.

Ready-to-eat breakfast cereal can be added to cookies, casseroles, muffins and as a topping to spice up a usually bland dish. Creativity is the key when you work with cereal.

Take a walk down the cereal aisle at your local grocery store and view the selection. Almost every box offers a recipe on its side panel.

Consumer Reports conducted a nutritional study on 59 brands of cereals in October 1986. The findings revealed that cereal is relatively inexpensive. The average cost for a one-ounce serving was 10 to 20 cents. Supermarket and generic brands are even less and are perfect to use in recipes.

Cereal makes a great snack when you need something quick and you're on the run. The majority of recipes using breakfast cereal maintain that image of eating on the run, because they are geared toward snacking and desserts. The traditional Chex Party Mix and Rice Krispie bars are just a couple of examples.

Cookies are a good way to start experimenting with cereal.

You can add your favorite flavor and you can decide on the amount. And if they burn or turn out disgusting you can always feed them to your dog — or your roommates, depending on how hungry they are.

But for those of you who desire some structure when you tie on the old apron, here are a few cookie recipes that are sure to please your near-starving roommates.

Peanut Butter Raisin Bran Cookies

1 cup flour
½ teaspoon baking powder
¾ teaspoon baking soda
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup oleo
½ cup peanut butter
½ cup white sugar
½ cup brown sugar

Sift together dry ingredients and set aside. Blend oleo, peanut butter, sugars and beat well. Add one beaten egg. Add dry ingredients and one cup bran flakes with raisins to sugar mixture. Mix well and shape into balls. Flatten with fork on cookie sheet. Bake 10 minutes in 350 degree oven. Remove when cookies are set but not hard.

Here is another recipe that calls for any kind of crisp cereal.

Ranger Cookies

1 cup shortening
1 cup sugar
1 cup brown sugar
2 eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla
½ teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
2 cups rolled oats
2 cups crisp cereal

1 cup shredded coconut
2 cups flour
1 teaspoon baking soda

Cream shortening and sugars. Add eggs and vanilla and mix until smooth. Add the flour which has been sifted with the soda, baking powder and salt. Mix well and add the cereal, rolled oats and coconut. Shape into balls about the size of a walnut and bake on greased cookie sheet in 350 degree oven for 12 to 15 minutes. Makes about 5 dozen.

Cooking with cereal does not have to be confined to desserts. Adding rolled oats to meat loaf adds some zest to the meal.

If you're entertaining friends and you need an hors d'oeurve, try this recipe for meatballs and use up that box of corn flakes.

Mini-meatballs

2 pounds ground beef
1 cup crushed corn flakes
2 eggs
1 12-ounce bottle barbecue sauce
1 5-ounce jar grape jelly

Juice of 1 lemon

Mix ground beef, corn flakes and eggs and form into balls the size of a marble. Combine barbecue sauce, jelly, and lemon juice in a saucepan and bring to a boil. Add raw meatballs and turn the heat to low and simmer for 30 minutes. Serve in chafing dish with small forks or picks.

If munching is a favorite pastime, cereal can be the key ingredient for those crunchy snacks people can't seem to keep their hands out of at parties and other festive occasions. Cereal, mixed with nuts or dried fruit can be a nutritious as well as delicious way to snack. Cereal, alone or combined with nuts, popcorn, pretzels, etc. can be coated and seasoned for special crispy tidbits to eat while watching television, studying or whatever.

For those who are planning a party, or just a simple get-together with friends and are looking for a fun new snack to nibble on, here's one that's just as fun to make as it is to eat.

People's Puppy Chow

6 ounces milk chocolate chips
6 ounces semi-sweet chocolate chips
1 cup peanut butter
½ cup oleo
1 box Crispix cereal
2 cups powdered sugar

In a small saucepan melt chocolate chips, peanut butter and oleo. Pour mixture over cereal and stir to coat well. Put coated cereal and powdered sugar in a brown paper bag and shake until coated. When cool, store the snack in an airtight container.

Cereal can also be added to your favorite dairy snacks. Try sprinkling granola on fresh-fruit yogurt or ice cream for a delightful mixture of textures and tastes. Or shower it on anything that suits your fancy — being creative and letting the imagination go is the key to having fun with this food. Cheerios could be just the garnish you've been waiting for.

Keep in mind that many cereals are full of sugar and salt. The Consumer Reports survey ranked the 59 cereals in order from most to least nutritious. Brands received positive points for dietary fiber and protein content, and negative ones for added sugars, sodium and fat.

Three versions of Nabisco Shredded Wheat claimed the top three spots, followed by Fiber One and Frosted Mini-Wheats. Only 18 of the 59 products were low in sugar — that is they have less than three grams per ounce.

All of the cereals that were considered "kids cereals" ranked in the bottom half of the survey. Cap'n Crunch took last place, with Trix and Cocoa Puffs close behind. These kinds of cereals account for 30 percent of the cereal industry.

Many consumers are unaware of the high sodium content found in cereals. A serving of Wheaties has 370 milligrams of sodium. Ounce-for-ounce that is twice the sodium found in a serving of potato chips.

But the good news is that more manufacturers are leaning toward sodium-free and sugar-free cereals. High-fiber brands, which are low in sodium, are more in demand by consumers and now account for 15 percent of cereal sales.

Purchasing more nutritious cereals will be a gradual process as Americans continue to consume the ready-to-eat breakfast food — no matter what the nutrition content may reveal. Every year Americans buy more than a million tons of cereal, according to Consumer Reports.

Whether you are a diehard cereal addict or just a neutral bystander, have fun experimenting with it. The next time you get ready to toss out a box that is almost empty, think twice. You could save all the bottom-of-the-box bits and have a heyday. Remember, a big part of cooking is creativity. And what better way to spend an evening when studying has gotten you down.

Jobs

employment levels of the year because of seasonal losses," said Dennis Taylor, secretary of human resources. "But almost every corner of the state has shown marked improvement over the year."

According to the department, 1,180,101 people were employed in the state, and the number of unemployed was 69,772. That compares to 1,183,084 employed and 63,870 unemployed in December.

In January 1987, 1,143,529 people were employed and 77,067 unemployed. The number of people employed increased by more than 36,500, while the number of unemployed decreased by about 7,200 over the year. The strongest over-the-year growth occurred in trade, services and manufacturing, the agency reported.

"We sustained seasonal employment losses over the month," Taylor said. "Weather sensitive industries, such as farming and construction work, reported job losses from December 1987 to January 1988. The mid-term break at state and local schools resulted in a decrease in government jobs, and retail stores reduced their work forces following the holidays.

"Manufacturing, especially those industries supplying construction jobs, also lost jobs over the month," he said.

Whalen said the Riley County work force increased its numbers from 23,446 eligible workers in 1987 to 26,641 in 1988. Of the work force, 25,757 are employed, leaving 884 people in the county looking for work.

The increase in the work force can be attributed in part to the Manhattan Town Center, which provided 700 to 800 new jobs, he said.

Unemployment decreased in the Topeka area over the month, to 5.1 percent. In December, the rate was 5.4 percent, and in January 1987, it was 5.5 percent.

The agency said an increase in retail jobs offset seasonal job losses over the month. Also, it reported that retail trade businesses added about 1,000 jobs and the service industry, about 800, over the year.

However, the unemployment rate increased over the month in the Wichita and Lawrence areas, as well as in Wyandotte and Johnson counties. The Kansas City, Kan., metropolitan area is in a different statistical area than that reported by the state.

Linn County continued to have the highest unemployment rate in the state, with 12.7 percent, up from 11.1 percent in December and 9.6 percent in November.

In all, 16 counties had unemployment rates of 8 percent or above, most of them in east-central and southeast Kansas. After Linn, the counties with the highest rates were: Anderson, 9.6 percent; Miami, 9.5; Franklin, 9.1; and Bourbon, 9.0.

In the Wichita area, which includes Butler, Harvey and Sedgwick counties, the unemployment rate increased to 5.9 percent in January from 5.1 percent in December. However, the rate was 6.6 percent in January 1987.

The agency said manufacturing slowdowns, as well as construction and trade industry job losses helped push the jobless rate up over the month. But it reported an overall increase in jobs of more than 11,400 over the year.

In the Lawrence area, unemployment was 4.4 percent, up one-tenth of 1 percent over the month and the year, the agency reported. The losses were mostly seasonal, and the number of jobs has increased by about 1,200 over the year, the agency said.

Unemployment rates in Johnson and Wyandotte counties also increased by one-tenth of 1 percent over the month.

The lowest unemployment rates in the state were posted by Harper, Kiowa, Lane and Pawnee counties, each with a rate of 3.1 percent.

Among the 10 largest counties, reported jobless rates were: Sedgwick, 6.0; Johnson, 3.3; Wyandotte, 8.4; Shawnee, 5.1; Douglas, 4.4; Reno, 6.3; Riley, 4.5; Leavenworth, 6.6; Saline, 6.0, and Butler, 6.2.

Other large counties reported these rates: Allen, 8.3, Atchison, 7.0; Barton, 6.2; Cherokee, 8.1; Cloud, 4.5; Coffey, 8.5; Cowley, 6.1; Crawford, 6.9; Dickinson, 6.0; Elk, 8.4; Ellis, 5.3; Finney, 4.0; Ford, 3.8; Geary, 5.7; Harvey, 3.8; Jackson, 8.7; Jefferson, 8.2.

Also, Labette, 5.8; Lincoln, 8.8; Lyon, 5.4; McPherson, 4.3; Mitchell, 3.9; Montgomery, 6.5; Neosho, 8.2; Norton, 3.3; Osage, 8.4; Pratt, 5.3; Rice, 4.9; Russell, 4.8; Seward, 3.8; Sherman, 4.0; Sumner, 6.0; Thomas, 3.4, and Wilson, 8.0.

Moon

Coach (Larry) Travis (K-State athletic director) has accomplished there and the part I've played in it."

Moon said the opportunity came at a good time for him, and that he is looking forward to the challenge.

"Everybody wants to be his own boss," Moon said. "This is a real good situation for us as far as the success of Marshall's athletic program. It's also a good opportunity for me. My wife and I are both from this part of the country."

He said his decision to accept the position was also based in part on the attitudes which the Marshall administration, instructors, staff and students expressed to him during his interviews.

Moon said he will officially assume his duties "sometime in the middle of March," but will remain in Huntington through the week to "get things organized and establish some priorities."

He will return to Manhattan sometime Sunday evening or Monday.

Moon served as K-State's interim head football coach during the 1985 season, before Stan Parrish, then-head coach at Marshall, was hired. Before coming to K-State, Moon was an assistant football coach and administrative assistant at Mississippi State. He was also an assistant coach at the University of Virginia. From 1973-76, he was head junior varsity and defensive line coach at Duke University.

Moon, 41, succeeds David T. Braine, who on Jan. 1 became athletic director at Virginia Tech, which said it hired him to straighten out that school's financial problems.

Six weeks after Braine's departure, Nitzschke announced that the school's finance department was examining a possible shortfall in the athletic department budget.

Moon's greatest challenge at Marshall will be working to straighten out those budget difficulties. At the same time that he announced Moon's appointment, Nitzschke announced cost-cutting plans for the school's athletic department to cope with a $390,000 budget shortage. Nitzschke said the school was considering the possibility of layoffs in the department.

Nitzschke said a private accountant also will be brought in to examine ticket office operations and to reconcile differences in reported attendance figures and actual ticket sales.

The university president said revenue shortages have occurred in several different areas, including an $85,000 shortage in football ticket sales and a $241,000 shortage in the estimated amount of private contributions to the athletic department.

bits showing Kansas culture and history.

"Hopefully, we'll be able to do the state justice in recreating Kansas in our store," he said.

Bloomingdale's chose the 52 Kansas firms to display their products from about 120 who sought to be included. "We think that's a pretty good percentage to make it," said Commerce Secretary Harland Priddle, who also was at the news conference.

Besides the displays and exhibits in the stores, the state of Kansas and Bloomingdale's each will put up $150,000 for advertising the Kansas show in the news media.

"This is a golden opportunity to showcase our state, its food products and its rich culture and heritage," Hayden said. "I congratulate the companies that were selected and all of Kansas should be proud of the fact that a retailer such as Bloomingdale's has identified so many products that meet its high standards.

"This effort will open many doors for the marketing of Kansas products not only in New York, but also in the 15 additional Bloomingdale's stores across the United States and to visitors from around the world."

Glover adapts, enjoys bench role

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

For most players, no matter what sport, sitting on the bench is one of the hardest things to do during a game. Not so for Rene "Buster" Glover.

"I really don't think about starting," said the 5-10½ Wildcat junior guard. "I came in and I was expected to start at the point (guard position). I wasn't being vocal enough and I got moved to the number two guard position (the shooting guard)."

It's the play off the bench, however, that Glover has learned to enjoy the most.

"I'm a little bit more relaxed (coming off the bench)," he said. "I can come in and feel more confident about my game and knowing what has to be done."

And getting the job "done" is exactly what he has done. In the 'Cats' 25 games this season, Glover has scored 93 points, handed out 26 assists, shot 57 percent from the 3-point line — ranking him first in the Big Eight — and shot 81 percent from the charity stripe.

But with the good also comes the bad. Glover is faring well from the 3-point range, but from the 2-point range Glover is suffering, shooting 39 percent. He hasn't let this low figure hamper his confidence, however, and tries to focus on the positive.

"I can hit the jumper from 2-point range," he said. "It just happens that most of the time I'm behind the (3-point line) and that's when I get the ball the most."

Glover attributes his success to desire and the one thing that has helped him the most throughout his career — quickness.

"I'd have to say that my quickness is my greatest asset," he said. "I'm not big and strong, like Mitch (Richmond). But I can run and keep up with him."

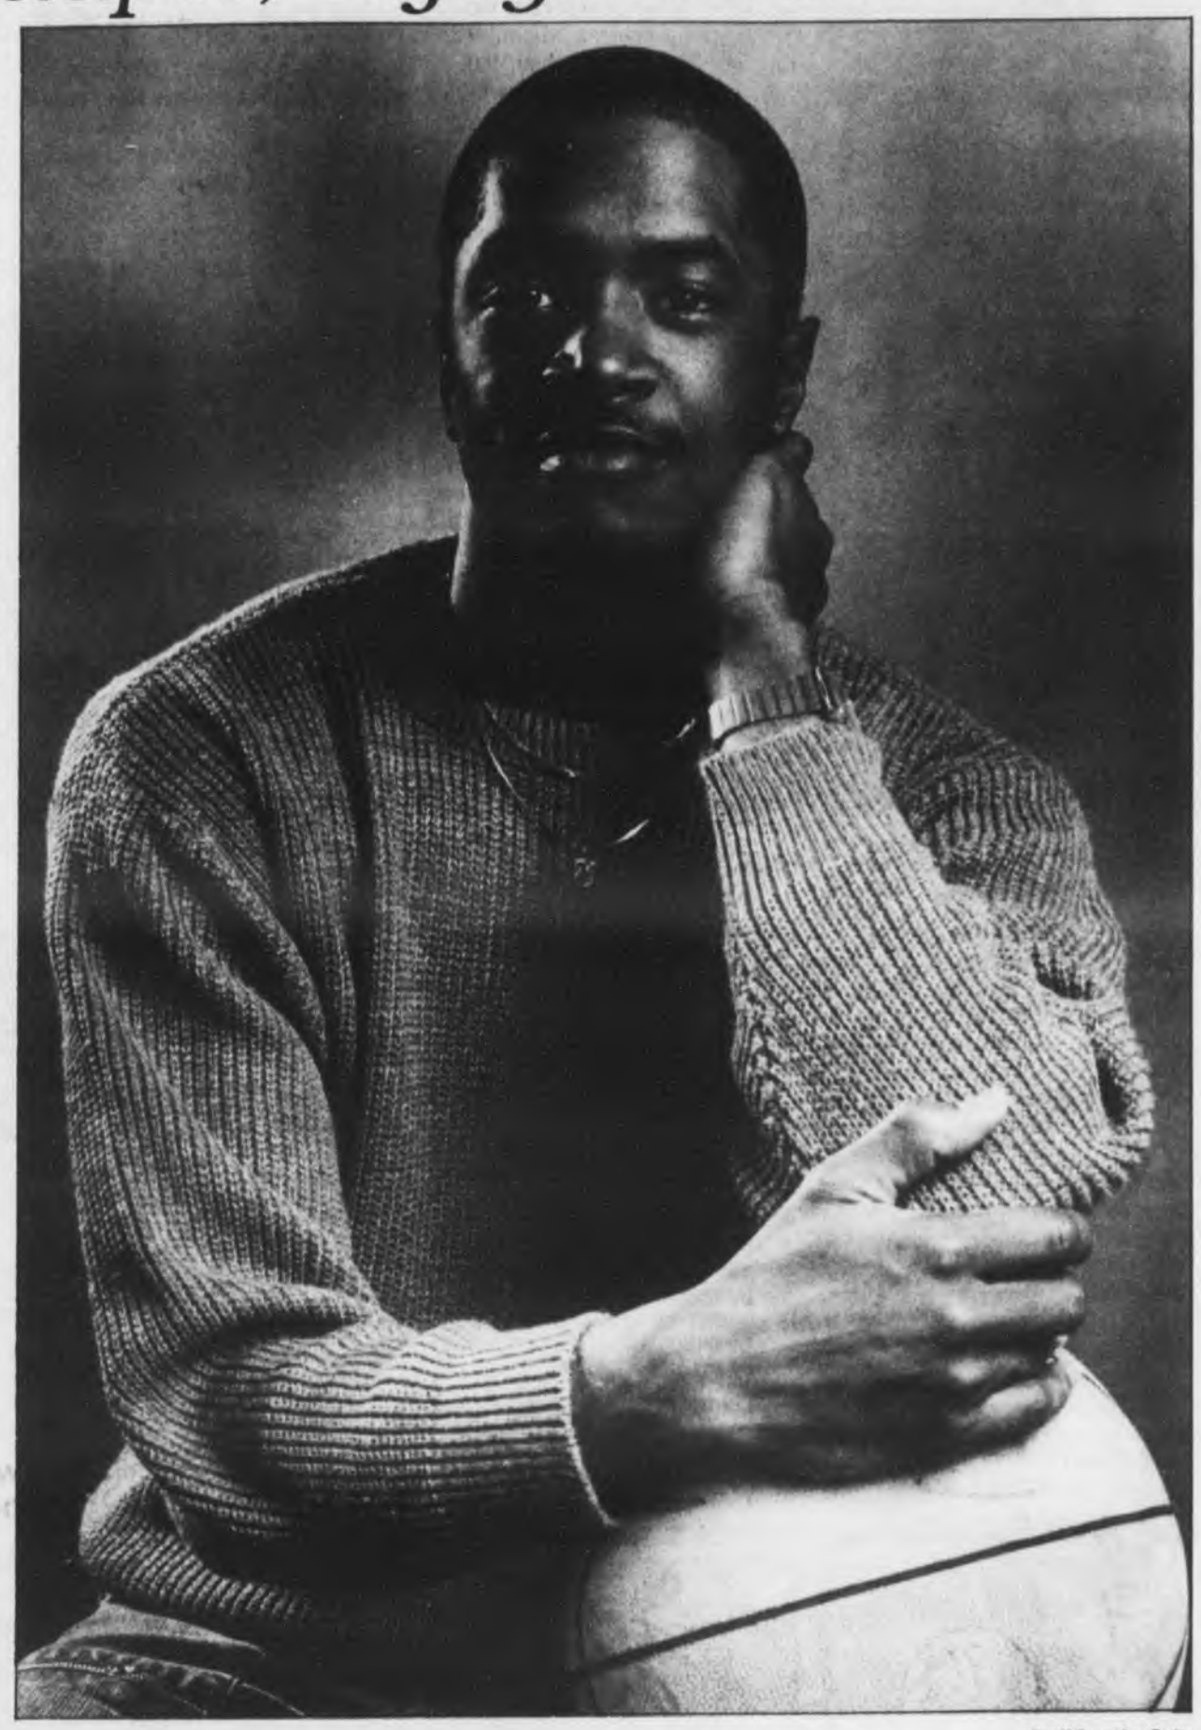
K-State coach Lon Kruger also thinks Glover's quickness is his greatest asset.

"His hands are so quick," he said. "He's about as quick as you can get."

Teammate Steve Henson, said Glover's quickness could be even greater if he learned to control and use it at the right time.

"There are times when he's on the break and he'll pull up," Henson said. "He's got the speed to just blow right by people if he's on the fast break."

Fans have gotten a small taste of Glover's capabilities this season. Kruger said next season, they will see the full extent of Glover's abilities.



"We think that he'll make a good move into a starting position," Kruger said. "He's got the ability, and I think we'll see him take a step into a leadership role."

That role will be assumed in the Fred Bramlage Coliseum, and is one Glover is looking forward to. But don't get Glover wrong — he likes playing in Ahearn and he hasn't even been over to Bramlage Coliseum.

"I've only seen the coliseum from the outside," he said. "The fans at Ahearn are the greatest. They are behind us every step of the way. And that's what college basketball is about."

And as the final game in Ahearn Field House with Missouri Saturday draws closer, Glover admits he hasn't gotten caught up in the magic of what has been happening.

"I've got to concentrate on my game," he said. "I'm sure everyone else on the team is doing the same, concentrating on their game for that night or the next night."

Staff/Jennifer Quist

Buster Glover, junior in social science, leads the Big Eight in the three-point shot. Glover, an Allen County Community College transfer, is shooting 57 percent from beyond the three-point stripe.

'Cats look to end string of bad luck at 'Huskers' home

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Nebraska's 13-15 overall record is a perfect example of the quality of competition in the Big Eight Conference, K-State coach Lon Kruger said.

The Cornhuskers, 4-8 in the conference, are 8-7 outside of conference play. Some of their losses have come against Ohio State, Villanova, Baylor, Grambling State in overtime, Oregon and Wyoming.

So it's no surprise to Kruger that last year's National Invitational Tournament semifinalists are clipping along at a sub-.500 pace.

"Their record outside the conference is pretty good and I think that shows just how tough the conference is," Kruger said. "There's not much difference between (the) No. 2 and No. 8 (teams in the Big Eight) when you really get down to it."

K-State, 18-7 and 9-3, plays Nebraska tonight at 7:35 at the Devaney Center in Lincoln.

"There's not much difference between (the) No. 2 and No. 8 (teams in the Big Eight) when you really get down to it."

—Lon Kruger

The Wildcats own a 97-73 series advantage over the 'Huskers, but are 27-35 in Lincoln. In the last five games at the Devaney Center, K-State has won once.

"It's a tough place to go and win. Nebraska plays extremely hard and enthusiastic, and they have a good team," Kruger said.

Teams that have fallen to NU at Lincoln this season include Kansas and Missouri. Both the Jayhawks and the Tigers had more than a 10-point lead late in the game. Nebraska is coming off a two-point loss Saturday to Iowa State.

"I thought it was the best 40 minutes we've played all year, but I don't know if we can do it again," NU coach Danny Nee said.

Nebraska has had seven straight winning seasons, which is the longest in the Big Eight. If the 'Huskers lose to K-State or Oklahoma in their last two regular-season games, they would have to win the conference's postseason tournament to keep that standard intact. Nee, though, isn't concerned with that statistic.

"For us and the rest of the conference, we're all jockeying for position," Nee said. "If we win our last two games, we could end as high as fifth. If we lose both games, we could finish seventh."

Nebraska is paced offensively by forward Derrick Vick. The 6-foot-6 senior forward averages 11.6 points per game, and is just one of five players to reach his average against K-State's defense this season.

In the earlier matchup at Ahearn Field House, senior forward Charles Bledsoe sank two free throws with two seconds remaining which gave the 'Cats a 65-63 win.

NOTES...K-State's win over Oklahoma State ensured the 'Cats the second seed in the Big Eight tournament. It's the highest conference finish for the 'Cats since the 1981-82 team finished second...K-State's schedule is ranked No. 2 in difficulty in the nation by the NCAA, second only to Louisville's...Nebraska is one of only two Big Eight teams that starts a smaller lineup than K-State.

Soviet 'baseballists' competitive players

By The Associated Press

BRADENTON, Fla. — The Soviet Union hopes to be competitive in baseball — a sport introduced to the country only last year — in time for the 1990 Goodwill Games and 1992 Olympics, says the Soviet national coach.

There are only about 25 Soviet teams of 20 players each, ranging in age from 18 to 28, and "baseballists" find equipment so difficult to obtain that they often substitute tennis balls wrapped in tape for regulation balls, said Coach Alexander Ardatov.

But he said enthusiasm for the sport is high, especially after he and assistant coach Guela Chikhradze went on Soviet TV and showed films of major league games.

"Our national sports paper is beginning to run many articles about the rules and the players themselves in the U.S. and in Cuba, which, of course, is a close ally," said Chikhradze, 33.

But, asked if the sport is now purely recreational in the USSR, Chikhradze replied with an emphatic "Nyet!" as he toured the Pittsburgh Pirates' spring training camp.

"We want to develop a very good team," Chikhradze said through an interpreter. "Once the players are introduced to baseball, they get to love it so much they don't want to give it up.

"We are not having difficulty attracting athletes from other sports. We tell them they may have to wait a long time to make the volleyball or hockey teams, but they can play baseball right away."

Teams from Nicaragua and Czechoslovakia have already visited the USSR, and the Soviets earned their first international victory by beating the Czechs last fall.

Ardatov, 34, said the Soviet sports hierarchy is expected to supply adequate funding to develop players and build regulation diamonds, since baseball will be a medal sport in the 1992 Olympics in Barcelona, Spain.

Although baseball was only a demonstration sport at the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles, crowds of nearly 50,000 attended most games at Dodger Stadium.

Ardatov, a former hockey goalie and a professor of physical education, and Chikhradze, a former fencer, spent three days at the Los Angeles Dodgers' camp in Vero Beach, Fla. After a quick stop at the Pirates' camp, they visited Tuesday at the Kansas City Royals' new $11 million complex near Haines City, Fla.

The biggest problem now in the Soviet Union is the lack of diamonds, the coaches said. Games are played on converted soccer fields.

Terms of one-year contract disclosed

Tartabull ends holdout on Royals

By The Associated Press

HAINES CITY, Fla. — Danny Tartabull signed a one-year contract for $330,000 Tuesday with the Kansas City Royals that also provides $45,000 in incentives, but the young slugger said he was bitter about the contract negotiations.

"Basically the only thing I'm really happy about is going back to my teammates and my fans in Kansas City," said the 25-year-old outfielder, who last season hit 34 home runs, had 101 runs batted in and hit .309.

Asked if he was bitter about the contract negotiations, Tartabull said, "I think that's the feeling. If you weren't paid what you felt you were worth, you'd probably be a little upset too."

Tartabull had first asked for $525,000 and later cut his demand to $425,000. In a telephone interview from Miami, Tartabull said he would begin working out with the Royals on Thursday.

The signing came a day after Tartabull had asked the Royals to trade him.

It was reported earlier that Tartabull, who made $145,000 last season, had been given a $325,000 final offer from the Royals. The team had told him his contract would be renewed automatically if he did not sign Tuesday, for what Tartabull's representatives said would be $290,000.

Tartabull and John Schuerholz, the Royals' general manager, had talked by telephone Monday night, and Tartabull said he wanted to leave the team.

'Cotton' likes pros, misses enthusiasm

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

This is the third installment of a five-part series about the memories of K-State's men's basketball coaches who coached in Ahearn Field House as told to those in attendance at K-State's alumni basketball banquet Nov. 20, 1987.

It was short but oh, so sweet.

Lowell "Cotton" Fitzsimmons served a two-year tenure as coach of K-State's men's basketball team which will always be remembered.

Fitzsimmons served as a Wildcat assistant to Tex Winter during the 1967-68 season before taking over as head coach in the 1968-69 season. It might have been during his year as an assistant, however, when his name became a household word.

"That year we won the Big Eight (Conference) title and Tex was named Big Eight coach of the year," Fitzsimmons said. "We had a pep rally after we got back from Iowa State in front of Ahearn Field House.

"The crowd was cheering for Tex," he added. "He said it was nice being named Big Eight coach of the year, but that the real coach was standing right behind him. I didn't realize that he was talking about me."

His first season at the helm turned somewhat sour, as K-State went 14-12 and tied Kansas for second in the Big Eight.

"We were hit by the flu bug," Fitzsimmons said. "We lost a lot of games, but we played hard and that's what helped us to a strong finish.

"But I knew one thing about Ahearn Field House and its fans," he added. "If the guys went out and gave it their all, the fans would be there through thick and thin, and they were."

In his second season, the 'Cats took off and never looked back as they compiled a 20-8 record and took first place in the Big Eight with a 12-5 record.

In addition to remembering Ahearn's special fans, Fitzsimmons remembers Ahearn's unique practice atmosphere. He said team members were lucky to be alive while practicing in Ahearn.

"At that time, Ahearn was a multi-purpose gymnasium," Fitzsimmons said. "We had to dodge shotputs and baseballs and anything else that came flying through the air. I'm glad they couldn't throw the javelin in there."

After the 1969-70 season, Fitzsimmons got a chance to jump to the National Basketball Association, and he took it. Eighteen years later, he is still involved in the NBA as director of player personnel for the Phoenix Suns.

"It was my kind of game," he said of the NBA style of play. "It was wide open, fast paced and high scoring. It was something that I enjoyed very much and still do."

But if there is one thing Fitzsimmons misses the most about college basketball, it's the enthusiasm.

"The atmosphere that is generated in college basketball is unbelievable," he said. "If players are planning on making it in the pros, they're going to have to realize that the enthusiasm isn't there. That's tough to deal with. There is no way to capture the excitement that Ahearn Field House has."

Fitzsimmons' years at K-State are not only remembered here, but also at the University of Kansas — with a little help.

He said Jayhawk coach Larry Brown let him watch practice a few years back.

"There was this young manager there, and I guess he didn't know who I was," Fitzsimmons said.

"The young boy proceeded to ask me when was I a coach at Kansas State," he added. "Well, Kansas has a lot of flags and banners from their NCAA Tournament appearances and banners from their Big Eight championships. I said to the young boy, 'look at the flags up there and you'll see that there is nothing up there for '68, '69 and '70. Those are the years that I was at K-State.'"

Lafene offers AIDS workshops

Campus situations presented

By Julie Hanna
Collegian Reporter

In an effort to educate faculty and staff members, Lafene Student Health Center is providing AIDS workshops for all K-State employees.

The workshops were prompted by a recommendation made two years ago by the Communicable Disease Committee to former K-State President Duane Acker. The program was initiated last month, and the workshops are required for all employees.

The hour-long workshops are intended to educate faculty, staff and students on ways to handle situations concerning Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome that could occur on campus, said Cindy Burke, a registered nurse and health staff assistant at Lafene and organizer of the workshops.

"It has been declared by the committee that the best prevention to the spread of the epidemic AIDS is education. So we felt obligated to educate our faculty and staff."
—Cindy Burke

In Kansas, there have been 105 cases of AIDS, she said. Seventy percent of those who have contracted AIDS have died.

Bruce Laughlin, director of the Career Planning and Placement Center, attended one of the workshops.

"I think it was an excellent workshop, and the information was provided in a constructive as well as positive way," he said.

Robin Mosher, English instructor, said she didn't mind being required to attend the workshop.

"We're not requested to do many things — so I don't mind. Besides, I'm interested in separating the hearsay from the answers," she said.

Staff/Steve Wolgast

Cindy Burke, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center, introduces a videotape about AIDS to members of the English department Tuesday. The workshops are mandatory for all University employees.

"The workshop mostly reinforced information that I had already received," Mosher said. "English teachers really do try hard to keep up with current issues. It's our business to do that. It's a topic of discussion that people dare not be misinformed."

Burke said the presentation is necessary in order to educate faculty members about AIDS. Prior to the workshop, each department received a packet of information about the presentation.

"They need to schedule a time for the presentation with me (in order) to have a resource person bring a video out and give a workshop to specific groups," Burke said.

During the workshops, Burke shows a video and talks about how AIDS is transmitted.

Some people in the video said they are afraid they might get AIDS through saliva or mosquito bites.

However, the video shows that although AIDS can be identified in saliva and mosquitos, those are not ways it can be transmitted.

Donating blood is also a concern for some, according to the video. But blood donations are not considered a problem, since donors are asked if they have AIDS. When a person donates blood, they are given a card with a telephone number they can call if they do contract AIDS.

The majority of people who contract AIDS do so through sexual contact or intravenous drug use, Burke said.

Some believe that homosexuals and drug users are the main groups who have AIDS, but the numbers are going up in the heterosexual population, Burke said.

Some people are concerned that if they contract AIDS, they may lose their friends or even their job.

Just because a person has been exposed to AIDS doesn't mean that person has AIDS, according to the video. The virus can incubate for two weeks to 14 months before it shows up in tests.

Prevention for AIDS ranges from using a condom to abstinence.

The committee began the workshops in February and will continue through the rest of the semester, Burke said.

Bilingual teachers in high demand

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

George Garcia, superintendent of Kansas City, Mo., schools, will speak about the importance of bilingual teachers in a lecture at 2:30 p.m. today in Union 206.

Garcia's lecture, "The Advantages of Being Bilingual in Teaching as a Career," will be followed by a question-and-answer session open to all University students and faculty.

His visit is sponsored by the Mexican American Council of Students.

The lecture is an excellent opportunity for student teachers to become aware of the growing need for bilingual teachers, said Antonia Pigno, adviser of the council and associate professor of libraries.

"Homogeneity is a thing of the past — at least in public schools," she said. "They (teachers) are going to have to address the questions of multiethnicity — even in rural areas."

Garcia has been superintendent of the multicultural, multiethnic school district in Kansas City for the past year. He was deputy superintendent for curriculum and instruction in Brownsville, Texas, from 1984 to 1987.

Garcia is devoted to integrating racial and cultural groups into the daily curricula, Pigno said, and he was brought into the district for that reason. Students in the Kansas City, Mo., school district are from both wealthy and impoverished neighborhoods.

"I'm sure he is controversial," she said. "He's going to make lots of friends and lots of enemies in the process (of implementing his ideas)."

Bringing Hispanic leaders to campus to help culturalize K-State students is a fundamental basis of the council, said Josie Bernal, vice president of the organization and junior in fine arts.

"We try to bring in keynote speakers who relate to hispanic culture and are successful in their respective fields," she said.

The group reorganized three years ago after several years of inactivity, Pigno said. The last active campus group was the Chicano Student Movement.

"The Chicano movement was a radical, political group that formed out of the '60s," she said. "The group needed a new focus — it needed to be positive."

Students' involvement in the group has doubled from last year, Bernal said. The group has about 25 active members.

In order to encompass more students, the group is planning to change its name to the Hispanic American Leadership Organization, she said.

Fears of recession declining in nation

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The government said Tuesday that its chief barometer of future economic activity fell again in January, but an upward revision in December eased fears that the nation was headed for a recession.

The Commerce Department's Index of Leading Economic Indicators dropped 0.6 percent in January. Analysts discounted the sharp decline and instead focused on a revision that changed the index's showing in December from a 0.2 percent decline to a 0.3 percent increase.

Since it was created in 1948, the leading index has fallen three or more months during an expansion on 12 different occasions. On eight of those instances, a recession did follow. But four times the index gave a false signal of a downturn and the recovery kept going, although at a slower pace.

District lines may be redrawn by voters

Military, students would be excluded

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Voters would decide whether the Legislature would redraw House district lines in 1989 and all legislative district lines in 1992 under a resolution the House tentatively approved Tuesday.

The resolution would put a proposed amendment to the Kansas Constitution on the November general election ballot. The change would basically allow the state to switch from reapportioning its Legislature in the year before a federal census is conducted to two years after the federal census is completed.

The proposal also would prohibit the state from counting university students and military personnel who had not established a permanent residence in the state. The provisions provoked criticism from legislators with military bases or colleges within their districts.

The House advanced the resolution to final action on a voice vote, and a final vote is expected Wednesday. The resolution needs a two-thirds majority, or 84 of 125 votes, to be adopted.

"It needs to be done to get on track with the federal census," said Rep. Ed Bideau, R-Chanute, chairman of the House Legislative, Judicial and Congressional Apportionment Committee.

Under the measure, the Legislature would be allowed, but not required, to reapportion the Senate in 1989. However, Bideau noted senators will be up for election in 1998 and 1992, so a 1989 reapportionment of the body would serve no purpose.

Currently, the Kansas Constitution provides that the Legislature will be reapportioned in 1989 and every 10 years thereafter. That leaves the state with two choices — it can use 9-year-old federal census data or establish its own state census.

Supporters of the measure contend federal courts would rule that the state cannot adequately ensure an accurate count of its population or an equitable apportionment of the Legislature with old federal statistics. The state did authorize a one-time census currently being conducted by the Secretary of State's office, which is expected to cost about $3 million.

Thus, Bideau said, the solution, he said, is to have one state census and then adjust the reapportionment cycle so that new federal census data can be used.

"If the amendment does not pass, we'd reapportion in 1989," Bideau said. "We'd be facing the same problem in '99."

The House adopted a similar resolution last year, but the Senate amended it and killed it. Bideau warned his colleagues that any amendment probably would doom the resolution to a similar fate.

"It is in fact a balance of different political positions that have been taken over the last three years," Bideau said.

However, Reps. John Solbach and Betty Jo Charlton, both D-Lawrence, questioned whether the state should write a provision against counting students and military personnel into its constitution. Solbach attempted to amend the resolution to strike the provision, but the House rejected it, 48-65.

"It's not clear that it would be constitutional under the federal constitution under the one person, one-vote rule," Solbach said.

And Charlton noted the federal census does count students and military personnel where they are going to school or stationed, so that federal census data would have to be adjusted if it were used by the state.

Vineyard owners rally for wineries

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The owner of a Kansas vineyard and the secretary of agriculture told a Senate committee Tuesday that development of Kansas farm wineries would bring more tourists to the state.

R.G. Rizza, who owns Villarizza Vineyards in Halstead, said vineyard owners won't open commercial farm wineries now because current Kansas laws places too many restrictions on their operation.

"We could have had three wineries go into operation this year," Rizza said.

Rizza, who grows 14 acres of grapes, testified before the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee on a bill that would lessen farm winery restrictions.

The bill would allow farm wineries to sell wine to licensed wine distributors, retailers, clubs, drinking establishments and caterers. Now, wineries are only allowed to sell to distributors.

The bill also would allow wineries to sell wine for off-premise consumption on Sundays, and would allow groups of grape growers or wine makers and Kansas State Fair officials to import small quantities of wines for testing and tasting purposes. The imported wine could not be sold.

"We depend on tourists," Rizza said, "and tourists are out on Sundays."

Secretary of Agriculture Sam Brownback said vineyards are a way farmers can grow higher value crops on smaller amounts of land, and also bring in tourists through their agricultural products.

"This does represent a realistic opportunity for some people in the state to make some money," Brownback said.

In the past, Kansas vineyards produced more acres of grapes, Brownback said, and the state exported wine.

Now, the state imports wine, and disregards an opportunity other states have taken to develop thriving regional vineyards, Rizza said.

"The wine flows into the state, and the money for it flows out, without any regard for potential grape-growers," Rizza said.

Drama group repairs theater

By Julie Hanna
Collegian Reporter

Theta Alpha Phi, the theater honorary, has been recruiting theater students to renovate the Purple Masque Theatre in East Stadium. The honorary is interested in the project because it will benefit theater students, said Penny Cullers, president of the honorary.

Cullers said the renovation came just in time for the Purple Masque production "The Woolgatherers," which was Thursday, Friday and Saturday night, and the upcoming "Fefu and Her Friends."

"We're just really excited about making the Masque better. We can make it look better," Cullers said.

Student productions are performed in the the Purple Masque Theatre.

"We haven't tried yet, but there's a rule on campus that no students or faculty can paint any walls in any University facilities, so if we wanted to paint the Masque Theatre, somebody might notice," Cullers said.

The University hasn't provided any funds for renovation, and the Department of Speech doesn't have enough money, Cullers said. It becomes a problem because the honorary is trying to make the theater look good, but cheaply, she said.

In order to have the theater painted, the honorary must pay University Facilities to do the job, Culler said. However, the honorary does not have the funds to do so. She said she would like to allow student volunteers to paint the theater, but the University will not allow it.

They do not have enough money to pay Facilities because of the labor cost involved, she said. Cullers said she feared the honorary would have no control over how long Facilities worked, and the painters would have to be paid by the hour.

"We've heard the faculty has had problems with it before," she said. "We are unable to paint the theater because the cost is too high."

No complaints have been made about what they have done, Cullers said, because they haven't made any major changes.

About 15 theater students cleaned the dressing room and the scene shop where the scenery is stored, which made a big difference, she said. They also scrubbed the sinks and walls and vacuumed.

They took down the curtains, which were bought 20 years ago. The curtains had lined the theater and acted as a sound barrier, but Cullers said the theater "looks nice" with the curtains completely down. The students are also considering the possibility of dyeing the curtains black.

The problem with the Masque is that there's no person there to clean it, Cullers said. Janitors only clean it when there's a show.

"We, as students, need to band together," she said. "I feel that it's a really nice project which not only benefits theater students, it benefits the whole university."

Cullers said the Purple Masque is the only facility on campus in which students are given the chance to pursue experimental work.

"I've had people tell me that they don't like to do Masque shows because of the way the theater looks — it's too creepy," she said.

Cullers is hoping the recent renovation efforts of Theta Alpha Phi will encourage more people to participate in and attend productions in the Purple Masque Theatre.

Gadgets on display at convention

By The Associated Press

JAMESTOWN, N.D. — Peter Konzak of Devils Lake rummaged through the clutter of his briefcase and found a letter as proof that his invention, a "pop-up scarecrow," has already earned him some attention, if not wealth.

"I am still invited to the Johnny Carson show. It is a standing invitation," the 66-year-old retired farmer said, answering questions about his scarecrow at the second annual North Dakota Inventors Congress.

Forty inventors and manufacturers, most of them from North Dakota, showed off gizmos, gadgets and thingamajigs at the show that ended Tuesday.

Spokesman Scot Nething said only four of them had displayed their wares in last year's show. "It's a whole new crop."

The inventions showcased this year ranged from an ultralight airplane manufactured in Edgeley to a swinging mailbox that a Minot man devised after a neighbor complained about his mailbox getting knocked down by snowplows each winter.

And then there was a lawnmower doubling as a fertilizer spreader, a clothes dryer vent closure, a crayon holder, a retractable engine heater cord and a wheel bearing packer.

Konzak's pride and joy stood at one side of his booth on the floor of the Jamestown Civic Center.

Representatives reject proposal

Water project financing to come from general fund

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The House showed Tuesday that it doesn't support Gov. Mike Hayden's plan for financing water projects with lottery and parimutuel wagering profits, and the governor said he is disappointed.

The House tentatively approved a $32.6 million spending bill after amending the bill to take $1.15 million for water projects from the state general fund, into which tax revenues flow, instead of the state's Economic Development Initiatives Fund, into which lottery and parimutuel proceeds go.

Hayden has proposed spending $4 million in economic development funds on water projects, saying such projects are vital to attracting industry.

The measure was advanced to final action on a voice vote, and a final vote is expected Wednesday. The bill also includes money for the State Board of Agriculture, the Animal Health and Grain Inspection Departments, the Kansas State Fair, the Wheat Commission, the Conservation Commission and the Kansas Water Office.

Opponents of Hayden's proposal said it would take money away from economic development projects and vowed to switch the source of financing for water projects in other budget bills.

"It causes me grave concerns," Hayden said during a news conference. "One-time funding of water projects out of the state general fund is not the answer."

Under Kansas law, 60 percent of the profits from the lottery and taxes on pari-mutuel bets would go into the economic development fund. The amount is expected to be $15 million for fiscal year 1989, which begins July 1.

However, Rep. Henry Helgerson, D-Wichita, said the amount is insufficient to fund the state's economic development programs, even if money is not taken out for water projects. The House accepted his amendment, 71-46, to take the economic development money for water projects out of the bill. The chamber later voted, 91-16, to add an equal amount of general fund dollars.

"If we use this for water projects, we're short circuiting ourselves," Helgerson said.

Hayden said he thinks the House's plan would mean less stability in financing the state's plan for improving its water supply systems. The second or third year of such projects might not get financed if they have to compete against education and welfare programs for general fund money, he said.

Also, the governor has said he will use his power to veto individual spending items to keep the budget balanced. Hayden said he will not allow the state to spend more than it takes in and compensate by eating into the general fund's treasury balances.

"I'm concerned about overspending," Hayden said, adding that he would consider vetoing the spending for the water projects.

The bill would appropriate:

- $14.44 million for the Board of Agriculture, an increase of 16.2 percent over the current fiscal year.
- $5.47 million to the Conservation Commission, a 42.3 percent increase.
- $5.27 million for the Grain Inspection Department, an increase of 4 percent.
- $32.47 million for the state fair, a 5.3 percent increase.
- $2.41 million for the water office, a 24.5 percent decrease.
- $1.36 million for the Animal Inspection Department, a 3.2 percent increase.
- $1.14 million for the Wheat Commission, a 7.4 percent decrease.

TO THE two guys at 1010 Kearney Sunday 6 p.m. Are you available? We'll be there again Thursday evening. Hope to see you there. (109-110)

BETA TOM K.—I like your style! Noticed you in organic chemistry last semester and would like to meet you. Respond if interested. Lady Stetson. (109-110)

ADPi LAURA—Do we have a birthday here? He—yes! Out with the old ID, in with the new! Happy 21st! Love, Katie, Robin, Katy, Tracey. (110)

LADY STETSON, Am curious and interested, but have bad memory. Need more info. Going to be out of town rest of week, please reply in next Monday's personals. T.K. (110)

ATTENTION HANDSOME devil. D. Devil. Had fun at the 200 but where was the grouper? (It's grouper). Dusty yogurt was the best. Our bike reflectors sure went fast and far. Hey—good luck! Your mole loves you. P.S. My scrape still hurts. (110)

AUX ETUDIANTS de Francais I (10:30 MTWU): Vousetes une bonne classe! Travaillez bien comme maintenant et vous allez avoir de bonnes notes a la fin du semestre! . . . Madame Chastan. (110)

"R"—IF you need someone to talk about the things you mentioned, and have the mental capacity to tolerate someone who is considered by most to be sort of looney, then I would like to establish a rapport of some sort. Respond in Personals if you think the 1988 Election Campaign is a joke.—The Shadow. (110)

ATO LIL Sis—Prepare to be initiated! Congratulations you are sent, cause Thursday at 7 is the big event! Sharp casual the dress, we'll celebrate afterward (more or less). Get excited, get ready to go, it's time to party with the men of ATO. (110-111)

ST. ISSY'S Gang—Renew with us! St. Isidore's! Sunday! (110)

PI PHI Mouse: Look out Kite's she's on her way, her fake ID's have been thrown away. She's finally 21 and ready to sin, Happy Birthday, Mouse, from your DDD best friend. (110)

SAE CHRIS—Hope you have a great 21st B-Day. Love, from Denver. (110)

TO ANY pleasant person of female persuasion, regardless of pretense to pulchritude: Clyde sez: if you like crazy guys with receding hairlines (like Jack Nicholson) come Fly Over the Cuckoo's Nest tonight at the Union and save me from Nurse Ratched. (110)

ALPHA ZEE Pamela, Last night I came to your house to give you your first legal taste. I was there after midnight at your 21st, cause there wasn't time to waste. I gave you the present you've wondered about, and hope you had lots of fun. I chose the ring cause it's as pretty as you, and to remind you that I love you a ton. Happy Birthday, Love, Ron. (110)

Proposed legislation affects regents schools

Admissions bill goes to House

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Although many of them oppose it, members of the House Education Committee voted Wednesday to send to the full House a proposal that would end the state's longstanding policy of open admissions at state universities.

The committee voted, 11-8, in favor of sending the bill to the full House without a recommendation. The bill was introduced by Rep. Denise Apt, R-Iola, the committee chairwoman.

Several members of the committee said they oppose the bill but think all House members should have a chance to vote on it.

A committee can send a bill to the full House with a recommendation that it be passed, no recommendation or one that it be defeated.

"There are some issues that are bigger than one committee," said Rep. David Miller, R-Eudora. "It's appropriate for all of us to deal with this one."

But, Rep. Gary Blumenthal, D-Merriam, said, "This committee does not have faith in the proposal, because if we did the recommendation would be to send it on favorably."

Under Apt's plan, universities would be required to admit only those Kansas students who had passed a set of high school courses stipulated by the State Board of Regents.

Currently, state universities must admit all graduates of Kansas high schools.

The courses are now recommended for college-bound students by the regents, who govern the six state universities. They include three years of math, science and social studies, four years of English and two years of foreign language. The foreign language would not take effect until 1994, and the others in 1992.

Apt, who did not speak in favor of the bill Wednesday, has said she favors the proposal because it will give more students, especially those in rural districts, the opportunity to take college-preparatory classes and make all students more prepared for college.

Committee endorses MOE plan

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The House Appropriations Committee endorsed a bill Wednesday to allow State Board of Regents institutions to spend $815.7 million and give their employees more generous pay raises than Gov. Mike Hayden had recommended.

The committee endorsed Hayden's proposal to increase the pay for faculty by 5 percent and by 4 percent for other university employees. However, the committee also ratified a decision it made three weeks ago to add $1.7 million to help pay for faculty salaries.

The committee's action basically approved the part of the regents' Margin of Excellence plan dealing with salaries. The regents proposal calls for increasing spending on state universities by $40.6 million in Fiscal Year 1989, which begins July 1, in an effort to make them more competitive with peers in other states.

No efforts were made to strip the $1.7 million from the individual university budgets, despite opposition to the increased financing from the committee's chairman, Rep. Bill Bunten, R-Topeka, and other Republicans on the committee.

Bunten has said he is concerned about the committee adding money to Hayden's budget proposals because the governor has repeatedly said he will not accept a budget that spends more than it takes in.

"We'd just lose every vote," Bunten said. "This is what the committee decided, and I think there'll be support for it down on the (House) floor. What I've told the members of the committee is that if we put more money into one budget, then we need to find it in another budget."

Rep. Wanda Fuller, R-Wichita, one of several Republicans who supported the increase, said she was pleased but not surprised the earlier decision stood.

"I think the decision will stay on the House side," Fuller said. "I think the House will make a strong statement on funding the Margin of Excellence."

Overall, the bill would spend nearly $2.17 million less than Hayden recommended.

Although the risk of obtaining AIDS-tainted blood has declined significantly since 1985, new information concludes that there is a small — but identifiable — risk of receiving infected blood.

An article in a recent issue of The New England Journal of Medicine has discovered that screening for the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) antibody is not foolproof and that some blood thought to be negative for the HIV antibody actually carries the fatal virus.

Some authors of the article have estimated, based on the sensitivity of HIV antibody tests and the incident rate of HIV-infected blood, that four or five of every 1 million donors who screened negative for the HIV antibody may actually be infected, the magazine states.

"If 18 million blood components are transfused each year it may be inferred that 72 to 90 persons are infected with HIV annually by transfusion of screened blood," the article states.

However, these estimates do not take into consideration the development of new infections in blood donors — a problem identified in the article.

"Calculations that include worst-case estimates of the proportion of repeat blood donors recently infected with HIV and the likelihood of their donating before the development of detectable HIV antibody suggest that as many as 460 recipients of screened blood may become infected annually," according to the article.

Mike Webb, senior in management, said the chances of receiving tainted blood doesn't worry him.

"I'm more paranoid about getting something off a toilet seat than I am about getting AIDS in a hospital," Webb said.

"I probably have a better chance of winning the lottery than I do getting AIDS."

The voluntary abstention of blood donation by persons in the "risk" groups for HIV infection, combined with laboratory testing of the blood, has reduced the risk of transfusion-associated infections. However, some persons at risk still continue to donate, and tests for HIV antibody may not detect all infected donors, according to the article.

The article also stated that most of the donors studied by The New England Journal of Medicine were probably not identified by tests of their blood because they had only recently become infected.

Studies have indicated that persons may be infected with HIV for six to 14 weeks before the antibody is detectable by commercial tests, according to the article.

Since some people at high risk of HIV infection may be pressured by co-workers or employers to donate blood, the Food and Drug Administration recommended in October 1986 that blood-collection centers offer a confidential procedure to allow donors to indicate that their blood should not be used for transfusion, according to the article.

Communications center approved

Facility to cost $6 million

By Angela Hale
Collegian Reporter

K-State administrators gave their approval Wednesday for the construction of a $6 million communications center north of Umberger Hall.

The center will provide quality television production and satellite delivery services to Kansas public schools and businesses, said Mel Chastain, director of the Educational Communication Center. It will also include studios, satellite up-links and receiving equipment.

Construction of the 28,000-square foot building is expected to begin early next year, and it should be operational by the fall of 1989, he said.

According to an agreement with the Kansas Board of Regents, the center must be accessible to all regents institutions.

The facility will supply teaching programs that might not otherwise be available to a public school, Chastain said. Courses will range from an elementary to graduate level.

Schools will receive the programs via satellites.

The center will also be used to exchange information between the regents schools, Chastain said, allowing researchers to communicate between universities more easily and "cut down on windshield time."

Productions at the center will also expand relationships between higher education institutions and businesses, he said.

"An employee could enroll and take a class without leaving the (business) environment," Chastain said.

Journalism and mass communications students will also have the chance to put the communication center to use, he said. One classroom and a studio will be used for advanced level television production classes, and an internship program will also be offered to these students.

The center is funded by a two-part, $5.9 million federal grant.

A portion of the center's operating costs will be covered by the Regents' Margin of Excellence plan, which is now before the Kansas Legislature, Chastain said.

KKK to speak at KU free-speech forum

By Judy Lundstrom
Editor

The Ku Klux Klan issue is far from over at the University of Kansas.

While Harry Jones' intermediate reporting class was meeting Wednesday in a hangar at the Lawrence Municipal Airport with two KKK members, plans were being formulated on campus for bringing Klansmen to the university to be panelists at a free-speech forum.

The forum, scheduled for 8 p.m. Monday, is sponsored by the Slightly Older Americans for Freedom organization. Its title is "Freedom of Expression in the University Environment: Voices from the Right."

The controversy began after Jones invited two Klansmen to speak to his class the week of Feb. 15. A broadcasting student found out about the plan and scheduled the men to speak on the university's radio station, KJHK JayTalk 91. Faculty members canceled the visit after protests ended in a closed meeting between a group of black community leaders and university officials.

Michael Foubert, director of Slightly Older Americans for Freedom, said he thought officials were "in error" in deciding not to allow KKK members to speak.

"Our reasoning goes back to the intent of our organization, which is to promote education in a manner in which all views are expressed," he said. "When the incident arose with the Ku Klux Klan, we determined that this was an issue we wanted to pursue."

Foubert said the forum will consist of a panel of at least three and a moderator. For the first hour of the forum, panel members will be given an opportunity to speak, he said. The second hour will be reserved for questions.

"It will focus not on the Klan being good, bad or otherwise, but on the subject of free speech," he said.

The main drawback with the forum at this point, Foubert said, is funding. Because his organization has only seven to 12 active members, he said, he did not apply for funding this year from Student Senate.

Security for the event is expected to cost about $450 per hour, said John Brothers, crime prevention sergeant with the University of Kansas Police Department.

That figure is the standard cost for security at a potentially controversial event, Brothers said.

In an event that requires extra security, the extra costs are paid by the organization that sponsors the event, he said.

Foubert said the organization would announce today how the security will be funded.

"Right now, I don't know where we'll get the money," he said.

Brothers said he could not elaborate on the specifics of security until after the event.

"All I can say is that we are presently evaluating the situation and deciding what measures to implement," he said.

The measures implemented will depend on where the forum is to take place, he said, adding that the police department does not make that decision.

Two possible sites are Woodruff Auditorium in the Student Union, which holds about 500 people, and Hoch Auditorium, which holds close to 2,000, he said.

Foubert said Hoch was the likely choice.

While campus police would not talk about security, a Klan official would.

"Security could be a problem if radical blacks and communists decide to cause trouble," said Dennis Mahon, king kleagle of the Knights of the KKK and a national officer of the organization.

He said the 20-or-so Klansmen who will be attending the event from the Kansas City area will be bringing

Second-largest church built

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast — President Felix Houphouet-Boigny says his family is paying for a huge new church whose construction has attracted attention during the West African nation's economic crisis.

Houphouet-Boigny told a visiting French boy's choir the government would never pay for construction of a church building because the nation was made up of many religious faiths.

The government daily Fraternite Matin on Wednesday quoted the president as saying that "on the streets, some people are amusing themselves by saying the basilica is financed by the Ivorian government."

"It will be a gift from my family to the Holy See," Houphouet-Boigny said.

The church will be the second-largest in the world.

Man fired after drawing Klan

SNOW HILL, Md. — A school board member who drew a sketch depicting Ku Klux Klan members staring into a pit of black people has resigned.

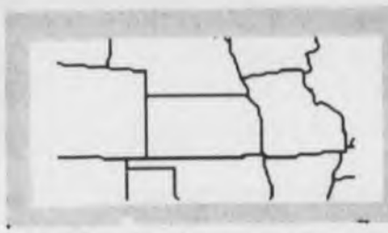
Richard Bolen, a member of the Worcester County Board of Education for four years, said he was ashamed of himself and "meant no injury or offense."

Bolen resigned Monday after the county's chapter of the NAACP criticized the sketch, which Bolen made while he was at work.

Bolen showed the drawing to a co-worker, said Jim Purnell, president of the Worcester County NAACP.

NAACP officials learned of the drawing two weeks ago and had asked Gov. William Donald Schaefer to remove Bolen from the board.

"It might have been a joke," said the Rev. Alonzo Schoolfield, an NAACP member who also works with Bolen. " ... But people we put out as role models or decision makers should be able to control that within themselves."



Starting 5 share last name

WAUSA, Neb. — Getting the attention of the Wausa High School girls basketball team is easy. Just shout "Anderson!" and the five starters will turn their heads.

The Anderson girls — only two of them related — may be the first quintet with the same last name to assemble on court in a Nebraska high school basketball game.

"Everyone notices it," said Becky Anderson, a 5-foot-11-inch junior who plays center and forward.

Becky and her cousin Lori are joined by Collette, Tiffany and Laura Anderson in the starting lineup.

Official wants salons regulated

TOPEKA — The Legislature should examine the growing number of tanning salons to see if the state needs to license and regulate them, lawmakers were told Wednesday.

Rep. Jeff Freeman, R-Burlington, told the House Committee on Pubic Health and Welfare that "tanning facilities have the potential, if misused, to cause damage down the road."

He cited an American Medical Association report saying sunlamps can cause eye damage if they are used too much.

Freeman introduced a bill that would require the state Board of Cosmetologists to license such tanning facilities and develop regulations regarding ventilation of tanning booths, cleanliness and maximum time in which a person can tan. It would also require people who use a tanning booth to wear protective glasses.

Tom Burgess, representing Affiliated Fitness Centers of Kansas City, Kan., said he did not object to the bill's concept, but urged lawmakers to study the issue further before taking any action.

Former banker sentenced

TOPEKA — The former president of the defunct First Federal Savings and Loan of Beloit was sentenced to two years in prison and placed on five years' probation Tuesday for his guilty pleas to fraud conspiracy and extortion charges.

Neil Niewald, 44, pleaded guilty in January to one count of conspiracy to defraud the government and one count of interstate travel in aid of extortion.

U.S. District Judge Richard Rogers rejected Niewald's bid for probation and ordered his prison sentence for conspiracy to be served at a facility that provides alcohol treatment and counseling. Roger gave Niewald a five-year suspended sentence on the second charge with the provision that he serve five years' of supervised probation following his release from prison.

The judge fined Niewald $5,000 and ordered him to participate in an alcohol treatment program during his probation. Rogers did not order Niewald to pay restitution because that is being handled in several civil cases in other courts.

Charges pressed in dairy hoax

WICHITA — A woman was charged Wednesday with attempted theft from the Steffen Dairy Foods Co. by claiming she had found a condom in a milk carton.

Angela Stratton, 25, was named in the charge, said Sedgwick County Prosecutor Greg Waller.

Four people were arrested after the dairy received complaints last week that unpackaged condoms had been found in milk cartons. Police determined the reports were made as a hoax to get money from the dairy.

Steffen recalled about 10,000 quart and half-gallon cardboard milk cartons Feb. 24 after getting the calls.

Two of those implicated in the case received money from Steffen, but two others did not. The woman charged Wednesday did not receive money.

Waller said he expected others would be charged later.

House passes 'landmark' civil rights bill

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House overwhelmingly passed a landmark civil rights bill Wednesday that would broaden protections for women, minorities, the elderly and the handicapped. President Reagan has vowed to veto the measure.

The Civil Rights Restoration Act, considered by many lawmakers the most significant civil rights measure in 20 years, was sent to the White House on a 315-98 vote. The Senate passed it by an equally lopsided 75-14 vote in January.

Both chambers passed the bill by the two-thirds margin needed to override a presidential veto, but it was unclear whether the huge margins would hold up following Reagan's vow Wednesday to reject the measure.

The restoration act was designed to reverse a 1984 Supreme Court decision that narrowed the scope of four major civil rights laws meant to prevent taxpayer financing of discrimination.

Supporters of the act said hundreds of discrimination complaints had been dropped or restricted since the decision.

"We have suffered far too long in waiting for this great and important day," said Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich.

In letters delivered Wednesday to several House Republicans, Reagan said flatly he will veto the measure "if it is presented to me in its current form."

In the letters, sent from Brussels, Belgium, where Reagan is attending a NATO summit, the president said the bill "dramatically expands the scope of federal jurisdiction over state and local governments and the private sector" and "poses a particular threat to religious liberty."

In the case brought by Grove City Pa. College, the Supreme Court held in a 6-3 opinion that Title IX — a law barring sex discrimination in federally funded education programs — applies only to specific programs or activities receiving federal assistance and not the institutions of which they are part.

The restoration act clarifies that entire institutions and government agencies are covered if any program or activity within them receives federal aid. The broad coverage also applies to the private sector if the aid goes to a corporation as a whole or if the recipient principally provides education, health care, housing, social services or parks and recreation.

The bill also says farmers getting crop subsidies, people on food stamps and other individuals receiving federal assistance are not required to comply with the anti-discrimination statutes.

Sponsors of the restoration act said Congress always intended broad civil rights protections on the theory that "those who dip their hands in the public till should not object if a little democracy sticks to their fingers," as Rep. Augustus Hawkins, D-Calif., put it.

But opponents claim the bill goes far beyond restoration. Like Reagan, they complained that it is too intrusive into the private sector and religious organizations.

House leaders provoked controversy by bringing the Senate's version of the civil rights bill directly to the floor Wednesday.

Measles plague Colorado

By The Collegian Staff

The Colorado Board of Health is warning students headed to the slopes for spring break that they may want to get immunized for measles first.

In the last month, more than 100 cases of measles have been confirmed in Colorado, according to the department.

Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene Student Health Center, said about 20 percent of the population is susceptible to the measles.

The percentage at universities is so high, he said, because many students have either not been immunized or only had temporary immunizations.

Another problem with controlling students' immunizations is that some students provide Lafene with incorrect information, said Cindy Burke, Lafene health educator. When students visit Lafene, they are asked about their immunization history.

"To many students, the thought of having a shot is simply not desirable and will be put off as long as possible," she said.

Blood samples taken from women who visit Lafemme Clinic are routinely checked for both measles and Rubella, German measles. However, students visiting any other area of Lafene are not routinely tested, she said.

"We recommend the student bring in a shot record. However, we don't go out on the streets. They're responsible for coming to us," said Jan Carl, registered nurse at Lafene's Allergy and Immunization Clinic

About 200 measles shots are given at Lafene each year free of charge, she said.

The symptoms of measles include a temperature, outbreak of red bumps and, in certain cases, a sore throat. The symptoms usually disappear in about seven or ten days.

The infected individual is contageous and should be kept away from others.

Bill could mandate testing state employees for drugs

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The governor's special assistant for drug and alcohol abuse asked a Senate committee Wednesday to mandate drug testing for the governor, cabinet officials and applicants to some state jobs, including Kansas Highway Patrol troopers.

The bill also would allow the state director of personnel services to screen people in "safety-sensitive" state jobs if they're suspected of using illegal drugs.

The testing would apply to state law enforcement officers who are authorized to carry firearms, prison guards and other corrections officials, the governor and lieutenant governor, heads of state agencies who are appointed by the governor and employees on the governor's staff.

"As the state's largest employer, the state can and must address this problem," said Galen Davis, special assistant to Gov. Mike Hayden.

Davis told the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee th at the governor proposed testing law-enforcement and corrections officials because they can endanger other people if their actions or judgment are impaired by drugs.

"We included the governor to establish the executive branch of the government as an example of a drug-free work force," Davis said.

The testing is part of other programs, such as providing information on drug abuse, that the governor has proposed to stop drug use among state employees, Davis said.

Sen. Norma Daniels, D-Valley Center, asked Davis why he hadn't included alcohol use in the bill. She said alcohol abuse costs the state more in terms of state workers who are unable to perform their duties than illegal drugs do.

"I think we're missing the big fish," Daniels said.

However, Davis said he only wanted to test workers for illegal drug use. Alcohol is legal, he said. Also, many supervisors can recognize when workers are impaired by alcohol, and thus already have procedures to take care of that problem, he said.

The bill being considered by the committee would allow the testing but doesn't set any guidelines how it would be done.

However, Davis also presented the committee with guidelines drawn up by him, the director of personnel services and Attorney General Robert Stephan.

The guidelines would include prior notice to job applicants that they would be tested for drug use, confidentiality of tests and rehabilitation programs for employees who tested positive for illegal drug use.

Susan Irza, director of personnel services in the state Department of Administration, said the drug tests would be done through urine samples. She said more than 1,300 state employees would fall under the bill's definitions.

Panel to discuss U.S. conflicts

FBI scouring libraries for spies

Commentary

CATHERINE DOUD
Collegian Columnist

Spring is almost here. Research papers are coming due. Thus, many students' thoughts begin to turn lightly to the library.

But beware! For lurking deep in the dark depths of the library stacks could be evil foreign spies, not only intent on recruiting students for acts of treason, but also stealing important information from that storehouse of top secret information, the public library.

I know this sounds like a cheap detective novel, but truth is stranger than fiction once again. The FBI insists that foreign spies are operating out of the libraries in the nation and has established a program especially for keeping tabs on library patrons.

This program, the Library Awareness Program, was started in 1986 after the arrest of Gennadi Zakharov, a soviet spy who often hung out in the libraries of New York. Agents claim that there have been hostile spies infiltrating the libraries for the past 10 years, trying to recruit students and making off with secret information that could be beneficial to their cause.

This is where the Library Awareness Program steps in. FBI agents want librarians to keep tabs on suspicious looking people, see what they check out, check for foreign accents, watch for suspicious behavior, and, of course, turn them in to the FBI. Agents claim that an alert librarian would be able to check your handwriting and thus be able to tell whether you are a research student or a threat to all mankind. All students with terroristic-looking handwriting beware!

The FBI is not the only agency investigating the public libraries. The Treasury Department and the Secret Service have also approached librarians asking for information on individuals, such as what materials they checked out. However, the FBI is the only agency to admit having an entire program set up just for library surveillance.

Luckily for the American reading public, librarians aren't letting the FBI play Big Brother without a fight. Thirty-seven states have laws protecting library records, thus making what the FBI is doing illegal. Libraries in states not protected by these laws are following the guidelines of the American Library Association, which forbids the disclosure of any information without a court order. In fact, some libraries are installing computer systems that erase the records of book checkouts after they are turned in so that there is no lasting record.

The FBI, however, is ready to go to great lengths to secure the information it deems important for national security. A New York FBI agent was quoted in Sunday's Kansas City Star as saying, "We can't let organizations like the American Library Association affect our internal policies. Several hundred university and public libraries exist in the city and we will try to hit all of them."

In some cases, librarians have been put in jail for refusing to testify, as in the case of former librarian Zoia Horn, who refused to testify in the Harrisburg Seven case. However, everyone indicted in this case was acquitted.

The impact of this increased surveillance of libraries could be severe. The libraries have traditionally been a place for the dissemination of information. Thus, they protect the freedom of the press and freedom of speech. The FBI, trying to catch a minority of people, is jeopardizing the rights of everyone.

Students entering a library are now faced with the possibility that what they read and check out may be used against them in court at a later time. Of course, it is unwise to read any government documents while you are there, since this is considered by the FBI to be important information. And anyone with a foreign accent, or who looks foreign, should probably just send someone to the library for them. You never can tell who might be spying on you.

The whole thing is not only ridiculous, it is violation of civil rights. The FBI, after so recently being exposed for spying on students at Wichita State University and the University of Kansas, is further degrading its image by admitting that it is scavenging around the libraries of the nation looking for spies.

Librarians, who admit that they wouldn't know a spy if one came up and bit them on the arm, aren't law enforcement officers. They should not be expected to act as such. Librarians and states that are upholding the rights of patrons to use public and university libraries without the fear of being spied on should be commended. The FBI needs to be put in check when it comes to the violation of individual rights.

Don't forget: Big Brother might not only be watching you, he could be reading over your shoulder.

Students battle broken equipment in Farrell

Farrell Library may once again come out on the short end of the stick. A proposal for four new coin copiers is being compiled to present to Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries. Due to a lack of funding, though, the purchase may not be possible.

New copy card machines were purchased not long ago in order to make things more convenient for students. A copy card can be purchased for $5 and renders 88 copies. The machine can make reductions so two pages of a book can go on one copy. Sounds like a great deal, right? Don't be too quick to answer.

The copy card machine on the first floor is currently broken until parts come in, and the other two card copy machines are out of order more often than they should be to make purchasing a copy card a good deal to the student. This may seem trivial, but when students are engaged in research it is troublesome to run around the library to find a working copy card machine.

It really isn't the library's fault. According to a library official, the equipment is bought through a bidding procedure, and almost always, as in the case of the copy card machines in the library, a manufacturer's contract is part of the bid. This means no company can fix or service the machines except for the parent manufacturer, and the parent won't teach anyone how to fix or service the machines.

When the copy card machine breaks, it may be some time before the machine is fixed. Some time may elapse before it is reported, then more time goes by after a call is put in to the service department of the company that owns the machine until the servicer gets to the library to fix the machine. By this time it could be a full working day before the machine is fixed. This is a great inconvenience to the student.

The library is attempting to rectify the situation. Student workers have been instructed on how to fix the minor problems, such as low ink or paper, in order to keep the copy card machines working more of the time. However, the true answer lies in giving the library more funds to purchase new copiers.

The library is trying to meet the needs of the student and faculty, but it is difficult with much needed monies constantly being directed to other sources. According to officials it is also difficult to be responsive when no one voices the problems by using the suggestion box.

Perhaps only patience and a little luck will prevent students from becoming unnecessarily enraged over the broken-down equipment.

State should toughen odometer rollback laws

Kansas is seen by some out-of-staters as a good place to sell "fixed" cars.

A problem has become apparent recently with cars being resold in Kansas after their odometers had been rolled back in other states. Kansas has become a good place to get away with this practice because of a lack of strict laws and the failure to enforce the existing laws.

According to Attorney General Robert Stephan's office, odometer rollback is a major problem in Kansas. Because of that, the Kansas Legislature is currently considering how to achieve better control over odometer tampering.

It is time for Kansas lawmakers to send out a strong message to the less-than-scrupulous car dealers who enjoy cheating Kansans. Lawmakers need to make it clear, through strict laws and unwavering enforcement of those laws, that Kansans will no longer tolerate this cheap method of squeezing a few, or even several, extra dollars out of car buyers.

Until such a message is delivered, prospective automobile buyers should make an effort to check out the legitimacy of the odometer reading by comparing the mileage reading on the vehicle and the title. Or, they can call the car's former owner. If a discrepancy is apparent, they should then question the dealer about it.

Car dealers should also be concerned about odometer rollback since they can also be hurt if they buy tampered cars from wholesalers, other dealers or previous owners. Whether the dealers know of the tampering or not, they could be blamed for the tampering and have to make restitution for the crime, as was the case in a recent investigation by the Kansas Department of Revenue.

The Legislature should see that the state do more than just require the checking of mileage of cars brought into Kansas. Such a requirement was made in 1983, yet the problem remains a real one in this state.

Lawmakers are taking the first step by considering the problem. But action, not just consideration, is needed if Kansans are ever able to buy a used car without worrying about a rolled-back odometer.

Critical situation

Editor,

I would like to address the critical situation facing the KSU Childcare Cooperative. The availability of high-quality child care is vital to the educational success of increasing numbers of student-parents. To help meet this need, all Kansas regents universities that have child care centers receive an on-going allocation from their student bodies (including the University of Kansas, The Wichita State University, Emporia State University, Fort Hays State University plus non-regents school Washburn University) — all with the exception of K-State.

See related views/Page 5

On Tuesday afternoon, I read a letter from student senator Todd Johnson to his fellow student senators on why he chooses not to support quality child care at K-State. While I believe everyone is entitled to his or her own opinion, he sought to express his views via a letter loaded with errors and misrepresentations.

Contrary to Mr. Johnson's "facts," there is no K-State support to relieve the burden of child care tuition at the present time, and the only form of financial aid available to help pay the high cost of child care is student loans. Mr. Johnson further argues that the co-op only benefits 162 students. It would be impossible to meet the needs of every student-parent in the University through the co-op alone. But continued high quality care at the co-op increases child care standards in the entire community.

In his letter, Mr. Johnson also accused the co-op of being an elitist institution and too expensive for students. I agree that fees need to be reduced, but this won't be possible without student and University administration support.

By ignoring the needs of non-traditional K-State students, many of whom require child care, isn't Johnson promoting K-State as an elitist institution catering only to those individuals who fit the traditional college demographics — white, single men between 18 to 22 years of age?

Where are fans?

Editor,

So what has happened to the famous "sixth man" at K-State basketball games? It appears to us that the student body must have come down with laryngitis just after the University of Oklahoma upset. Last Saturday sounded more like an opera than a basketball game.

Ten years ago if Oklahoma State had had the ball and a one point lead, you couldn't have carried on a conversation with the person next to you. With a little help from the "sixth man," maybe the University of Kansas game would have turned out a little different.

K-State fans are the greatest in the land.

On Saturday, let's raise the roof, bring the walls down and take that "Grand Old Barn" out in style!

Mind control

Editor,

Re: Dave Kingsley's guest column in Monday's Collegian. Kingsley's column on Ku Klux Klan speech rights shows a painful ignorance of First Amendment principles that demands an answer.

Speech advocating illegal behavior is not protected by the Constitution, nor are "fighting words" likely to result in immediate violence. Some KKK speech is thus unprotected. But at the University of Kansas, the plan was for the KKK members to explain their ideas as ideas, so they could be understood and evaluated.

What is Kingsley afraid of? If the KKK's ideas are insane and heinous, then surely students will recognize them as such. What I fear is governmental actors (such as school administrators) deciding for me what ideas are "safe" or not. Certain people in government consider CISPES, SISCA, the PLO and anyone "communist" to be "terrorist."

Kingsley's position seems to be that any "terrorist" group ought to have all of their speech suppressed by state action. That is mind control, bub, and is precisely what the Constitution forbids.

Let KKK speak

Editor,

Re: Dave Kingsley's guest column.

According to First Amendment scholar Franklyn Haiman, racist speech — though odious — deserves constitutional protection because:

- suppression gives us the false impression that racism doesn't exist;
- suppression drives racist speech underground where it "takes on the added appeal of forbidden fruit";
- confronting racist speech is educational because it enhances citizens' ability to critically respond to racism;
- and suppression would lead to further censorship of speech which some people find offensive.

As a former member of the Supreme Court once said: "Sunlight is the best disinfectant." Let the Ku Klux Klan speak so their absurdity can be made clear to all. The solution to bad speech is more speech, not censorship.

Debating Senate's child care co-op bill

CON

Fee funding futile

Editor,

I feel the proposed plan for the KSU Childcare Cooperative is a good idea. The reason I'm writing this letter is because I think the financing of this wonderfully humanitarian gesture is way off mark. I agree that parents should be able to send their children to a day care center and not be taxed beyond their means. I also think that an increase in salaries would help to retain employees at the co-op.

But the entire student body of K-State does not need to be taxed in order to fulfill the needs of selected families. These funds could be sought in areas other than the students' pocketbooks. Students are paying more than their share and will continue to do so for some time. Funding for this project could be sought through a search for sponsors or a special contribution campaign. I imagine even a grant may be in order if the proper administrative agencies were contacted.

Time and again, K-Staters have given money in the form of special fees in order to have what other universities get the state to pay for. Every time the Student Governing Association passes legislation to tax the student for improvements to the campus and to get the facilities we think we really deserve, we are sending a message to the state legislators. We tell them that we don't need their funding.

We are perfectly willing to pay for anything we need out of our students' pockets and the pockets of their parents. This suggests that the alumni need not contribute to the betterment of the University because the student is always there to bear the burden. And pay we will — through the nose.

The time has come to stop taxing the students for all these projects that deserve state funding to begin with. After all, I still pay state income tax on my meager income. Some of that tax money could be spent here to improve K-State.

In conclusion, the co-op does deserve help for the good work it is doing but not at the expense of the entire student body — not even $1 per semester. If this bill passes SGA, the state legislators will sleep soundly knowing they won't need to allocate any additional funds to K-State, because at K-State the students pay. And pay and pay and pay.

Benefit the many

Editor,

I read with interest the recent editorial in the Collegian urging Student Senate to increase student fees in order to support the KSU Childcare Cooperative on campus.

First, it should be kept in mind that when the co-op was first established, the founders agreed that it would not be dependent on University support and that it would be a true cooperative.

The co-op has not abided by the second condition and now it seems that it is not willing to abide by the first. Instead of subsidizing the co-op, Senate should instead encourage the cooperative to become a true cooperative as it was originally envisaged so that parents share at least some of the responsibility of the co-op and secondly to urge the cooperative to base fees on the earnings of both parents.

One cannot quarrel with the concept of giving the faculty and students more "perks" — but at what expense? It is true that we are in the bottom of the Big Eight Conference as far as child care, but then we are usually in the bottom of the lower 48 states in just about every category — including salary and library support — that one can name.

Just where are our priorities when the editors of the student paper talk about the co-op, which benefits only a very few, and fail to address the vital need for scholarships and library materials which benefit all at K-State?

When each department on campus is making the excruciating decision of how to cut between 25 and 30 percent of Farrell Library's serials budget, where is the campus paper then?

The horrible fact is that we have few, embarrassingly few, resources on campus. How do we allocate those resources — to benefit a few or benefit the many?

Should we spend the money on library materials and scholarships that benefit not only the present but future generations or subsidize a few? If the Student Senate has extra money, perhaps it should consider sending it to the library or giving it to the scholarship fund.

National trends, quality of care justify more funding for center

Commentary

STACIA PHEFFER
Guest Columnist

Child care at K-State: Why is it important to you as a student? Granted, many of you are saying, "Why, it isn't." Perhaps a more appropriate question would be, "Why should child care be important to you?"

The current national trend toward child care is inarguable. All around the country, work forces and campuses are updating facilities to include day care centers. The need in undeniable, and the world is adjusting to meet this need. This is a case where change is necessary in order for K-State to remain competitive with other universities. This is especially important in this modern era when the average age of students is on a constant incline. K-State must be able to meet the needs of these new, older students — students with families, with children.

Simply stated, good, safe and affordable day care is essential to any student with children. In this context, good means more than just adequate supervision. It means a challenging curriculum designed to meet and surpass the needs of all age groups. Also necessary is a staff that is caring and committed to you and your children.

Safe refers to the fact that all safety regulations are met and followed, with a sufficient number of staff on hand to meet any and all challenges. But perhaps most important to students on fixed incomes is the aspect of affordability. This means a facility that recognizes and includes the special, financial interests of students.

Upon visiting the KSU Childcare Cooperative, I found that it not only met, but exceeded all preceding criteria. The staff proved to be knowledgeable. They proved to be professional. They proved to be dedicated. But most of all, they provided a genuinely caring atmosphere for the children. The children responded with both interest and curiosity, and at the same time appeared relaxed and at home in their classroom environment.

Since its origin, the co-op has remained relatively independent. After initial renovation fees from students, the center has survived primarily on its own resourcefulness. Unfortunately, this is no longer possible for several reasons. The major one is that the center cannot maintain its present level of excellence without raising fees. The implications of a fee hike would be disastrous, making the co-op less affordable to the students and, hence, less accessible.

The only way to keep the KSU Childcare Cooperative open to the students is for those currently enrolled to recognize their obligation to the University of today and of the future. Tonight, students will have the opportunity to accept this obligation. Student senators will be presented with a vote — a vote on which the future of the co-op may well depend.

A line item of $1 for full-time students and 50 cents for part-time students is requested. The money this will generate will be used primarily to finance children's scholarships for those students who can show sufficient need. Any remaining funds shall be allocated toward the salaries of the co-op's student employees.

A "yes" vote on this issue will keep our child care center alive and accessible, and affirm K-State's position as a progressive institution of higher learning.

Money well spent

Editor,

I am a graduate student and a parent. As such I am writing this letter to support the KSU Childcare Cooperative. Tonight, Student Senate will decide whether or not to provide financial assistance to the co-op. Why is the co-op so important? And why is this funding so vital? The following list quickly comes to mind. The child care co-op:

- is not a babysitting depository. It is a care center staffed by trained teachers. The teachers have four-year degrees and are certified in early childhood education.
- provides a safe, caring and educational place for the children of K-State students, faculty and staff.
- provides a positive learning environment where children develop and increase their social skills, self-discipline and cognitive skills.
- is a place where children grow and learn through play and peer interaction. They have fun.
- allows parents to leave their children with confidence so that they can concentrate on their studies and jobs.
- has the largest licensed-capacity child care facility in Kansas.
- is the only university-affiliated day care center in the state that is not funded by the student government of the university it serves.

The short-sighted would argue that those without children should not be expected to pay for child care. To that I would say, where would public education be in this country if everyone had that idea? Most of us were able to go to school not only because our parents and their parents thought it was worthwhile but also because the community as a whole thought it was important.

We parents are not asking for a free ride for our children. We're asking for financial assistance. I currently pay $514 a month for two children so I can go to school full-time and concentrate on my studies. All parents pay for their children's attendance. The requested financial support will go toward closing the gap between actual operational costs and the amount charged to lower-income parents (most of whom are students) for their children's fees.

The requested $1 per semester per full-time student and 50 cents per semester per part-time student assessment works out to two Cokes for each full-time and one Coke for each part-time student. Hopefully, quality child care and early education are worth at least that much at K-State!

As child care increasingly becomes a national issue, K-State has an opportunity to exercise some positive leadership and genuine commitment to education — everyone's education, no matter what the age.

Miller Ranch development adopted by consortium

By Nancy Chartrand
Staff Writer

A conceptual masterplan for a 20-year phased development of the Miller Ranch on Manhattan's west side was adopted by the Bluemont Consortium Board of Trustees.

It calls for a varied use of the land, including a research campus, light industrial park, conference center, retirement community, single family residents, cluster housing and dedicated recreational facilities that will be financed by occupants of the project.

Those recommendations will be determined after public hearings, reviews by public agencies, market research and consultation with those financing the development. The concept, approved at the meeting last Wednesday, is not a specific recommendation for the final components of the developmental project.

The plan will be submitted for public comment at 7:30 p.m., March 22, in the auditorium of Manhattan's Fire Station Headquarters.

"The action by the consortium trustees establishes the groundwork for what could be potentially the most far-reaching, cooperative enterprise which the Manhattan area has ever seen," said Jack Goldstein, chairman of the board for the Consortium.

Development of the Miller Ranch, a piece of land west of Manhattan the consortium has an option to buy, is seen as a benefit to K-State.

"This project is a critical ingredient in ensuring that Kansas State University will be competitive with other major comprehensive research institutions," said Bob Krause, board member and vice president for institutional advancement at K-State.

"(It also) positions the University to attract research funds and helps focus its total economic development effort," he said.

The consortium, a cooperative association of the KSU Foundation, the city of Manhattan and the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, studied sites for a year, and chose the 800-acre ranch from 12 alternative sights.

Jerry Ogburn of the planning firm of Peckham, Guyton, Albers & Viets said, the total investment for a 10-to-20-year phased development would cost an estimated $100 million to $200 million.

Development guidelines for the project specify devoting 40 percent of the land to open space for a managed land preserve.

According to Marjorie Morse, consortium director and county commissioner, the project would benefit Riley County by creating the potential for additional jobs and broadening the tax base for its citizens.

"(The project will) link the resources of state, county and city government with those of private industry and a major university to create a quality of economic development which is not common in Kansas," said Robert Freilich, consultant to the consortium.

Language need discussed

By The Collegian Staff

By the year 2010, Spanish will challenge English as the most spoken language in the United States, said George Garcia, the superintendent of the Kansas City, Mo., school district.

His lecture, sponsored by the Mexican American Council of Students, discussed the importance of teachers knowing a second language.

"Hispanics are the fastest growing minority," Garcia said. "There are 12 million Hispanics in the United States today and by the year 2000, they will be the largest minority in the United States."

By 2010, the majority of workers, laborers and people in the service areas will be a minority, Garcia said.

That means the people paying the taxes and contributing to Social Security will also be a minority, he said.

In light of these facts, Garcia said that successfully educating minorities will become a priority in the next 22 years.

The largest school districts in the United States — New York, Los Angeles and Chicago — all have at least a 50 percent minority enrollment, as does the Kansas City district, he said.

"The majority of people in the urban centers are poor," Garcia said. "The challenge is to educate students in this environment, and speaking their language would help."

Fund-raiser falls short of goal

By The Collegian Staff

The pig didn't get to pucker this year.

Last year, Students Against Driving Drunk sponsored a "Kiss the Pig" fund-raiser where students voted through donations on who would kiss Squeaky the pig. Head basketball coach Lon Kruger and Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life, were the winners, but this year there were no winners.

"We just didn't get the turn-out we expected," said Shane Walck, junior in leisure studies and president of SADD. "There weren't enough votes, so it wasn't worth it."

The people receiving the most votes were the presidents of the residence halls, sororities and fraternities. Although a table for voting was set up in the Union last Thursday, Friday and Saturday, the fund-raising efforts netted only $6.

"We might try it again, but it won't be until next semester if even then," Walck said.

"I don't know what we will do as far as fund-raisers for the rest of the year," he added.

Construction on Ahearn Field House began in 1948, and was completed in 1950.

AHEARN

The end of an era, but not the tradition

When the lights dim and the last fans file out of Ahearn Field House Saturday, the history and tradition of a 38-year era of K-State basketball will come full circle.

Ahearn Field House, a building which has come to hold a special place in many hearts, will hold its last crowd, feel the pounding of its last feet and have its last moment in the sun as the home of K-State basketball — a moment that is sure to be special.

"(Saturday's) going to be really special," K-State coach and one-time player Lon Kruger said. "Ahearn's been a building that has produced a lot of great memories for everyone that has been associated with K-State."

How is it that a building made of native white limestone, glass block, concrete, steel and wood has come to be almost revered by basketball fans everywhere?

"The building generates an intimacy," K-State athletic director Larry Travis said. "People are in there tight and close — it's just the feeling. The noise level and the intensity that has been there has been something that's hard to forget."

"When you look at something that's been around for 38 years, you become attached," Kruger added.

Ahearn wasn't always an icon in the eyes of K-State followers. Alumni and current students remember with ease the difficulties faced when Fred Bramlage Coliseum, heir to the purple-and-white tradition, was proposed.

"The building generates an intimacy. People are in there tight and close — it's just the feeling. The noise level and the intensity that has been there has been something that's hard to forget."
—Larry Travis

And just as opposition to Bramlage Coliseum was apparent since the idea of a replacement for Ahearn was conceived in 1979, so too did Ahearn face problems when it was first proposed.

The first game in Kansas State College Field House was played Dec. 9, 1950. But the drive to make that field house a reality started 10 years earlier in 1940.

A student rally was held, which spurred an extended period of demonstrations, petitions and talking to state legislators about constructing a new facility to house sports teams, plus serve as host to classes, guest speakers, 4-H conventions and other activities.

But central to the students' cause was the matter of basketball seating — or rather, the lack of it. Nichols Gymnasium, the 2,800-seat structure which had been home to the 'Cats for 30 years, was outdated and not large enough to accommodate the growing student body and increased requests for tickets.

Students began their field house campaign with the slogan "Let's have a Crackerjack Field House instead of a Crackerbox Coliseum." Petitions were circulated and legislators were confronted as support for the field house grew.

In April, 1940, the student drive hit a new high when a mock cornerstone-laying ceremony was held prior to a send-off of 12 students who were going to Topeka to petition then-Gov. Payne Ratner.

In January, 1941, things got even deeper when 100 state legislators witnessed a body fall through the rafters of Nichols where many students were forced to sit. Even though the body was made straw and covered with ketchup instead of blood, the students got their point across, and, in time, were rewarded for their efforts.

The Kansas Senate approved the University's request in 1948, and construction began on the $2 million dollar field house. When it opened in 1950, the eyes of Kansas and the country were upon it. The field house was the largest facility in the state and the fifth largest in the country.

"It was a much-talked about thing," said Dick Knostman, an All-American in 1952 and 1953 who was one of the first players to play in Ahearn. "It cost about $2 million. Anymore, you can't put in a basement for that.

"It was great. It was fantastic," he added. "We were used to old Nichols, so this was quite a change. Of course, Ahearn wasn't completely finished yet, so we showered at Nichols and were bussed to the game. We wore these big capes — we looked like Superman.

"And the crowd was just ... just loud. That's a great tradition."

Knostman, who lives about three hours southwest of Denver, said he tries to make it to Manhattan "once or twice" a year for games. He won't be at Ahearn Saturday, but he will be thinking about the field house and his memories of it, he said.

"We look back on those years as the greatest," he said.

Lloyd Krone was a member of the last team to play in Nichols during the 1949-50 season. Although he never got the chance to play in Ahearn, he said the fact the field house was finally built was "superb."

"Here, after playing all those years in a place where only a few people could get in, was a chance for people to get to see the game," he said. "Before, people would line up all the way down to Kite's (Bar and Grille) just to get into Nichols."

Krone, who is retired and lives in Dallas, said the atmosphere did not change much once the basketball headquarters moved into Ahearn. The crowds were still loud, and "the spirit was still there. It still is."

Over the years, K-State teams have compiled a winning percentage near .800 in Ahearn. Six perfect seasons have been posted in the building. It became a home for Wildcat basketball All-Americans Ernie Barrett (1951); Knostman; Jack Parr (1957, 1958); Bob Boozer (1958, 1959); Mike Wroblewski (1962); Chuckie Williams (1976); and Rolando Blackman (1980, 1981.)

"One of the reasons I attended K-State was because of the field house," said Parr, who played under Coach Tex Winter. Parr lives in Salina and owns a consulting firm. "At the time I was (at K-State) it was one of the best facilities in the state. It was a great time for me and the K-State basketball program."

Other greats — Willie Murrell, Steve Mitchell, Mike Evans, Ed Nealy and Kruger — are among the 185 players who have worn K-State's colors in Ahearn.

And, as was originally intended by the students, Ahearn has been used for events other than basketball. In 1951, the field house was used to shelter 600 to 800 victims of a July 13 flood along the Kansas River. Livestock shows often took place in Ahearn. Politicians and other distinguished speakers have been heard in the building, including Sen. Robert Kennedy (1968); Pres. Richard Nixon (1970); Pres. Ronald Reagan (1982); and Costa Rican Pres. Oscar Arias Sanchez (1987).

Saying goodbye Saturday will be difficult for many people — Kruger especially, because of his unique tie to the field house as player and coach.

"It's going to be like losing something that's dear to you and that always carries an emotional tie," he said.

K-State students demonstrated the "poor" state of affairs and the need for a new coliseum by wearing wooden barrels.

Fans are packed to the rafters at a Wildcat game in 1980. Ahearn originally seated 13,000 people, but renovations decreased its capacity to 11,220.

Brian Kramer and Rob Peimann, both freshmen in architectural engineering, and Dan Cross, sophomore in mechanical engineering, play cards while waiting outside Ahearn Field House before the last home game against University of Kansas. Camping out before games and waiting in line for the gates to open have evolved into traditions of their own over the years in Ahearn.

Ahearn will not become obsolete after Saturday. A commemorative book on the field house is being put together and will be available for $16.95. Those interested in purchasing this book can pick up an information slip at the game Saturday. Ads about the book will also appear in the Collegian.

Offices and classes will still be located and held in Ahearn, and its future is still being debated for use by other athletic programs at K-State.

And the entity that makes Ahearn what it is — the people — will carry on in Bramlage Coliseum.

"The tradition will carry on," Travis said. "People are what make traditions."

Senate to discuss child co-op funding

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate members will vote tonight on a new student fee to benefit the KSU Childcare Cooperative.

The Student Affairs and Social Services Standing Committee is sponsoring a bill, if passed, that will raise fees for students attending K-State. Fees will be increased by a dollar per semester for full-time students, 50 cents per semester for part-time students, and 10 cents per credit hour for students enrolled in less than six hours.

Senate bill 88/11 states that the co-op provides high quality child care and wishes to attract and retain college-trained professional personnel. The bill also states that the co-op provides care to low-income students at a rate lower than its costs while also providing employment for approximately 50 K-State students.

Esther Gray, assistant director of the co-op, said at last week's senate meeting that the program is being run under cost and will not be able to continue without outside funding.

The co-op is asking for $79,000 from President Jon Wefald in order to raise the pay for co-op teachers, and $54,000 from student fees to redress its imbalance between costs and income.

Gray said students that have heard about the child care center have taken interest in what they have seen.

Forums will address issue of overcrowding

By The Collegian Staff

Members of the Manhattan Board of Education initiated a series of nine community forums Wednesday to inform area residents on the problem of overcrowding in USD 383.

Hal Rowe, superintendent of schools, and other board members will attend the meetings to answer questions on overcrowding and to make general comments on the proposed solutions to the growing student population problem.

"I will attend each meeting to conduct a question-and-answer session," Rowe said.

Roger Reitz, board president, recommended board members attend as many of the community meetings as possible.

Active participation by the board members will not only help to inform the general public, but will benefit the school district as well, he said.

"With two or three of (the board members) at each meeting, we can at least all hear the facts the same way," Reitz said.

In other business, the board heard a presentation of the recently completed in-house study of Manhattan Area Vo-tech and reviewed the itinerary for the upcoming accreditation team that will tour the school March 23-25.

The board approved a motion to revise sections of the math and music curricula for Manhattan High and Manhattan Middle schools. The motion cut back on some of the low interest music classes at the middle school and broadened enrollment standards for math classes at the high school.

The broadened math curriculum will allow some of the middle-level students to work with the upper-level students in the same classroom. Faculty said this will bring more of the students to the same level of learning.

Beverly Eversmeyer, board member, said she hopes the upper level students are not confined to a "common ground" because of the additional class time some of the other students may require.

Space shortage causes problems

Too many materials for too little space is causing problems in the Chemistry/Biochemistry Library in Willard Hall that may not find a solution for about ten years.

The problems have resulted from the increasing number of research materials in the library and the lack of space to accommodate them, said Ruth Nellis, head of the library.

"We've been at 100 percent capacity for quite awhile," Nellis said. "We've been putting books on the tops of shelves — which is bad for the books — and students can't get to them."

The library's problems are not expected to be permanently solved until it moves into second phase of the Chemistry/Biochemistry building. That phase is still in the planning stages.

However, an immediate solution must be developed to keep the library operating efficiently, Nellis said.

"Until recently, we had no room to bring books back and put them on the shelves — everything was full," she said.

The library has added three shelving units and placed existing shelves closer together in order to make the most of the situation.

Materials that are more than 20-years-old were transferred from Willard to Farrell Library, with the exception of a few older research journals, Nellis said.

"This means the collection is split — people have to go two different places for materials," she said. "Students and faculty would rather have the materials available here."

Despite the problems, Nellis said she has not had any complaints from the library's users.

"The majority of the library's users are graduate students with offices of their own," she said.

Bhuvana Gopalakrishnan, graduate student in biochemistry, said she has had few problems locating material on the shelves.

"They have tried to add more desks and a lot of new books are available," she said. "The staff is very helpful."

Al Olsen, graduate student in chemistry, said he believes additional space for the library would benefit students' research.

"It would help to bring the older journals from Farrell back over here," he said. "I spend a lot of time in transit between the two buildings."

The library definitely needs more space, but many factors must be considered before a change is made, said Helen Cooper, space analyst for the Department of Facilities Planning.

"We need to decide how much we want to spend, where to add space and what the long term effects are on using Willard (as an addition)," she said.

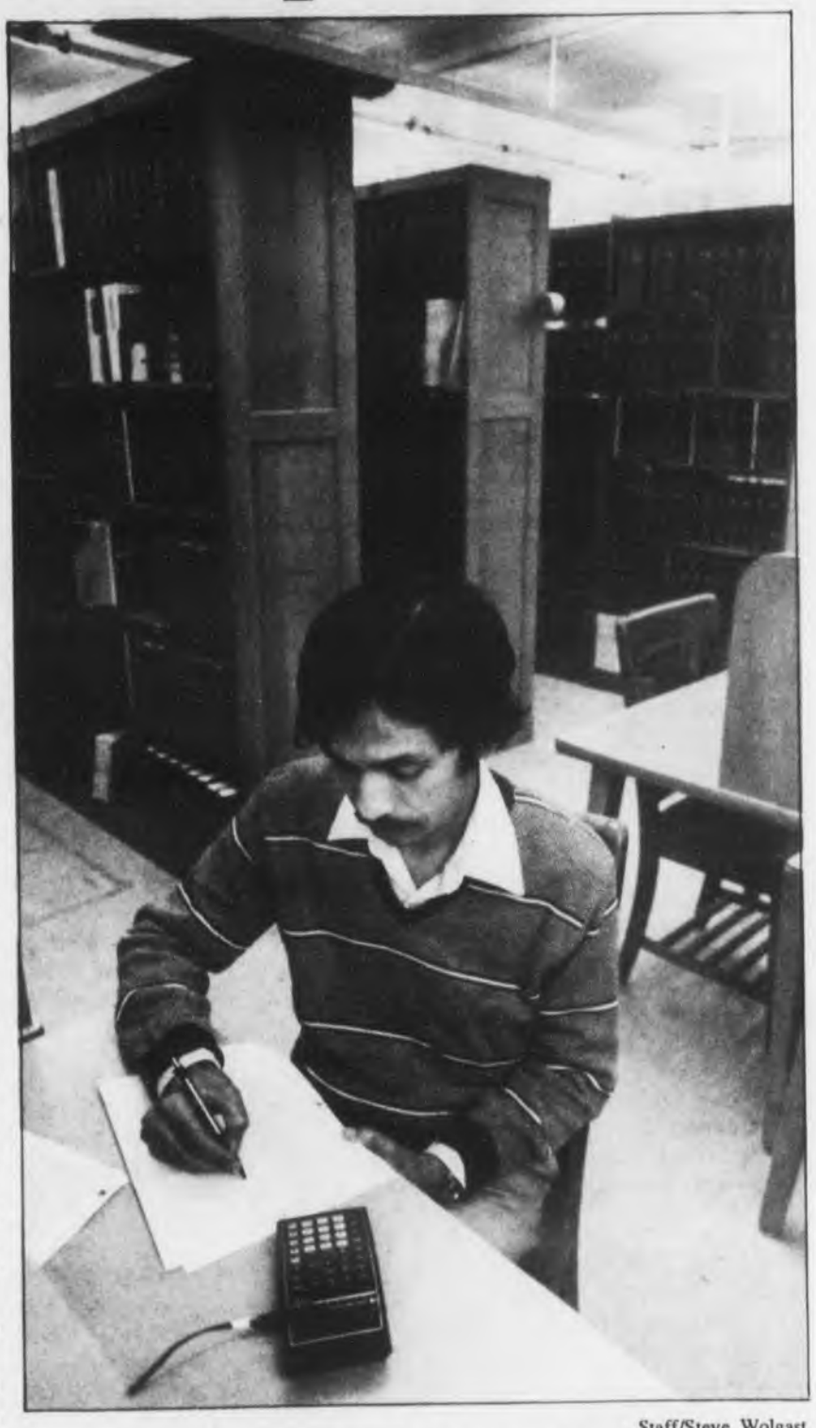
A temporary measure, Cooper said, is using the help room next to the library as an addition.

"We have the back of the help room right now, but we need a larger space to be effective," Nellis said.

Student seating, desks and the library's computer terminal may be placed in the help room, thus, more space would be created for materials in the old area, she said.

A second alternative is to use the lab space directly above the library.

That space, Nellis said, will become vacant when the labs move into the first phase of the Chemistry/Biochemistry building this fall.



However, the expense of renovating the lab may prevent its use as a library.

"The lab must be stripped, and a stairway built from first to second floor," Cooper said.

"A rough estimate of the cost would be $25,000 to $30,000," she said, but she is unsure of who will provide the funding for the addition.

"The library (Farrell) does not have the funds nor does the biochemistry or chemistry departments," Cooper said.

The cost of renovating the help room would only involve the installation of a doorway that could be covered by the two departments, she said.

Staff/Steve Wolgast

M. Fazlul Hoq, graduate in chemistry, works in the chemistry/biochemistry library in Willard Hall, which has become overcrowded.

Expanding into rooms that are adjacent to the library is really not a consideration, Cooper said. The offices are departmental and are not moving into the new building.

Other requests for space in Willard must also be taken into consideration, she said.

If the renovation of Calvin Hall is approved, much of the space that will be vacated in Willard Hall due to the new building will be used to house the administrative offices from Calvin, Cooper said.

"Any of the alternatives we are looking at cannot be considered long term solutions, only temporary," Cooper said.

Wildcats get road win over Huskers, 77-67

Trio of Richmond, Henson, Scott score in double digits

By Tom Perrin
Sports Writer

LINCOLN, Neb. — Maybe it's the pressure of playing the last season in Ahearn Field House. Or it could be all the distractions that go along with a home game.

Whatever the case, K-State seems to play better on the road than at home. If there was any doubt, Wednesday night's 77-67 win over Nebraska can serve as the final piece of evidence.

"We've played better on the road. I think we've finally come to recognize that. As to why, we're not sure," K-State coach Lon Kruger said. "I think we concentrate better. We recognize that it's going to take a great effort."

Wildcat point guard Steve Henson had a similar theory.

"We know it's going to be tough on the road. I think we just do a good job of getting mentally prepared for it," he said. "Today, we were in the hotel all day. There's not much to do but sit around and think about the game."

Kruger had few complaints about the Wildcats' performance at the Bob Devaney Sports Center, a place where they lost 78-76 last year.

Nebraska took a 9-1 lead in the first three minutes of the game, but got only one basket in the next five minutes. The Wildcats took a 13-11 lead on a 3-pointer by Will Scott with 12 minutes left in the half.

Nebraska's Beau answered with his own 3-pointer and the Huskers maintained a slim lead through the half, going to the lockerrooms with a 42-36 lead.

"It's nice to watch a quality team. I really think they're going to do some things in the (Big Eight Conference) tournament and the NCAA (tournament)."

—Danny Nee

K-State came out smoking in the second half, hitting 12 of 17 shots for 70.6 percent to bury the Cornhuskers.

"The second half might have been as well as we've played in awhile," Kruger said.

Nebraska coach Danny Nee was impressed with the 'Cats as well.

"It's nice to watch a quality team," Nee said of K-State. "I really think they're going to do some things in the (Big Eight Conference) tournament and the NCAA (tournament)."

With the win, K-State moves to 19-7 overall and clinches second place in the Big Eight with a 10-3 mark. Nebraska falls to 13-16 and 4-9 in the conference.

After a three-game stretch where he scored below his 23.8 point average in Big Eight games, K-State's Mitch Richmond finally broke loose. Richmond was under control all the way, sinking 10 of 15 shots and scoring 24 points.

"I just wanted to come out tough and aggressive from the start, but not try to rush things," Richmond said. "I tried to come out in the first half and just do like I've been doing."

Steve Henson continued his offensive improvement with 18 points and Will Scott scored 15 points, including four three-pointers.

But it was Richmond's consistent play on both ends of the court that played the biggest role in K-State's win.

"I thought Mitch played outstanding. He made great decisions, he made shots for others," Kruger said. "He jumped up there when we needed big baskets to keep them from gaining the momentum in the second half after we got the lead."

Beau Reid led Nebraska with 13 points, 12 of which came in the first half. Henry T. Buchanan was next with 12 points, and Jeff Rekeweg had 11 points.

After the first half, it appeared the Wildcats could be in for the same type of struggle they faced in their earlier meeting with Nebraska, a 65-63 win at Ahearn.

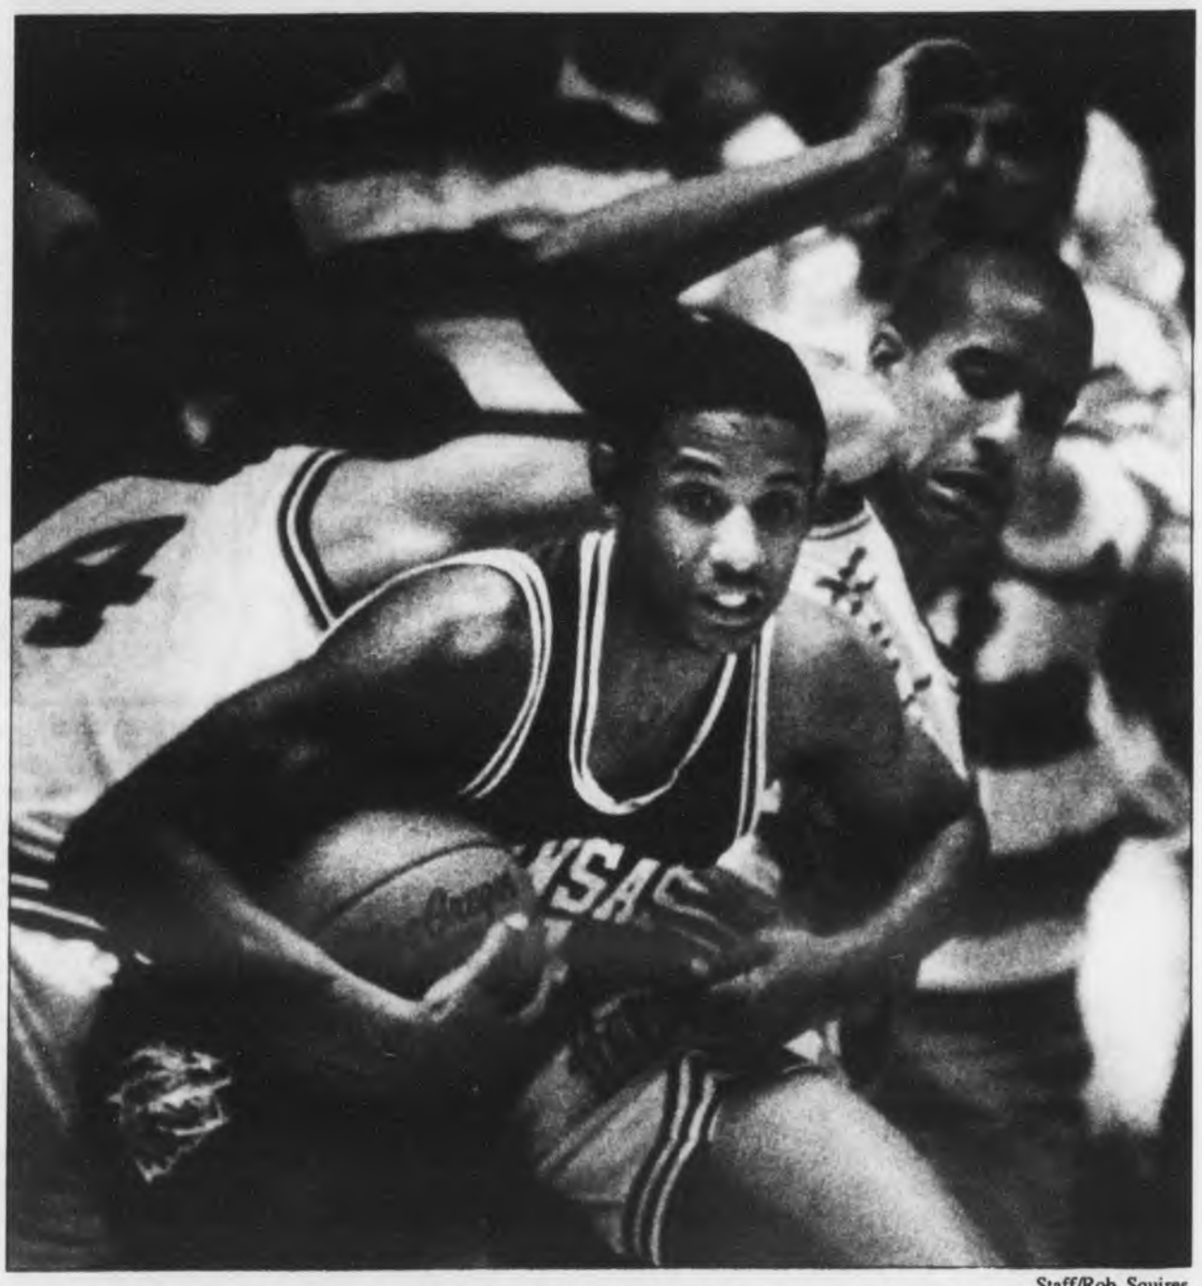
"Nebraska dictated in the first half and played awfully well," Kruger said. "They had us on our heels and that's a credit to the way their kids opened the ballgame.

"At half, I was disappointed with the fact that Nebraska outfought us."

However, K-State's second-half performance bore little resemblance to the first half. The Wildcats took a 45-44 lead with 16:02 left and never trailed the rest of the way.

K-State widened its advantage to as many as 10 points, as Nebraska scored just 16 points in the first 18 minutes of the second half.

"I think we all just turned it up a notch and started fighting a little bit harder," Henson said. "They were dictating everything in the first half."



Said Richmond: "At halftime, we felt we were getting outrebounded and outhustled by Nebraska. We wanted to come out in the second half and play hard."

NOTES...K-State will close out its Big Eight season and play the final game in Ahearn Saturday at 1:10 p.m. against Missouri. All other Big Eight teams will also end their regular seasons Saturday. Nebraska plays at Oklahoma, Colorado travels to Iowa State and Oklahoma State will visit Kansas.

Henson adapts to role, provides 'Cats with leadership

By Mike Rouse
Sports Writer

LINCOLN, Neb — This season has proven to be a rewarding one for K-State sophomore point guard Steve Henson.

With the graduation of Lynn Smith last year, Henson has taken sole position of the duties at the point guard position.

"It's a job that I knew I would have to take sometime," he said.

He has taken the job by storm and proven he is worthy of the job, showing great improvement since taking over a starting position midway through his freshman year.

"I feel he has done awfully well," Coach Lon Kruger said. "He has probably made more progress than anyone on the team on handling his point guard responsiblities."

Kruger has never doubted Henson's ability to successfully take over the leadership role of a point guard.

"As long as he makes good decisions and shows leadership, he will keep his role," Kruger said.

This season, Henson's scoring average has gone up close to double figures and he leads the Wildcats in assists.

"I feel I have made a good contribution to the team this year," he said.

"He has given great leadership and is very competitive," Kruger said. "The players have great respect for him."

The last couple weeks have shown this to be true. Wednesday against Nebraska, he poured in 18 points and had six assists.

"I didn't shoot real well at first, but as the game went on I started playing better," he said.

Henson also ended a streak Wednesday. Going into the game with NU, he had made 45 straight free throws.

Wednesday he hit three charity shots in succession before missing late in the game with K-State having already put the Huskers away.

"I don't really care (about the streak), as long as I can make them down the stretch," he said.

His streak of 48 straight was a school and Big Eight record. The previous school record was 33.

Last week against Iowa State he made 17 consecutive free throws in the game, and had a career high 24 points. Henson currently leads the nation in free throws with a 94.7 percentage from the charity stripe.

Henson hopes he can continue to improve and help the Wildcats to another successful season next year.

"I hope to continue and maybe cut down on my mistakes," he said.

KU wins easily; ISU beats OSU

Three players ejected in 'Hawks-Buffs battle

By The Associated Press

Iowa State 97, Okla. State 88

STILLWATER, Okla. — Iowa State's Lafester Rhodes said he knew early on that Wednesday night would be a good one for him.

"When I was warming up, I was hitting 'em from outside," Rhodes said after scoring 28 points and converting two key four-point plays in the Cyclones' 97-88 Big Eight Conference victory over Oklahoma State.

"I wanted this game real bad, because we lost to them on a buzzer-beater up at Iowa State," Rhodes said. "I just followed through on my shots and they went down."

Each of Rhodes' four-pointers triggered Iowa State spurts. The first helped bring the Cyclones from 8-2 down to 17-10 ahead, and the second gave Iowa State a 64-63 lead it never relinquished.

"That was a big shot; we needed that shot," Rhodes said of his second four-pointer. "I think that took the momentum away from them and got our team fired up."

Jeff Grayer also scored 28, as Iowa State shot 59 percent from the floor, and ran its record to 19-10 overall, 5-8 in conference play. Oklahoma State fell to 14-14 and 4-9.

"This was a big win for us, and I think it should put us in the NCAA (Tournament)," said Iowa State coach Johnny Orr. "I hope it does."

Orr said he had seen a handful of four-point plays during the course of the season, but said he had never seen two in one game. He also said he wasn't surprised to see the 6-foot-8 Rhodes — who is listed as Iowa State's center — convert them.

"Our guy's not a post player, he's a shooter," said Orr. "He can shoot outside; he makes a lot of three-pointers."

Rhodes made all three of his three-point tries, and the Cyclones made 8-of-12.

"I'm always amazed at how teams can come into Gallagher Hall after traveling all over the Big Eight and then shoot so well," said Oklahoma State Coach Leonard Hamilton.

The Cowboys, who trailed 51-44 at halftime, caught fire in the second half and outscored Iowa State 19-9 to grab a 63-60 lead. That lead was short-lived, however, as Rhodes converted his second four-pointer of the game and scored 14 of the Cyclones' next 27 points, as Iowa State opened an 87-74 lead with 3:53 to play.

Derrick Davis scored 19 points for Oklahoma State, all of them in the second half, and John Starks scored 18. Richard Dumas scored 15, but made only two field goals after intermission.

Kansas 85, Colorado 64

BOULDER, Colo. — Danny Manning scored 25 points, including six of his team's first eight, to lead Kansas to an 85-64 Big Eight win over Colorado Wednesday night.

Kevin Pritchard hit a 3-pointer to give the Jayhawks a 45-44 lead at the 15-minute mark of the second half and Kansas moved out to a 53-49 lead with 10:11 left.

The Jayhawks then outscored Colorado 14-4 — with all 14 points coming from Manning, Milt Newton and Scooter Barry — to establish a 67-53 lead with 4:36 left. Kansas only had to keep control of the clock and make a few free throws to win.

The game, which was marred by a brawl that resulted in the ejection of three players, raised Kansas' league record to 8-5 and overall mark to 19-20 while Colorado dropped to 3-10 and 7-20.

The brawl broke out at 3:54 of the second half and resulted in Manning, Newton and Colorado's Brian Robinson being removed from the game. After play resumed, Kansas controlled the outcome.

The Jayhawks took over a 23-12 lead at 12:03 of the first half after Newton hit two 3-point baskets and a slam dunk and Manning completed a three-point play.

Kansas maintained the 11-point lead when Chris Piper hit a jumper at the 5:34 and the Jayhawks held a 33-22 lead. But Colorado battled back with a 12-4 scoring run.

Robinson hit one of two free throws to cut the Kansas lead to 35-29 at 2:19 and then after a Manning jump shot pushed the Jayhawks' lead back to 37-29, Colorado reeled off five straight points to trail 37-34 at half.

Reorganizing next task for athletic department

By Jenny Chaulk
Sports Editor

A rearrangment of K-State's athletic department and its programs looks to be on the near horizon, K-State athletic director Larry Travis said Wednesday.

The pronouncement comes on the heels of the departure of associate athletic director Lee Moon and two private meetings held Saturday and Monday in Manhattan.

"We're at a crossroads and we really need to decide where to go," Travis said.

Moon was hired Tuesday to become athletic director at Marshall University. Moon said his new position would become effective "sometime around the middle of this month."

Saturday, Travis, K-State president Jon Wefald, K-State basketball coach Lon Kruger and Wildcat football coach Stan Parrish met with K-State supporters to discuss how to make K-State athletics more competitive.

"We have to decide how we're going to come up the ladder and how we're going to be more competitive," Travis said. "It's going to take several ways to do that — increased spending, better marketing and promotions. Those are ways we can generate more revenue. We've got to generate it on our own, because we're not going to get any more from the state."

Monday, another meeting was held, at which time K-State supporters discussed "how we could be more visible on game days and how we could increase ticket sales in Manhattan," Travis said.

Travis said the meetings were a "one-time shot," but that the participants would keep in contact about the progress of K-State athletics "through letters." He said a possibility exists the groups may meet sometime next year, and added Manhattan's Chamber of Commerce has formed a task force "to help us look into all these things."

K-State's budgetary woes are a primary concern of Travis'. He said the University has had the lowest budget in the Big Eight Conference "for a number of years." K-State's sports budget is $5.5 million. Oklahoma State has the next lowest budget ($7.1 million.)

Personnel woes are also a problem for K-State's athletic administration. The departure of Moon leaves the department understaffed and without any associate athletic director. Steve Miller, K-State's other associate athletic director during the 1986-87 school year, left in March, 1987 to assume the executive directorship of the Pennsylvania Special Olympics.

"We've been understaffed," Travis said. "Everybody (in the athletic department) does about five different jobs."

Travis said the department will be advertising "a couple more jobs" and, in the meantime, will rearrange "some people in the department to help pick up the slack in the interim."

Travis said specific job titles of the new positions have not been generated.

"We want to get a marketing and promotions person and we also want to add another person in our development area to help us with our fund raising," he said.

He added that he is happy for the opportunity Moon is getting.

"Going into your own athletic directorship is a real promotion," Travis said. "I'm just so pleased for Lee. He's done a great job for us. He's been very loyal to Kansas State University. I think this is a real positive for our program that people are seeing what we are doing and are coming in to hire people away from us. They don't do that off-the-cuff. They do it because they feel people have the right training."

Conference centers on water

Roles should be set

By The Collegian Staff

A state and local partnership role for the environmental protection of water was called for Wednesday at the Fifth Annual Water Conference.

Joe Harkins, secretary of the water office, speaking on the office's plan for implementation of a Kansas water protection program, said the local level has to get involved in the water protection issues.

The long-range goals of the state are to protect and improve the quality of water supplies as well as prevent the pollution of the state's water supply, he said.

According to a publication by the Kansas Water Authority, the objectives of the state's program are to achieve basic quality standards for drinking water, the maintenance of surface waters within acceptable water quality standards, and the protection of the quality of groundwater.

Harkins said the management section of the water office needs to establish water assurance districts on the Kansas rivers, which would inform the office how much water was needed in that particular area.

A second section for water conservation would be devised to set up guidelines for water users, he said.

Permanent funding needs to be established before implementation of the program, though, Harkins said.

According to the Kansas Water Authority, financing for the local departments of health and environment could be set up in two ways: the state could provide financial assistance to local departments for the development of countywide environmental protection strategies, or counties could develop funding sources entirely on their own.

The implementation of the water protection program is in its sixth year and the water office should feel satisfied with its progress by its the 10th year, Harkins said.

Purity rare in Kansas

By John La Barge
Collegian Reporter

Water, water everywhere, but not a pure drop to drink.

"Sure you have something in your water. We don't have pure water anywhere. There is no pure water outside of a laboratory," said Richard Black, associate professor of agricultural engineering and chairman of the K-State Extension Water Quality Task Force since 1985.

The focus Wednesday was on water at the Fifth Annual Water and the Future of Kansas conference in the Union. The forum involves all Kansas water interests.

Black focused his presentation on the issues of home water treatment equipment and safe water supplies.

There are chemicals and nitrates in all drinking water, but not all of them are harmful, Black said.

"People get mad when they hear what they're drinking, but there's also chemicals in soda pop and coffee that we wouldn't want to know about," he said.

"In essence we're all junkies," Black said. "We're all taking in chemicals that we probably didn't intend to, and maybe some of them are hurting us a little bit, but at least ... we're living longer."

People should be aware of the kinds of devices that are available to help clean their drinking water, he said.

Companies advertise products that claim to purify water, but some don't work as well as others, Black said.

An estimated 150,000 private water systems in Kansas serve half a million people, or about 20 percent of the state's population, according to the brochure published by Extension.

Public water supplies are regulated, tested and monitored by trained staff. Private water systems are not, a conference brochure on the subject stated.

U2's album wins Grammy awards

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — U2, the Irish rock group with a passion for politics, picked up two Grammys Wednesday for "The Joshua Tree," their 12-million selling album, and declared, "This is just a beginning."

Paul Simon won record of the year honors for "Graceland," the title track from his South African-inflected album which won the Grammy last year for album of the year.

Jody Watley, from the old dance band Shalamar, was selected at the best new artist of the year.

Whitney Houston, a winner two years ago with her debut album, took honors at the 30th Annual Grammy Awards for best female pop vocalist for her effervescent single, "I Wanna Dance with Somebody," from her LP, "Whitney."

Narada Michael Walden won a Grammy for producing "Whitney."

Bruce Springsteen won a combined male and female rock vocalist category with "Tunnel of Love."

"Somewhere Out There," a sweet ballad written by veteran songwriters James Horner, Barry Mann and Cynthia Weil for the animated film "An American Tail," won as song of the year. "We wrote it for the mice," Weill said.

Guitarist The Edge, born David Evans, accepted the Grammy for best rock group with vocal "The Joshua Tree".

U2, Houston, Los Lobos and Michael Jackson each had four nominations this year, but none threatened threatened to equal Jackson's eight-award sweep in the 1984 ceremony.

Rural communities receive student aid

By Eric Barnhart
Collegian Reporter

K-State is doing its part to help out in the area of community service while volunteer students gain some valuable experience.

The K-State student chapter of the Association of General Contractors of America is joining forces with the University Community Service Program and University For Man to help rural communities. The students are involved with a project called Community Structural Assistance Volunteer Effort.

The University-wide project, which is open to student volunteers from any major or curriculum, is aimed at helping rural communities with projects in which both parties will profit.

"We are organizing individuals to travel to the rural communities," said Carol Peak, director of the program. "It gives the students a chance to work with some rural committees. Our role is to round up some students who want to get involved with something like this."

The program is funded by a two-year federal grant by the Fund for the Improvement of Post Secondary Education through the College of Education. The idea stemmed from a community home project started by UFM in the Manhattan area. The recipient of the work receives work done at a much cheaper cost and the students gain hands-on experience.

"Community SAVE" deals with the structural repair of privately and publicly owned property. The format of the project is set up so that the recipient will provide the materials for the work and the labor will be provided by the University through the community service program from the volunteer students. The Association of General Contractors is participating so that the students can gain experience in the construction apsect of these projects.

"The students in AGC are involved so that they can learn to work with a crew and be working with the things they'll be doing when they finish school," said Greg Covington, freshman in construction science and the committee chairman for UFM.

A project in the works is one in Barnes, Kan., where students will be doing some clean up, painting and repairs for the rural community. Other previous projects include a playground set at the Lee Elementary School, the repair and painting of porches in the Manhattan area and a handicapped ramp at the Manhattan Senior Service Center. Most of these projects involved about 50 to 75 volunteers.

"We as students are learning how to do things together and also helping the community," Covington said.

UPC sponsors photo display

By The Collegian Staff

The Union Programming Council is currently displaying the photographs from the 13th Annual UPC Photography Contest in the Union Art Gallery. The photographs will be in the gallery until March 4.

The contest, which is an amateur event open to students and faculty, features eight different categories for judging. These categories are people, animals, buildings and structures, landscape, flowers and plants, still-life and interiors, sports and news-related and life at K-State.

The contest was judged by three professional photographers from the Manhattan area. Winners in each category received $10, second-place entrants received $5 and the entry which was judged "Best in Show" was awarded $30.

This year's judges were Ron Hoffman, Steve Beliel and Larry Wood.

"Best in Show" award went to Jay A. Phelps, junior in fine arts, for his photograph entitled "Night and Day" in the people category.

There were more than 125 entries in this year's contest, with first-place winners in six categories. There were no first-place awards given in two of the divisions, life at K-State and sports and news-related.

"The winner of the life at K-State category usually goes on the cover of the Programmer," said Amy Tumpes, senior in fine arts and UPC committee member. "But this year we didn't feel we had one that was suitable."

All photographs from the contest are on display in the Union Art Gallery, and winning entries have ribbons.

Other winners were: Annita Huff, sophomore in pre-professional business administration, for buildings and structures, Wade Taylor, freshman in psychology, for landscape and also for still-life and interiors, Gary Andolina, junior in fine arts, for flowers and plants, Diane Nunley, sophomore in secondary education.

NATO demands artillery cutbacks

By The Associated Press

BRUSSELS, Belgium — NATO leaders on Wednesday demanded huge cutbacks in Warsaw Pact tanks and artillery, and endorsed President Reagan's efforts to negotiate strategic arms reductions with the Soviet Union.

Defining strategy for a new set of East-West negotiations, NATO leaders said Soviet conventional forces pose the threat of a surprise attack and must be slashed to rectify an imbalance in military strength.

The Soviet cutbacks would entail, for example, "the elimination from Europe of tens of thousands of Warsaw Pact weapons relevant to surprise attack, among them tanks and artillery pieces," a NATO communique said.

Meeting behind closed doors at alliance's heavily guarded headquarters, the leaders of the 16 alliance countries attempted to accentuate agreement. They did not want to highlight differences about the pace of modernizing short-range nuclear missiles left in Europe after the elimination of longer-range weapons covered by a new U.S.-Soviet arms treaty.

British sources speaking on condition of anonymity said NATO foreign ministers late Wednesday agreed on compromise language for a final declaration Thursday on the modernization issue.

The summit participants will call for the short-range nuclear missiles to "continue to be kept up-to-date where necessary," the sources said, a statement that avoids the word "modernization," to which West Germany objects.

According to his spokesman, Reagan quoted Benjamin Franklin, telling the NATO leaders, "If we do not all hang together, we will assuredly hang separately."

Security was so strict that a NATO guard attempted to eject a reporter who asked Reagan a question as the leaders posed for a "family photo."

Emphasizing alliance unity, Reagan said, "There are no great fundamental differences there. I have never seen such harmony and togetherness as we have."

Reagan mixed NATO summitry with Middle East peace efforts. He ordered Secretary of State George Shultz to make a whirlwind return to the Middle East after the summit windup tonight to continue his efforts to set up Arab-Israeli peace talks.

First, Shultz will stop in London to see Jordan's King Hussein, and on Friday will visit Israel, Egypt and Syria, returning to Washington early Saturday morning.

The NATO meeting is the alliance's first summit since 1982.

Accompanied by their foreign ministers, the leaders gathered at a long, walnut-brown oval table in a conference room shortly after noon to hear an opening statement by Lord Carrington, NATO's secretary general.

He said Reagan's effort to secure a 50 percent cut in U.S. and Soviet long-range missiles "has the alliance's full support."

He spoke of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev as a man "who is ready to reduce some tensions" but expressed concern about the Kremlin's military might and "the denial of basic human rights and freedom to the peoples of Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union."

Robertson wants to drop suit, avoid conflict

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Pat Robertson wants to drop his libel suit against a former congressman who questioned his war record because going to trial now would "sacrifice his presidential campaign," his lawyer said Wednesday.

But Robertson's accuser declared, "He's chickening out of the trial just like he chickened out 37 years ago."

Former Rep. Paul McCloskey, R-Calif., accused Robertson of using his father's political influence to avoid combat duty in the Korean War. McColoskey has said in recent weeks he wouldn't settle the suit unless Robertson paid the costs, which McCloskey estimates at $400,000, for his defense in the suit.

The trial, set to begin Tuesday, when Robertson hopes to do well in delegate-rich Southern primaries, would force him off the campaign trail for three weeks, attorney Douglas Rigler said.

In dropping the lawsuit "Robertson does not intend to back away at any time from his denial of the charges that Mr. McCloskey made," Rigler said.

He said that "it is quite possible that Mr. Robertson will be asked to pay a substantial amount of court costs" to cover the expenses of taking depositions from more than 50 witnesses.

But Rigler said he would likely appeal any such decision by U.S. District Judge Joyce Hens Green. He also suggested the $400,000 defense estimate of costs "may be an artificial figure" that includes lawyers' fees that Robertson should not have to pay.

McCloskey's lawyer, George Lehner, said that, if anything, the defense estimate of its costs is "artificially low."

Lehner said he will ask the judge to order Robertson to go to trial on Tuesday or force him to pay court costs as well as attorneys' fees.

Rigler said Robertson will ask dismissal of the lawsuit because "he is being asked to sacrifice his presidential campaign in order to vindicate his personal honor."

Robertson, in South Carolina, said Wednesday he wanted to press ahead with the suit but couldn't be in court and out campaigning for the Republican presidential nomination at the same time.

"If the judge will give me about another month, I'd love to go into it," Robertson said.

The judge in January refused Roberton's request to postpone the trial until June 20.

"I can't understand why a respected judge did it," Rigler said. "We think it is unfair."

Under rules of civil procedure, a plaintiff cannot drop a case without the defendant's consent once the lawsuit has been answered or without a court order dismissing the case.

McCloskey, commenting Wednesday on CBS-TV, said, "The courtroom's a great place to learn the truth. Now that he's up with the truth to be told and testimony under oath, he's backing off."

"I think the truth ought to be told. I don't know any better place to get the truth than in the courtroom. He invoked the process, he ought to go through with it," McCloskey said.

In Florida on Tuesday, Robertson said, "In order to compete in that trial, I would have to break off my campaign today and run the risk of losing Florida, Texas, South Carolina and other parts of the South."

The lawsuit was filed in 1986 following publication of McCloskey's allegations that Robertson used the influence of his late father, Sen. A. Willis Robertson, D-Va., to avoid combat duty in the Korean War.

McCloskey, a decorated Marine combat veteran who was aboard a troop ship from which Robertson was removed in 1951 during a stopover in Japan, also charged that Robertson later served as the "booze officer" to a rear echelon unit after he did go to Korea.

A number of former Marines have come forward since the lawsuit was filed to support McCloskey, though other witnesses deny that Robertson invoked his father's political influence to be get his temporary reassignment to a special training unit in Japan.

McCloskey said Wednesday that one reason he made the charges was that he feared a person who had avoided combat might try to make amends by becoming more warlike in later years.

"When you get a president in office who has evaded combat in his youth and all his advisers are saying 'look tough against the Soviets' ... I think there is a tendency to try to prove your manhood late in life," he said.

Klan

along at least two Skinheads for "support."

Skinheads, he said, are "white, middle-class youth who feel disenchanted with their futures. They wear their hair short or have their heads shaved so people can't grab it in a fight. They'd rather fight than say hello."

He said the Skinheads will be used only in the capacity of bodyguards and will be under orders to react only if under physical attack.

"They are very good at martial arts," he said.

Mahon said he doubted the Klansmen would wear their white robes at the forum.

"We normally don't wear them except for ceremonies," he said. "It's kind of a private thing. But we may have one hanging up for effect."

The two Klansmen who are scheduled to speak on the panel are Thom Robb of Harrison, Ark., grand kludd and national chaplain; and J. Allen Moran of Platte City, Mo., a member of the Missouri Knights, Mahon said.

"We're going to express what our position is and a few doctrines of our beliefs," he said.

KU officials said Slightly Older Americans for Freedom had the right to ask the KKK to participate in the forum.

"It's not that much different than the event we had two weeks ago," said David Ambler, vice chancellor for student affairs. "Faculty and students have the right to ask groups to come. The faculty simply decided not to go ahead with it."

He said because the group is a registered student organization, the administration would work to ensure the success of the event.

"But it doesn't necessarily mean we agree with what they are doing," he added.

Judith Ramaley, KU executive vice chancellor, said the latest invitation to the Klan is "a completely different issue" than the previous situation.

"The last invitation was an academic freedom issue," she said. "The role of the administration was to make sure the faculty had the information from the community leaders about how people felt and the faculty had to decide if they could get educational purposes met."

This invitation, she said, is a freedom of speech issue that involves a student group following university guidelines for events.

"My role is different in this case," she said. "This is not a classroom situation or a limited audience. I completely abhor the message the KKK is giving, but regardless of how I feel, a student group has the right to invite who they wish."

Ted Frederickson, associate professor of journalism and a scheduled panelist for the forum, said he agreed to participate not because he condones the Klan, but because he believes in free speech.

"As disgusted as I am with the Klan, I think they have a right to speak," he said. "When one's rights are diminished, everyone's rights are diminished."

Frederickson, who teaches a media law class, said although he understands why some people are opposed to the event, he thinks the forum will allow students to see how ridiculous the Klan really is.

"I understand why blacks don't want the Klan to speak, just as I understand why rape victims don't want an alleged rapist to have a fair trial. But if students want a close-up lesson on how ugly racial bigotry really is, then here's their chance to see," he said. "You don't know how bad a skunk smells until you're exposed to it."

He said while he hoped security would not be a problem at the forum, he did hope people would react to the Klan's visit.

"If people want to be out on the sidewalk protesting, that's free speech as well," he said.

Ramona Harden, a KU classified employee, said if a protest takes place, she will be there.

"My personal standpoint is that I don't like it at all," she said. "I can't believe this university is this insensitive, and the people who are trying to bring them here are this insensitive."

She said her opinion is echoed by the majority of the black community.

"There's racism that occurs here on campus all the time," she said. "They should be trying to alleviate that problem rather than try to get the Klan to come here."

At K-State, officials had differing viewpoints.

"I don't want to dignify the KKK by commenting on the situation," said Veryl Switzer, assistant vice president of minority affairs.

Charles Reagan, assistant to the president, said it would be difficult to predict what would happen if a group at K-State were to ask the KKK to speak.

"All I can tell you is to take a look at who we've had on campus before," he said. "We have a long history of being open to controversial speakers."

He said the decision would depend in part on what people perceived to be the racial climate in the community.

Mahon said those who opposed the Klan's coming to KU would have been better off allowing the group to come the first time it was asked.

"Of course the publicity is helping our organization," he said. "If we'd have gone to the KU journalism class, 20 people would have heard us, then we'd have been gone. No big deal.

"Now, two thousand to three thousand students will hear us."

He said the Klan's goal for the forum is not to recruit members, but to "get the word out."

As for opposition, he said, "Sure there will be. I'm used to it. That's fine. But if they throw things or try to hurt us, then we'll react."

Jones said though he was the one who originated the idea of Klansmen as speakers, he wants no part of Monday's forum. The original intent of his request was to give his students interesting speakers to interview, he said.

"No one was even supposed to know about it," he said. "But I don't want anything to do with it now. It's gotten completely out of hand. These protesters are playing right into the hands of the Klan. Blacks have no business protesting and the Klan has no right bringing bodyguards."

Foubert said he has received numerous complaints from both blacks and non-blacks in Lawrence. But, he said, he does not believe he is racist for inviting the KKK to participate in the panel.

"I'm a minority myself, so you can't call me racist," he said."

Blood

said all blood donors are required to complete a health history form as well as a Donor Exclusion Form.

The Donor Exclusion Form allows those who feel they can't exclude themselves because of pressures at work or from peer groups to privately notify the American Red Cross to exclude their blood, she said.

Despite the risk of getting AIDS from a transfusion, Larson said it's impossible to get AIDS from giving blood.

"You can't get AIDS from donating blood," she said.

She said each donor's blood is taken with a sterile needle that is thrown away after being used.

"In order to transmit any kind of virus, there has to be a blood-to-blood contact, and in the donating process there is no contact with anyone else's blood," she said.

Kathleen Smith, senior in computer science, said that although she has donated blood in the past, she did not give blood last week when the Red Cross Bloodmobile was on campus.

"The whole week was like 'test week' and I just didn't have the time," she said.

"I'm not really paranoid about giving or getting blood because of the tests they do, but if I knew I was going to have surgery I'd donate blood in advance so I could receive my own blood," she said.

"I think people who are undecided about giving blood won't take the time to learn the facts; they'll just avoid giving blood," Smith said.

Science center designs lessons on computer disk for schools

By Robert Clasen
Collegian Reporter

The Center for Science Education has been chosen as one of five national test sites for the introduction of a database designed to offer elementary schools with "hands-on" math and science lessons.

Science Helper, designed by The Knowledge Utilization Project in Science at the University of Florida, is a collection of 1,000 math and science lessons and activities that uses the latest technology in information storage and retrieval — compact disk read-only memory.

The computer program allows users to quickly sift through its information by grade level, science process skills, subject, content themes and keywords. It is not interactive.

A $14,000 grant provided to the Center by the Kansas Board of Regents will make it possible to sponsor a workshop on the project for 30 rural teachers and principals for two weeks this summer, said Larry Enochs, associate professor of curriculum and instruction and associate director of the Center.

Teachers and principals will be trained in the hands-on science activities, leadership in innovation and use of the new technology, he said.

The training program is a response to documented needs for more hands-on science education, Enochs said.

More than 100 research studies in the past 25 years have shown that the average performance of students in classes that utilize experimental methods — equipment, specimens or manipulative devices — far exceeds that of students that receive only traditional means — lectures, textbooks and workbooks.

In a recent survey on Kansas elementary science education, half the teachers said they never use science materials, and two-thirds spent less than 30 minutes per week teaching science with devices.

"The nation is being challenged by other countries in science and technology, areas where we have traditionally been superior," Enochs said. "Educating our children in problem-solving and scientific literacy is essential for the economic development of Kansas and the nation."

The workshop will show the instructors how to use the system, and how to incorporate it into their own curriculum, said Diane McGrath, assistant professor of curriculum and instruction and associate director for the project.

The program's participants will be chosen from the North Central Kansas Educational Service Center, which has 18 districts ranging in enrollment from less than 200 students to more than 1,000.

Two teachers and the principal from 10 of these schools will become a "leadership team".

As part of the workshop, the teachers will be able to take the disk back to their school to use, McGrath said.

"The fact that we own the material means that anyone who wanted to come here and use it could," she said.

House rejects $30 million bill for 'humanitarian' Contra aid

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House on Thursday killed a $30 million package of purely "humanitarian" aid for Nicaragua's Contras that had been pushed by Democrats as a way to ease pressure for future military aid for the rebels.

The final vote of 216-208 against the plan came minutes after the lawmakers had voted 215-210 to accept a Democratic version of the aid package that also included sharp restrictions on how the rebels could use the money and a new fund to aid children who are victims of the Nicaraguan civil war.

Defeat of the aid package meant the rebels, whose last U.S. aid ran out on Tuesday, would be left without new supplies until Congress could make another try at passing an aid bill.

Liberal Democrats, who have steadfastly opposed aid to the rebels in the past, teamed with Republicans, for whom the package was too weak, to defeat it.

As the House debated the Democratic plan, Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, charged that it would have placed control of a $14 million fund to aid children who are victims of the civil war in the hands of the leftist Nicaraguan government, prompting an angry response from House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas.

Anyone who makes such a claim "is just lying or he doesn't understand it," Wright said.

Earlier, the speaker had called the dispute over the aid package "a battle for peace in Nicaragua, and for a constructive role for the United States in Central America as opposed to a destructive role."

But President Reagan, in a letter to pro-Contra forces sent while he was attending a meeting of Western allies in Brussels, Belgium, said Wright's plan "does not meet the essential criteria" of keeping the Contras viable and maintaining military pressure on the Sandinistas.

He asked for support for a Republican aid proposal that backers said provided more flexibility for the Contras, both in the kinds of supplies that could be bought and in the way they would be delivered to troops in the field.

"Today could represent a watershed in our policies toward Central America," Reagan wrote. "One avenue will lead to rapid debilitation of the resistance and further encouragement of Sandinista intransigence. The other could keep alive prospects for democracy and meaningful talks toward peace."

The House on Feb. 3 defeated, 219-211, a $36.2 million Reagan proposal that included money for weapons and other military equipment.

In debate Thursday, both sides argued that their version would best enhance a Central American peace process.

"Our opportunity today is to construct a united position on Nicaragua policy for the first time in eight years," said Rep. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., a sponsor of the Democratic package.

"It says to the Contras that the United States is not going to provide them the means to make war. But neither is the United States going to turn away from them."

Bloomingdale's representatives tour Riley as part of promotional effort

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

Riley will be the stop today for a delegation from Bloomingdale's department store in New York that arrived in Kansas Monday for a five-day tour of the state.

The Bloomingdale's representatives have been visiting vendors and Kansas points of interest in preparation for a six-week promotion of Kansas products in their 16 stores beginning on May 10. The event will be kicked off in New York by Gov. Mike Hayden, said Michelle Watkins, public information officer for the Kansas Department of Commerce.

"The promotion is a feature in all 16 of Bloomingdale's stores in New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Florida, Texas and the District of Columbia, and features products billed as the 'Best of Kansas,'" Watkins said.

The visit to Riley deals with an aspect of Bloomingdale's store displays that will depict how a Kansas home looked in the early 1900s, Watkins said.

In addition to the Riley stop, the Bloomingdale's representatives were also scheduled this week to visit:

- Lenexa to see 1950s auto art;
- the Louisburg Cider Mill;
- Lawrence to meet with arts and crafts vendors;
- the Kansas Museum of History and the Capitol in Topeka;
- Wichita's Cowtown;
- Hutchinson to visit the Discovery Center and the Cosmosphere;
- Newton to view the Kaufman Museum;
- and Dodge City to visit a feed lot outside of the city as well as see Dodge City's Boothill Museum and Front Street.

This tour is a follow-up to an earlier tour in October 1987. Last October's visit focused on food vendors, and the names of those selected by Bloomingdale's to have products displayed were announced at a press conference Tuesday by Hayden.

Bloomingdale's chose 52 of more than 120 vendors who had sought selection, including several regional businesses.

Charlene Patton, domestic marketing coordinator for the Kansas Board of Agriculture, said regional businesses selected included: Flint Hills Food of Alma, which markets cheese; Warfel's Homemade Fudge, also of Alma; Key Milling Co. Inc. of Clay Center, which markets egg products; and Land of Ahs Products Inc., also of Clay Center, which markets popcorn and bird seed.

Kansas is the fifth state to have been honored by a Bloomingdale's promotion, she said. Other states have been Vermont, Maine, Louisiana and Oregon.

"The promotion will represent the entire state of Kansas and the hope is to attract tourism," Watkins said.

"This is an excellent opportunity for Kansas to get visibility in the outside market."

Senators reject co-op support fee

By Deron Johnson
Campus Editor

Following nearly three hours of debate, Student Senate this morning rejected by a substantial margin a bill that would have established a student fee to support the KSU Childcare Cooperative. With the vote coming at nearly 2 a.m., senators voted 22 in favor and 27 against the measure.

At least 34 votes — two-thirds of Senate — were needed for passage of the fee.

Under the bill, full-time students would have paid $1 per semester, and part-time students would have paid 50 cents. The fee would have generated nearly $32,000 per year to aid the financially ailing co-op.

Co-op officials sought the fee allocation to help deal with an increasing debt and to help increase instructors' salaries above the nation's poverty level. Esther Gray, assistant director of the co-op, told senators that the center had incurred nearly $30,000 in debt last fiscal year and that a debt of at least $70,000 is forecast for this year.

Under provisions of the bill, if Senate had approved the allocation, the administration would have had to match or exceed the amount generated by students or else the fee would be rescinded. Co-op officials warned that if the fee failed, the co-op may be forced to close its doors.

"Another option is to close," Nancy Bolsen, director of the co-op, said in response to senators' questions about other routes the co-op could take if the fee failed.

Supporters of the bill said students had an obligation to fund the co-op even though it only serves about 200 students.

"No, not everybody has children at K-State," said Stu Duncan, graduate in agronomy and parent of a child enrolled at the co-op. "I really feel we should support this fee."

Rattan Nath, graduate in physics, said his constituents supported the bill.

"I've failed to come across one person against the bill," he said. "(Student Governing Association) is not picking up the entire tab."

Those against the measure largely relied on the contention that the fee was an unfair imposition on the majority of K-State students.

"We would have 100 percent of the students paying for a service used by .01 percent of the students," said Doug Washington, sophomore in modern languages. "If we're going to decide to spend the students' money, we should

Magazine instructed to pay $9.4 million in damages to family

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON — A federal court jury on Thursday found Soldier of Fortune magazine negligent in publishing a classified ad that led to the slaying of a Texas woman, and ordered the magazine to pay $9.4 million to the woman's family.

The jury ordered that $1.5 million be paid to the woman's son, and awarded $400,000 to her mother. The two received $7.5 million in punitive damages.

The verdict followed two weeks of testimony to a six-person jury, which received the case on Tuesday.

It stemmed from the slaying of Sandra Black at her home in Bryan three years ago.

Black's husband, Robert, is on Texas' death row for paying John Wayne Hearn $10,000 to kill her.

Black contacted Hearn through a personal services classified ad Hearn placed in Soldier of Fortune in late 1984. Hearn is serving three life terms in Florida for the Black slaying and two others in that state.

Gary Wayne Black, 18, the victim's son, and Marjorie Eimann, 64, her mother, had sought $22.5 million in the suit against the self-styled "Journal for Professional Adventurers." Of that, $20 million was requested for exemplary damages.

Their attorneys contended the magazine was negligent in publishing the ad.

Attorneys for the Boulder, Colo.-based magazine and its parent company, Omega Group, Ltd., did not dispute the ad brought Hearn and Black together, but insisted magazine executives had no way of knowing the ad was for illegal activity.

Magazine attorneys insisted the responsibility for Sandra Black's death rested with her husband and Hearn and not the magazine.

Hearn's ad appeared in four issues of Soldier of Fortune, offering services of former Marine and Vietnam veterans and weapons specialists with jungle warfare expertise for "high-risk assignments" in the United States or overseas.

Soldier of Fortune witnesses defended the publication as a legitimate military journal, saying the personal services classified ads were run to provide employment for Vietnam veterans who had difficulty finding work and wanted to do bodyguard or security duty or mercenary fighting overseas.

Witnesses for the plaintiffs contended the ad's reference to "high-risk assignments" meant Hearn and others using similar words in ads were making themselves available for criminal activity.

West German hostage freed

DAMASCUS, Syria — Pro-Iranian kidnappers freed West German hostage Ralph Schray in west Beirut on Thursday after holding him for five weeks, and he was turned over to the West German Embassy in Damascus.

The West German charge d'affaires, Klaus Auchenbach, refused to make any comments to reporters as he shuttled between the embassy and the Foreign Ministry, about a mile apart in the Syrian capital.

He said it was "not worthwhile" for them to wait around, indicating that Schray would not appear in public.

This raised speculation the former captive may not be as well as Bonn portrayed him to be after his ordeal. The Bonn Foreign Ministry had said earlier that Schray, 30, was in "good physical condition."

Friedhelm Ost, the West German government's chief spokesman in Bonn, said only that the Syrian government had handed Schray over to embassy officials.

Schray, a Lebanese-born industrial engineer, was freed before dawn. A Syrian military source in the Lebanese capital said he was driven the 55 miles to Damascus under heavy Syrian escort.

Water given in marriage dowry

NEW DELHI, India — The parents of a groom in a drought-stricken Indian state demanded that the bride's family give them an unusual dowry: water.

Two barrels of water have been delivered every day to the house of the groom, Prashant Pandeya, since his recent marriage, the United News of India reported Thursday.

Under the dowry pact, the bride's parents, who have a steady source of underground water, must keep up the supply until the next monsoon, the news agency reported.

Gujarat and 15 other states have been hit by drought, the worst in India in a century.

The parents of a bride normally give clothes, jewelry, cash, furniture or electronic goods as dowry to the groom and his family. Although outlawed in 1961, dowry still persists.

25 die in Chinese celebrations

BEIJING — Crowds thronged to holiday festivals across the country and 25 people were trampled to death during celebrations in two cities, it was reported Thursday.

At least 220 people were injured during the celebrations Wednesday of the Lantern Festival, which falls 15 days after the Lunar New Year.

Eighteen people were crushed to death and 113 were injured in Xining, capital of Qinghai province, when 100,000 people who turned out to watch a lantern procession panicked, the official Xinhua News Agency said.

Seven people were trampled to death and another seven injured in Lankao county, Henan province, as a crowd of 20,000 dispersed after watching a fireworks show, Xinhua said.

The Ministry of Public Security issued an emergency circular Thursday calling attention to the problem of crowd control and safety.

Panama embargo discussed

WASHINGTON — Six Republican and Democratic congressmen introduced a bill Thursday to impose an "immediate, dramatic and devastating" trade, air travel and currency embargo against the regime of Panamanian strongman Manuel Antonio Noriega.

The lawmakers said they would seek speedy congressional approval of the embargo bill.

But they said they also hoped to prod President Reagan to act independently to adopt a far stronger series of punitive sanctions against the Noriega regime than he has approved to date.

The proposed embargo would bar all imports from Panama, prohibit all U.S. exports to that nation, bar all air travel between the two countries and prohibit U.S. banks from transferring any funds to Panama and its banking system.

"By stopping the transfer of funds from U.S. banks to Panama, we go for the jugular," said Sen. Alfonse D-Amato, R-N.Y., a principal sponsor of the embargo plan.

"Because of Panama's heavy reliance on its economic ties with the United States, the impact of a U.S. trade embargo would be immediate, dramatic and devastating to Noriega and his cohorts," D'Amato said.

31 swallow toothbrushes

CHICAGO — Many have brushed, but only a few have swallowed.

So say researchers who scrutinized medical literature and found exactly 31 cases in all recorded history of people somehow managing to swallow their toothbrushes.

Four of those incidents occurred in Durham, N.C., in recent years, Dr. Allan D. Kirk of Duke University Medical Center and colleagues reported in the March issue of the Archives of Surgery.

Two of the North Carolina swallowers apparently had drunk a large quantity of alcohol, while a third was a 60-year-old woman who had a seizure while brushing her teeth. She complained only of throat pain but examination revealed the brush stuck in the esophagus and it was removed with forceps.

The fourth victim was a 20-year-old woman who developed a violent coughing spell while brushing her teeth.

National anthem disputed

NORTH KINGSTOWN, R.I. — A principal who banished a high school senior from homeroom for humming and singing along to the national anthem when it is played over the intercom says the dispute is a question of "who's in charge."

Sara Sprague, a 17-year-old member of the choir at North Kingstown High School, said that her humming and singing were a "spontaneous reaction to the music" and that she was within her rights.

Principal Paul Rennick said Sprague was "playing games" by violating school policy requiring silence when the anthem is played.

Katherine Janis, her homeroom teacher, said the humming was part of "noisy and disruptive" behavior by Sprague.

Farrell cutbacks cause reduction of journals

Professors asked to compile priority lists

By Susan Rouse
Collegian Reporter

Administrators at Farrell Library are preparing to cut back $300,000 worth of professional journals next fall.

The administrators have asked professors to compile a list of the research journals they need most, said Charlene Grass, associate dean of collection and technical services.

"We are having them prioritize any type of professional journal that is related to their departments and majors," she said.

Lists, which were due Tuesday, will be compiled, and the final selection is expected to be finished in April.

"Since we have purchased the journal subscriptions for this year already, you won't be able to see the effects of this until fall," Grass said.

Grass said the library will have to drop about 1,500 journal subscriptions, one-fourth of those currently offered.

Duane Nellis, associate professor of geography, said the cutback will have a dramatic effect for both professors and students.

"The result of the cancellation of 25 percent to 30 percent of the journals directly related to geography will have a significant impact on the research, teaching and keeping up with current developments," Nellis said. "Now we won't be able to get new journals."

Walter Cash, assistant professor of anatomy and physiology, said Farrell's situation is a difficult one.

"It is sad we can't get additional spending," Cash said. "I hate it. We've tried to build up our journals so everyone could use them for teaching and research and now we have to take them away."

K-State isn't the only university having library funding problems, Grass said.

"It is bad everywhere. All libraries are having to cut back," she said.

Clinton Howard, assistant dean for technical services at the University of Kansas library, said KU is also having to make cuts.

Educators look for prestige

By Vince Huser
Collegian Reporter

In an effort to make the field of education more professional, an education symposium dealing with this topic will be held in the Union today.

The symposium, titled "The Education Symposium: Take Action to be a Professional," is being coordinated by the Student Affairs Committee and the Education Student Council.

Co-organizers of the symposium are Gigi Lynn and Lisa Paine, seniors in elementary education. Both hope this first-to-be-annual symposium will be successful enough that it will be repeated again in the future.

"The colleges of education all across the country, not just here at K-State, have had a little less recognition because of the whole concept of, 'Are teachers professionals?'" Lynn said. "It is our duty as (future) teachers, if we want to be recognized as professionals, to take the steps in order to bring professionalism into the teaching field," she said.

One of the means of doing this is through professional development, which can be achieved by seminars and interactions with teachers and superintendents who are out there working. Ideally, the development will make people feel good about the profession into which they are going, Paine said.

The symposium will be from 7:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. in the Union, with speakers in the Big Eight Room, Room 212 and Forum Hall.

There will be several presenters throughout the day speaking on topics including "Professional Liabilities," "Drug Awareness" and "Motivation Techniques," Lynn said.

There also will be two panel discussions during the day. The first panel will discuss "Communications Between Parents, Teachers and Administrators," and the second panel will be discussing "Tips for Resumes and Interviews."

From 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. in the Union Ballroom, a luncheon and a fashion show on how to "Dress for Success" will be conducted.

"The symposium is open to all education majors and anyone interested in being an educator," Paine said, adding that the main focus of the conference is on undergraduates in the College of Education.

"Our goal is to go and bring in from the community people who are out there (working) and who are professional educators, and have them bring information (to us)," Paine said.

Several professors from the College of Education will also speak.

"We didn't want to use strictly faculty members," Lynn said. "It's suppose to be a professional development symposium."

The formal and informal interaction with the teachers and the professors is hoped to create a better sense of what teaching is for the students and to allow for the students and teachers to get to know each other a little better.

The fee to attend for students and faculty is $7 per person, which will cover the cost of the lunch and some of the continental breakfast. All additional expenses are being absorbed by the Education Student Council, Kappa Delta Pi and the College of Education.

Students will be involved in almost every aspect of the symposium. There will be student models, student table hosts and students running the registration table, Paine said.

Professor defends genetic alteration

By Shelly Tierney
Collegian Reporter

Steven Lindow, associate professor of plant pathology at the University of California, Berkeley, said his genetically altered "ice minus" bacteria has created controversy due to the lack of understanding by the public.

"There was a lot of imaginative reporting getting the public, which really didn't know any better, quite concerned about what was really happening in the lab," Lindow said.

Before permission was granted, the experiment came under fire by the public and faced court challenges and "various state and federal laws pertaining to environmental quality laws," Lindow said.

"The Environmental Protection Agency and other regulatory agencies jumped in with regulations," he said. "The EPA had to be notified and we had to inform the community of what was happening."

The "ice minus" bacteria is a genetically altered form of natural bacteria found on plants. The genetic alteration is the elimination of an "ice nucleating" protein in the unaltered bacteria that causes ice formation on plants.

Plants treated with the altered bacteria at the proper time are able to withstand colder temperatures without experiencing frost damage, Lindow said.

From March to May, the number of non-altered bacteria increase. By treating them with the antagonistic (altered) bacteria, the number of non-altered bacteria will be reduced as well as the plant's chances of suffering frost damage, he said.

This "desired" effect occurs because the altered bacteria effectively compete with and reduce the number of unaltered bacteria with the "ice nucleating" protein.

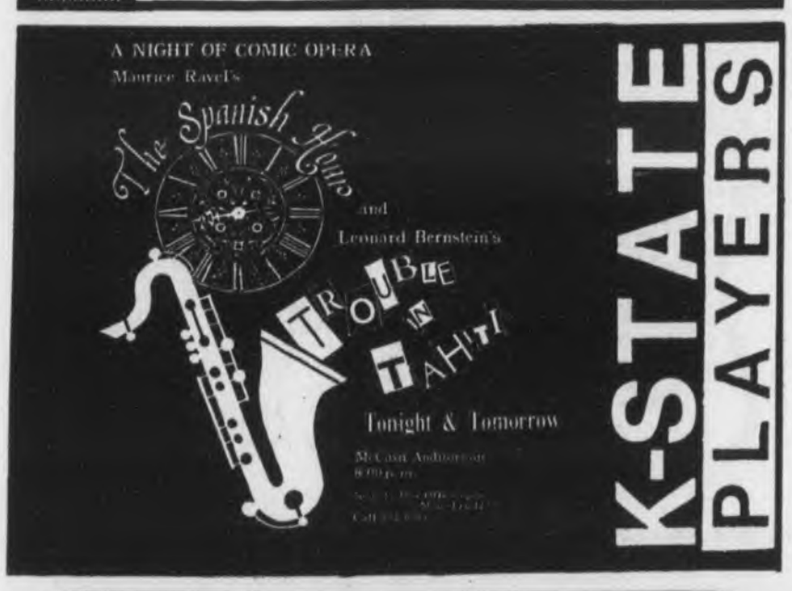
Gunmen open fire; 32 killed in India

By The Associated Press

AMRITSAR, India — Sikh gunmen opened fire with automatic rifles and machine guns on a holiday gathering early Friday in Punjab state, killing at least 32 people and injuring 40 others, police said.

The attack in Hoshiarpur district was one of the bloodiest since Sikh extremists launched their guerrilla war for an independent homeland in the northern state in 1982.

Punjab security forces and New Delhi police were put on alert after the killing to prevent any backlash by Hindus.



There was no immediate claim of responsibility.

Police said both Hindus and Sikhs were among those killed and injured in the assault, which occurred as India began its celebration of Holi, or the festival of color.

Crying may not solve world's woes, but it has ways of cleansing the soul

Commentary

RIZWAN MITHANI
Collegian Columnist

Before rocks erode to nothingness, they are "as strong as a rock!" If this is strength, then what is weakness? Sometimes, I feel I have the strength to solve the entire range of problems of this world. However, these intense feelings invariably crumble down to weak sobs. Is all stength inherently weak?

Yes, I bury my face in my teddy bear and cry in my room. I feel I cannot face the world anymore. The myriad problems our world is facing have fatigued me.

Millions are starving across the globe for they cannot afford even one square meal a week. I am fortunate to afford three meals a day. I even have spare money to guzzle caffeine in the form of coffee and Pepsi. The very thought that skipping an eating-out binge at Kentucky Fried Chicken could probably buy a week's food for a hungry Ethiopian child shakes my insides up. But, do I carry out any constructive steps? No. Instead, I meekly weep. Or else I attend the like of Hunger Project conferences.

At one extreme, there are naked barefoot children in the Fourth World. And, at the other extreme, I am dressed in Levi's whitewashed jeans, Ralph Lauren's Polo shirt and Nike low-tops. While some people have no roof over their heads and sleep in gutters, I reside in a nice warm house. Yes, I am thankful for all the blessings I enjoy — but, do I offer any hope to the unfortunate and downtrodden? All I do is lament within my heart, in the secure confines of my room. Else, I indulge in arm-chair discussions.

The problem with us is that we are born with a heart on the "left" side. Maybe if our heart was on the "right" side, we would have performed the "right" constructive actions. But, with a heart on the "left" side, we are "left" with lamentation, weeping, shedding tears (which are invariably crocodile tears), shouting and screaming. But, if lamentations and outcries could change the world, it would have been a better place to live in centuries back.

Are we all hyprocrites? Am I a hypocrite? Do I shed crocodile tears when I bury my face in my teddy bear? Or, are these my genuine feelings from the bottom of my heart — on the "left" side, but nevertheless a heart.

Do not all cultures dictate that men are not supposed to cry? Is it not a feminine privilege to be able to shed tears?

Personally, I feel there is nothing wrong in being able to cry. Consider yourself blessed if you can weep for the poor, destitute, distressed, underfed and star-crossed people on Earth. Do go ahead and mourn for them. Weeping over suffering makes a man grow.

I am practically at home with the idea of crying. Weeping gives vent to my choked-up feelings. No, I am not a weenie. The fact is that the suffering in our world is vast and to be able to feel for it from the bottom of your heart, in these days of crude selfishness and self-centered materialism, is in itself a significant contribution. Who knows? Maybe someone who has intense mournful feelings could be the one to do something concrete about these problems, instead of simply organizing hypocritical "Save The World" conferences.

In fact, I am so comfortable with and used to the idea of crying that if I do not cry for a long stretch of time, I wonder whether I am all right. I ask people to check if my body temperature is not 3 degrees Farhenheit lower than it officially should be. At such times, I want to cry — even if it means inducing it artificially.

I have my own ways of inducing myself to cry. Reading pamphlets on the poverty and suffering in the Fourth World creates a lump in my throat and I soon break down. Reading about the cruelties and atrocities of war breaks my heart (the heart on the "left" side) and it's not unusual for tears to roll down my cheeks.

For some reason, true or make-believe stories of cancer patients always make me cry. Among my cassette collection, I possess a soundtrack recording of an Indian movie "Anand." ("Anand" means happiness.) It is about a lively young man who is suffering from lympho-cercoma of the intestine. His story always makes me cry. I have even seen the movie four times. Every time, I wish that he is not going to die this time.

This young man in "Anand" has also been a source of hope to me in times of despair. He knows he is not going to live for more than six months, but still he is always happy and makes life for other people around him happy. I know I am going to die, too — in six minutes, six hours, six days, six weeks, six years, six decades? Does it matter?

Death — when pain feels sleepy in drowning nerves. Death — when the body is finished and the soul starts breathing. Do you have to wait until then to quit crying?

Credit cards provide temptation to students

College offers unique opportunities to students. It offers the chance to learn, develop necessary skills for the workplace, to mature and to use their favorite bank, gas and department store credit cards until the raised letters and numbers are worn off.

For upper-class students, it seems that each day's mail brings offers from various banks, department stores and oil companies promising "pre-approved" credit accounts. Just fill out the enclosed form and stuff it into the pre-addressed, postage paid envelope and a piece of plastic will be sent to them in six to eight weeks.

With the plastic also come lines of credit ranging from $500 to $1,500. Students can carry the cards with them wherever they go. They can pick up items they like or need at a mall in Topeka, Kansas City or Wichita.

Gone are the days of having to have a local check or the necessary forms of identification. It's all so easy with a credit card.

Then about a month later, the companies that offered the cards send students letters. The letters tell students where they have purchased items and how much they paid for each one. And most companies don't want all the money they've loaned to students; they just want a small portion.

And on and on it goes until some students find themseles in debt to two or three companies, each wanting at least a portion of the debt paid.

Of course, if the students had money in the first place, they wouldn't have used their credit cards.

The companies can't be blamed for giving students credit cards. It makes good sense for them to offer credit to people who will earn greater and greater sums throughout their lives, as college graduates have been proven to do.

Yet, some students who have little money when they obtain the cards are easily tempted to place themselves in pits of debt. Unfortunately, credit card companies expect payment immediately, unlike bankers who offer guaranteed student loans. Since those loans are guaranteed by the federal government, bankers can be patient and wait until the students graduate.

But, credit card companies, having no such guarantee, cannot wait. And if students don't pay after a few months, they have to cancel the credit cards and tell credit bureaus that these individuals are poor risks, giving students bad credit ratings which can follow them around for years after they graduate.

Credit cards also offer students the opportunity to establish good credit histories early in life, enabling them to purchase houses or cars earlier than most people.

Only a student's self-control and business sense will determine which credit rating will be packed along with the rest of their collegiate baggage.

Wichita school should stop 'used food' policy

It seems an elementary school in Wichita has found a way to cut corners on its food budget.

Last week, a mother phoned the school's principal and the superintendent's office after her daughter came home from school and told her that school officials were going around taking uneaten food off of student's trays.

The incident became public when the woman received little or no reaction from school officials and called a columnist with the Wichita Eagle-Beacon.

The columnist confirmed that the school did re-use some food not eaten by students at lunch to use for their latchkey program after school. School officials said the food was never re-served at lunch and that only certain adults made the choices of what food to save for the program — mainly things like wrapped cookies and fruit wedges.

What's wrong with re-using a few orange slices or cookies?

One problem is the attitude school administrators took toward the entire affair. The principal who took over the job from the previous one said the practice seemed a "little odd," but it was continued it because it had been done previously.

It never seemed to enter into anyone's mind that there might be violations of city, county or state laws here. The peril some children might have been put in had something gone wrong never seemed to crop up either.

The practice was just something that seemed like an odd kind of complaint and then odd that it was actually true.

Parents pay good money for their children's education. They are told by school leaders that with a certain amount of money, a certain amount of services can be provided.

Services are expected to be the best the money can buy. When it comes to food services, only the best is allowed because of the catastrophic effects lesser quality can produce.

It appears that in this case, parents and students alike were bilked out of the money school officials were spending for the education and nutrition. A change in attitude is needed to keep these types of activities from happening again and different thinking toward safeguarding the quality of school lunches.

"Used" food should never be tolerated in any school district.

LETTERS to the editor are encouraged, and they should be sent to the Collegian's Editorial Page Editor in Kedzie 103.

Letters

First-rate article

Editor,

This letter is in response to last Friday's article on the Michael Jackson concert in Kansas City, Mo. I would like to point out that the article was well-written and it was fantastic for us Michael-maniacs to read about him in our favorite paper (the Collegian).

I was particularly impressed with the honesty and candidness expressed by the article in analyzing the concert. It's very rare to read about positive things on Jackson nowadays. A lot of people have been concentrating on the private life of Michael and have mercilessly criticized his so-called "bizarre" behavior.

But they forget that Michael is a very talented singer/dancer who should be commended for his abilities. Personally, I don't care what he does with his private life as long as he gives me good music. Like he sings on his latest album, his private life "ain't nobody's business." I would like to note that the concert was great and I enjoyed it very much.

Finally, I would once again like to thank the Collegian for its great, insightful, unbiased story on my idol, Michael Jackson. It showed why the Collegian is one of the best college newspapers in the country. Please keep up the good work.

Proof necessary

Editor,

In your Feb. 26 editorial, the assertion that the "United States is the world's leading nation in mathematics" might be a very popular one in an American newspaper, but unfortunately in the whole article there is no source or proof given for this claim. Without doubt American universities are among the best institutions in the world for studying mathematics, but it would be interesting to know on what your opinion is based.

Perhaps it is based on your claim that there are a lot of universities in the world where "the prerequisite for teaching mathetics is a doctorate from an American university". Contrary to your example, West Germany is not one of those countries. The expression "the prerequisite" leads one to believe that everybody who gets a Ph. D. in the United States can apply for a West German professorship. He can apply, of course. But a requirement for a teaching position at a West German university is a so-called "Habilitation". The "Habilitation" starts beyond the level of a doctorate and is supposed to consist of research work which is deeper than merely writing a Ph. D. thesis.

As a West German student, I appreciate your concern about the foreign students. But as a math student, I would like to see proofs for your claims.

Column unfair

Editor,

Columns in newspapers are often meant to point out something wrong or unfair in the community or on campus. However, I know of nothing more unfair than attacking an infant organization. Lori Siegrist's column on the Off-Campus Association was not only unfair; it stated falsehoods.

The most blatant was her statement that Doug Folk, Greg Weisenborn and Michelle Benoit would split the leadership positions between themselves. Nothing could be more untrue. After unselfishly starting the organization, publicizing it and leading the first meetings, they stepped down and let the members vote on executive officers. They refused to chair any committees.

Miss Siegrist also said the group is not being organized for off-campus students. While it is true the constitution of the Off-Campus Association states any student may join, it also states that all members must promote the interests of off-campus students.

The column said students live off campus to escape the silliness of philanthropies and social activities of organized housing.

My advice is for Miss Siegrist to spend her time on better things than kicking around an infant organization that seeks to give off-campus students a chance to be more involved in their University and community.

New shelter offers home for stray animals

Facility dedicated Thursday

By Robert Short
Collegian Reporter

City and county officials dedicating the T. Russell Reitz Regional Animal Shelter Thursday praised area residents for supporting the multi-service addition to the Manhattan Industrial Park.

"We look today at one of the finest structures of this type in the United States," said T. Russell Reitz, contributor to the shelter construction fund.

Nancy Denning, city commissioner, said the animal shelter will address an issue that is very important in the Manhattan area: what to do with stray and unwanted dogs and cats.

The shelter has the capacity to handle a maximum of 53 animals. There is also space available for an additional 25 more smaller stainless steel cages for puppies and kittens.

The facility will be available to spay and neuter animals in situations where breeding is not desired, said Wilton Thomas, county commissioner.

The most important function of the shelter will be to offer homes to stray animals, and prevent the killing of litters of puppies and kittens that are often abandoned, he said.

Thomas said the stray animals in the Manhattan area pose an economic threat to the community. The shelter presents an organized and constructive method of dealing with the problem, he said.

"It was a mistake to put the shelter in the zoo — one I have wanted to correct for a long time."
—T. Russell Reitz

A Manhattan "quality of life" city bond issue was responsible for $125,000 of the $192,097 needed for construction and equipment costs of the new shelter. Other contributers included the Riley County Board of Commissioners, Riley County Humane Society, Pottawatomie County Board of Commissioners and T. Russell Reitz.

The Riley County Humane Society has also agreed to purchase a $1,200 walk-on electronic scale which will allow for correctly calibrating medication dosages for dogs and cats, said Su Bacon, vice president of the Riley County Humane Society. The shelter expects to have the scale purchased and installed in the next three weeks, Bacon said.

Originally, the facility was intended to serve only Manhattan. But the Riley County Humane Society initiated a fund-raising effort in order to expand the capacity of the shelter to meet the requirements of the region.

The opening of the new animal shelter will benefit the Sunset Zoological Park, Reitz said. The zoo was prevented from being certified by the United States Department of Agriculture because the shelter was part of the same animal complex, he said.

"It was a mistake to put the shelter in the zoo — one I have wanted to correct for a long time," Reitz said.

Because of the outstanding regional and city support for this project, the new shelter will be much more effective in serving the community than the old facility, he said.

He said the old animal shelter has been remodeled for use by the zoo.

Speakers: research, education needed to solve water problems

By Patrice Macan
Collegian Reporter

K-State is aware of the concerns of the quality and quantity of water and how it will affect the future growth of Kansas, Walter R. Woods, dean of agriculture, said at the conclusion of the 5th Annual Water Conference Thursday in the Union.

Many tools are available to address the problem of water quality and quantity, Woods said. Two of them are research and education.

"What we must have is as much factual information as is absolutely possible that can be generated from research," Woods said. "This will help us address these issues and make sure that our understanding of the issues are ... as we think," he said.

This process of research is important because it will build on the existing foundation of information and lead to "sound and solid information," Woods said.

Another important factor to help Kansas move further along in the water issue is to meet and discuss as issues are developing, Woods said. Researchers interacting combined with the process of education will lead to methods that will develop the most "sound and profitable" policies.

Woods said he believes research and education at land grant universities are essential to the success of both developing programs to conserve natural resources and maintaining the quality of the program.

Last year, a poll of 30 citizens was taken to get an idea of the expectations they had of the agriculture experiment station and the Cooperative Extension service.

One recommendation in the fields of research and education is to conserve water and soil which are essential if the state is to maintain a quality environment and achieve growth and prosperity. A second recommendation is that the University lead in developing testing and promoting environmentally safe and economically practical agricultural systems that are both "profitable and practicle," he said.

The agriculture experiment station is in about 28 departments in five different colleges throughout the state and in four branch experiment stations, Woods said. Because it is a large network, it gives researchers the chance to study different conditions, such as various soil types and the amount of rainfall.

Currently in the Agriculture Extension Program there are 29 water projects, with salaries and operating expenses at $1.5 million.

Woods said because of the tenacity and creativity of the faculty, in 1986-87 they raised the extramural funding from 23 percent to 28 percent. However, Woods said, that amount needs to be increased.

At the end of the speech, Woods announced that Hyde Jacobs has accepted the position as the director of the Kansas Water Research Resource Institute.

Promotions aid beef's image

By Janelle Larson
Collegian Reporter

Beef is back.

According to a study by the Beef Industry Council, the number of Americans who believe beef fits into their lifestyle increased from 59 percent to 64 percent.

Those who say beef is an important part of a well-balanced diet rose from 51 percent to 56 percent.

"This increase may be due in part to promotions effort of the (Beef Industry Council's) dollar check-off program," said Melvin Hunt, professor of animal science and industry.

The Beef Promotion and Research Act of 1985 enabled the beef industry to implement a national $1 per head check-off program for beef promotion, research, consumer information and industry information.

Through the check-off, which became effective Oct. 1, 1986, $1 is collected each time cattle are sold. The program will be up for review May 10, when producers will vote in a referendum to decide whether or not to continue the program.

Eighty percent of the money collected goes to "promotion, research and consumer information," according to the Kansas Beef Council.

A brochure published by the council states there are few issues more important to consumers than their own health and the ways they can make their lives happier, healthier and longer.

A balanced diet made of a variety of wholesome, nutrient-dense foods added to a lifestyle that includes the right amount of exercise, seems to be one of the best ways to go about making life better, the council said.

But what about calories and cholesterol? The American Heart Association recommends eating no more than 300 milligrams of cholesterol in an average day. A three-ounce serving of beef contains 73 mg — about one-fourth of the daily limit.

According to the Beef Industry Council, the amount of cholesterol in beef compares closely with the amount in similar main-dish foods. Beef has no more cholesterol than roast chicken.

"Nutrient dense" is a term used by nutritionists to describe a food which provides a greater share of the U.S. Recommended Daily Allowances for at least four essential nutrients than it provides in calories.

A three-ounce serving of beef with 10 percent of the calories in a 2,000-calorie diet provides 38 percent of the RDA for vitamin B-12 and 15 percent of the RDA for iron, according to the National Livestock and Meat Board. Today's beef provides more nutrition for a lower "cost" in calories than the beef produced 10 years ago, the board said.

The American Heart Association listed cuts of beef that can "cut down on fat intake without cutting down on either nutrients or flavor of meat." Included are the T-bone steak, rump roast, top loin steak and eye round roast.

Cattlemen focus on new technology

By The Collegian Staff

Modern cattle producers believe that for beef to stay competitive with other meats, producers need to know their business, including high tech and consumer trends, said officials in the animal science and industry's Extension department.

This will be apparent today at the 75th Annual Cattlemen's Day. This year's Cattlemen's Day, with an expected attendance of 800 to 1,200 people, will concentrate on new technology and practices in beef production.

"We're getting cattle producers more involved with the Cattlemen's Day program," said Gerry Kuhl, program chairman.

"We expect to register 35 to 40 commercial exhibitors and to offer a similar number of university research demonstrations."

"During the live performance bull contest, we will invite producers to ... determine which bull might be best under a variety of ... situations," Kuhl said.

K-State animal science specialists will review nutrition and food safety issues, value-added products and the production of cattle to meet consumer demands.

Speakers will also cover factors affecting cattle prices, activities of the Kansas Livestock Association and the economic impact of specification beef — a method of grading.

Hayden announces court appointment

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Gov. Mike Hayden announced Thursday the appointment of Robert Lawrence Gernon of Hiawatha to the Kansas Court of Appeals.

Gernon, who has been a district court judge since January of 1987, fills the last of three new positions on the Court of Appeals created by the 1987 Legislature. The court now has 10 members.

The governor's office said the appointment is effective immediately. As a judge of the Court of Appeals, he will be paid $63,213 annually.

Gernon, 43, was selected by Hayden over District Judge David S. Knudson of Salina and Leavenworth attorney Henry Green, the other two nominees from the Supreme Court Nominating Commission.

He is a graduate of the University of Kansas with a degree in business administration and earned his law degree from Washburn University. He practiced law for 18 years before being appointed district judge in the 22nd Judicial District about 14 months ago.

Gernon also is a former Brown County attorney and county counselor.

He has lectured on child protection, fair trial-free press, press-court relations and attorney advertising.

Besides his legal work, Gernon is a member of the advisory board of Valley Hope of Atchison and Coalition for Caring, the Brown County chapter of the Kansas Committee for the Prevention of Child Abuse.

He is married and the father of daughters 15 and 13 years old.

Lecture addresses K-State's role

By The Collegian Staff

The possibility of a selective admissions policy and its effect on K-State's enrollment was one of the concerns expressed Thursday at the Union Program Council's "Let's Talk About It..." lecture.

Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life, said that if the fall 1987 freshman class had been under the standards proposed by the Kansas Legislature, then about 30 to 25 percent of the students would not have been admitted.

During the next 10 years, Bosco said the University's enrollment will be dependent upon admissions policies and population trends.

However, he said, two keys to stabilizing K-State's enrollment are taking care of the students currently enrolled and emphasizing student retention.

Shelly Fischer, sophomore in speech, attended the session and said she believes the University is moving in the right direction. But, she said, she is concerned that many high school students don't plan to attend college and will not meet the proposed requirements if they change their minds late in the year.

Bosco also discussed K-State's role as the first state-funded institution of higher learning. The University has been a leader in the outlawing of hazing in fraternities by the University Interfraternity Council and allowing co-ed visitation in dormitories, he said.

Commemorating the University's 125th anniversary celebration, John Fairman, assistant vice president for institutional advancement, said a year-long celebration is planned.

The celebration will include a convocation, special events during Parents' Weekend and Homecoming and possibly a satellite uplink that would reach the University's alumni and friends, he said.

However, due to budget constraints, Fairman said the celebration will not be a major one.

Gonzalvo, played by Rafael Fantauzzi, senior in music and engineering, sings to Concepcion, played by Deb Huyett, senior in music education, in "The Spanish Hour."

Dinah, portrayed by Stephanie Sikes, senior in theater, sings a solo in "Trouble in Tahiti."

One-act operas display music, humor on-stage

Humorous, musical explorations into human relationships can be discovered in "A Night of Comic Operas," two one-act operas being performed this weekend in McCain Auditorium at 8 p.m.

Last night's opening for the show was ignited with the first opera, "Trouble in Tahiti," written by Leonard Bernstein. Directed by K-State dance professor Luke Kahlich, this opera is a smooth, jazzy musical look into the lives of a couple, Sam and Dinah, who seem to have lost their love for each other after 10 years of marriage.

"The story has a simple plot. There is a tension, a poignancy in the opera. I see the main characters as being much like the yuppies of today," said Kahlich.

This musical story, set in the 1950s, opens with a trio of classy jazz singers, two male and one female, who periodically "narrate" the story. Dressed in black evening wear, their rhythmic harmonizations help create the mood and time period in which Sam and Dinah are living.

We find Sam and Dinah in a rut with their marriage. We sense they want to improve their situation, but neither one is willing to give in and each blames the other for the problems in their relationship.

Sam, Dinah contends, has become solely preoccupied with his work — so much so that he is even ignoring their son. Sam feels that his only satisfactions in life are his work and his handball, due to Dinah's lack of understanding.

They each try to find solace in other places — Sam at work, Dinah with friends and with her psychiatrist. While each is going to have lunch with mutual friends, they meet on the street. They seem to want to be with each other, but don't know how, so they continue on their separate ways.

Both leading characters are played by excellent performers, Stephanie Sikes and Chris Thompson. They displayed superb singing talent and consistent characterization. The audience was caught up in the couple's unhappiness, and willing them to find a satisfying resolution.

With minimal sets and props, the show had a comfortable simplicity. There was no distraction from the characters and their story. There is little movement in the opera because it would detract from the voices and the conflict of the show.

The second act of the evening, "The Spanish Hour," by Maurice Revel, followed a more traditional opera in both look and sound. Directed by K-State professor of speech Carl Hinrichs, this story is set in a clock shop in 18th century Toledo, Spain.

In this shop we find Torquemada, a clockmaker played by Ed Raines, and his wife Concepcion, played by Deb Huyett. They have a relationship which is also not exactly ideal. While Concepcion's husband leaves weekly to wind the government's clocks, she has a secret rendezvous with her lover, Gonzalvo, played by Rafael A. Fantauzzi.

During this particular week, however, a few unplanned occurrences throw a wrench in the "cog" of Concepcion's plans. One is the arrival of Ramiro, played by Eugene Thomas. Ramiro persists in waiting in the shop for his watch to get fixed, keeping Concepcion from her proposed tete-a-tete. Another unwanted arrival to the shop is Don Imigo Gomez, who admires Concepcion and wishes to have an affair with her.

These events merge into an afternoon of humorously deceitful chaos in which both Gonsalvo and Don Imigo hide in grandfather clocks to conceal themselves in order to get into Concepcion's bedroom. The end of the story brings the entire group together to sing, none of them except for Concepcion knowing exactly what has gone on.

Again, this cast is excellent. With superb voices and thorough characterizations, the opera unfolds itself easily due to the actors' enthusiasm and energy.

The set, a colorful shop with pastel splashes, added to the playfulness of the story. The high wigs and 18th century costumes also added flavor to the opera.

Under the direction of Adrian Bryttan, the Kansas State Orchestra showed excellent versatility in switching from the jazzy, '50s music to the more operatic background for the second act of the evening.

Irish Fest marks pre-holiday

By Jackie Brazzle
Staff Writer

Don't be surprised if you've seen little shamrocks appearing out of nowhere in the Union this week. No, we are not being invaded. The shamrocks are a part of Irish Fest, the pre-St. Patrick's Day celebration which began Tuesday.

The four-day celebration is being sponsored by the Special Events Committee of the Union Program Council. Mike Penner, program adviser, said the committee decided on a pre-St. Patrick's Day celebration because the committee needed a spring event and the actual St. Patrick's Day comes at an awkward time.

"We chose a pre-St. Patrick's Day celebration because St. Patrick's Day almost always falls on a day during spring break," Penner said.

This year St. Patrick's Day is on Thursday, March 17, right in the middle of spring break.

Throughout the four days, the Special Events Committee has had a table in the Union, where green carnations are on sale for $1. A Blarney Stone is also available for anyone who is brave enough to kiss it.

The Blarney Stone is similar to the one in Ireland, but not as big. Each person who kisses the stone receives a certificate saying that the person had "visited this union and having kissed the Blarney Stone is now sent forth with the Gift of Eloquence which this stone bestows."

There is one catch: one has to kiss the stone upside down.

The certificates, which are similar to the ones received by kissers of the real Blarney Stone in Ireland, are signed by University President Jon Wefald, "Keeper of K-State."

Beginning Tuesday and continuing through today, shamrocks were hidden throughout the Union for the shamrock hunt. Anyone finding a shamrock can redeem it in the Union Activities Center for any of several prizes. T-Shirts, carnations, food items, Irish memorabilia and tickets to comedian Vic Henley, who is being featured tonight, are among the prizes.

Staff/Rob Squires

Traditional Celtic band members John Harper, Jim Hurlburt, Paul Weidhaas, and Charlie Griffin perform in the Union Art Gallery Wednesday for the Irish Fest sponsored by the Union Program Council.

Irish food specials have been featured in the Union Stateroom throughout the week.

To show their Irish spirit, Special Events Committee members will be wearing "Kiss me, I'm Irish" buttons today.

Students who have missed out on the Irish celebrations so far still have the opportunity to join in the activities. In addition to the carnations, Blarney Stone and shamrock hunt, there will be an Irish jello-eating contest today. The contest will be at noon in the Courtyard, with $25 going to the winner.

"Other participants will also get prizes," Penner said. "Two tickets to the comedian on Friday night will be given to the second-place winner and film passes will be given to the third-place winners."

Also featured today will be the Caledonian Pipe Band, from William Jewell College in Missouri, which will be playing at noon in the courtyard. Tonight at 8, comedian Vic Henley will perform in the Union Ballroom.

Henley, who hails from Alabama, is known for comedy that is suitable for the college crowd, according to a press release. He has had several college appearances, as well as some radio and television appearances and has been featured at clubs throughout the country. Admission to the show, which is being sponsored by UPC Eclectic Entertainment Committee in cooperation with the Special Events Committee, is $2.

Penner said the Tuesday and Wednesday performances were a success because they were free to the public and in a convenient location — the Union.

"A lot of these things are low-cost or free entertainment," he said. "Anything free in the Courtyard can't fail."

Crowding causes need for building

By Bryan Hissong
Collegian Reporter

An estimated $14 million is being spent on the Kansas Farm Bureau's new state headquarters building, which is being constructed to eliminate the overcrowding in the present facility on Anderson Avenue.

Because of the increase in memberships in both life insurance and mutual policy premium volume, the company is in great need of expansion, said Doyle Rahjes, president of the Kansas Farm Bureau.

Because the company has an investment portfolio of about $285 million, no state funding or increased life insurance rates will be imposed in order to finance the facility, Rahjes said.

The new facility will bring the Farm Bureau training center, tax and accounting services and the general farm organization with its six affiliated companies into one building.

Located on the northwest side of Manhattan on Seth Childs Road, construction of the facility began in May of 1987 and has a projected completion date in January of 1989. The new building is being erected on a 50-acre lot, as opposed to the smaller 12-acre lot of the present building.

Gordon V. Hibbard, communications director for the Kansas Farm Bureau, said the northwest site was chosen so the building will be located outside of city and zoning limits.

Hibbard said another reason for the northwest site is its easy access to the highway and its possibilities for expansion if needed later.

The Martin K. Eby Construction Co. of Wichita is the general contractor for the 217,500-square-foot facility. Major subcontractors for the Eby Co. will be Central Mechanical Construction Co., Manhattan, for the mechanical work and B & W Electrical Contractors, Salina, for the electrical contract work.

Hibbard said the new building will stand four stories high and will house the computer system and a back-up energy source in the basement in case of power failures.

The building will accommodate 500 employees, which the old building had a hard time doing, Hibbard said. In the present building, additional office space was erected, but the Farm Bureau has only limited room for further expansion, he said.

Rahjes said remodeling projects have accommodated most recent expansion, but the auditorium and library have had to be converted into office space.

Tigers coming off win over Oklahoma

'Cats to end regular season with Mizzou

Staff/John La Barge

K-State center Ron Meyer blocks Missouri's Derrick Chievous during the Feb. 9 contest in Columbia, Mo. The Wildcats will battle the Tigers again Saturday afternoon in the last game in Ahearn Field House.

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Just as it was with the controversy over whether to install lights at Wrigley Field in Chicago, there's going to be mixed reactions at 1:10 p.m. Saturday when K-State takes the floor against Missouri — the final game to be played in Ahearn Field House.

Though the game will have no effect on the Wildcats' standing in the Big Eight Conference race, there's been too much tradition established in Ahearn during its 38-year history for the Wildcats and coach Lon Kruger not to be emotional about this one.

Senior center Ron Meyer, one of two four-year players on K-State's roster, said one could just about guage the entire season on this last game.

"You never go to a place quite like Ahearn," Meyer said. "At a lot of the newer arenas, it seems like they have seating where the people are sitting down and don't stand up as much. At Ahearn and Allen Field House (home of the Kansas Jayhawks in Lawrence), the fans are kind of like right beside you. It's fun for the players and, I'm sure, for the people who attend the games."

"The fans get excited at good plays (at the new arenas), but they're not as involved and don't seem like they're into the game constantly. It doesn't seem like they have that much of an impact on the game," Henson said.

"I'm happy about (moving to the Fred Bramlage Colisuem) in a lot of ways, but it's going to be sad in a way to leave Ahearn. Hopefully, the atmosphere will carry over," he added.

Though Meyer and Henson both started their careers at K-State, Ahearn has made an impression on the newcomers such as senior forward Mitch Richmond, a junior college transfer.

"It was pretty wild when I saw it (for the first time)," Richmond said. "It looked old and nobody was in there.

"I didn't know how loud Ahearn could be. People kept telling me, 'It's loud, it's loud.' I said, 'Man, it's not loud.' But the first purple and white game we had, we ran out and I was so nervous because the crowd was so loud and crammed in there. My first jump (shot) just hit the backboard real hard."

Kruger, who played for three years at K-State prior to his coaching days, knows first-hand what the players will experience Saturday.

"When you walk up those steps (from the locker rooms to the playing floor), you hear the crowd noise start to swell and you remember how special that feeling is," Kruger said.

But Missouri isn't about to hand over a win to the 'Cats simply because it's the final outing in Ahearn.

"The game is equally important to Missouri," said Kruger, whose team is 19-7 overall and 10-3 in the Big Eight. "They want to come in and be the ones to win the last game in Ahearn as well."

Since defeating UNLV by two points in Las Vegas and earning a No. 15-ranking, the Tigers have been on a roller coaster ride, losing to Iowa State, Colorado and Kansas. Missouri has defeated Oklahoma State and, Thursday, collected one its biggest wins of the season, beating No. 4 Oklahoma, 93-90, in Columbia.

"Missouri went out to Las Vegas and played like they were one of the Top 10 teams in the country. Since then, they've played less than that at times," Kruger said. "But we'll exepct them to play (like they did agaisnt ULNV and OU) against us. If we prepare any other way, we're setting ourselves up for a big disappointment."

The Tigers defeated K-State, 79-75, in an game earlier this season at Columbia. The 'Cats have lost seven straight to Missouri, but Henson noted a change in MU's defensive pattern this season.

"Last year we always struggled with them. It seemed like their defense lulled us to sleep. We could shoot if we wanted to. but there was always a little doubt in our mind if it was a good shot or not. This year, it didn't quite seem that way," Henson said.

Missouri, 18-8 and 7-6, has four players who average in double figures. Senior forward Derrick Chievous leads the team with an average of 22.3 points per game — he scored 26 in the earlier win against K-State — and has had 12 straight 20-point games. Sophomore guard Lee Coward, who averages 11.6 ppg, added 25 in that game.

As for Missouri coach Norm Stewart, his 9-11 record in Ahearn is the best among Big Eight mentors.

"If I go back to when I was a player (for Missouri), it's the fact that we won all of our games there," Stewart said. "But in all fairness to K-State, we never beat them in (MU's old arena) Brewer Field House either."

Stewart, who is in his 21st season at Missouri, once wore a hard hat in Ahearn after an earlier Wildcat opponent had been pelted with bananas.

"I always thought it was good place to play basketball. The fans are pretty knowledgeable," Stewart said. "They were always good, supportive fans until we won four or five games, then they got a little ornery."

FSU dedicates Howser Stadium

By The Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — The Kansas City Royals and Florida State University officially dedicated Dick Howser Stadium on Thursday in honor of the late major league player and manager.

A new $175,000 scoreboard carrying Howser's name and a bronze bust of the former Royals and New York Yankee skipper were commemorated during a half-hour dedication ceremony.

"Today, for all of us who knew and loved Dick, who cared for him, our dream has come true ... Dick Howser Stadium," said Howser's widow, Nancy. "Dreams really do come true."

In addition, Florida State President Bernard Sliger announced plans to fully endow a $650,000 project to fund the school's 13 baseball scholarships, which will be awarded in the future as Dick Howser Championship Scholarships.

"We're taking this unusual step to honor one of the finest men ever to wear our colors," said Sliger. "Long after the names of the winners fade, the champions live on with us. Dick Howser was, and is, one of the true champions."

Howser became Florida State's first All America selection as a baseball player in 1957. He later returned to coach the Seminole baseball team in 1979 before returning to the major leagues and the New York Yankees in 1980.

Howser died last June at the age of 50 after battling a cancerous brain tumor.

Baseball team to Arkansas

By The Collegian Staff

After opening its season last weekend, the K-State baseball team will be in Fayetteville, Ark., today to play its first pair of road games this spring, as they will meet the eighth-ranked Arkansas Razorbacks.

Last season, the Razorbacks finished fourth in the College World Series.

The Wildcats, 3-1, swept Friends University Saturday and split their second double-header with Missouri Western at Frank Myers Field Sunday to start off the season.

Last year the Razorbacks, who lead the series with the 'Cats 11-10, ended K-State's season-opening five-game winning streak when both teams split games at George Cole Field in Fayetteville.

In the first game, K-State got a two-run double in the ninth inning from now-departed Rusty Riggenberg to earn a 4-3 decision in the first game. Arkansas came back to win and end K-State's streak in the second game, 12-7

In contrast to last season, pitching will be the Wildcats' strong point. Senior Zack Kimbell and junior transfer Bill Schafer have recorded complete games this season. Kimbell pitched seven innings and struck out 11 while allowing only one earned run in K-State's win Sunday. Schafer pitched in the Wildcats' second game Saturday and allowed just one run in seven innings.

At the plate, the Wildcats are led by outfielder Kent Gleason, who compiled seven hits in the first weekend of play. Close behind are teammates Jeff Hulse and Mike Rosenboom. The two banged out six hits each.

Sunday, K-State returns to Manhattan to finish the weekend. The Wildcats will take on Quincy College at Frank Myers Field at 1 p.m.

K-State to play NU in Salina

Lady Cats still struggling with injury-stricken lineup

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

The season is on the line Saturday for K-State's women's basketball team. Coach Matilda Mossman won't have any trouble deciding on the starting lineup for the all-important game, however.

The Lady Cats started the season with 11 players, but thanks to four injuries, the roster has dwindled down to seven healthy players for the 2 p.m. matchup with the University of Nebraska in the first round of the Big Eight Conference Tournament in the Bicentennial Center in Salina.

Mossman has used 11 different staring lineups this season. But three players — Janet Madsen, Amy Davidson and Kristie Bahner — with 34 starts between them are unavailable to start Saturday.

Davidson suffered a stress fracture in her ankle ealier this week in practice and is out for the remainder of the season. Madsen suffered a hyper-extended knee two weeks ago in a game with Kansas. Kristie Bahner has been battling mononucleosis and has missed the last four games. Bahner has been practicing, but Mossman doesn't expect her to be ready to play in Saturday's game. She may see some action if a reserve role.

"That's our fourth injury this year," Mossman said referring to Davidson's recent injury. "Carol Smith got taken out early in the year with a stress fracture. And then Janet and Kristie, and then Amy. We haven't been very lucky."

Injuries or not, the Lady Cats are going to Salina with hopes of upsetting the Big Eight regular season champions, the Lady Cornhuskers.

Nebraska posted a 21-5 record overall in regular season, including a 11-3 performance in conference play. K-State has suffered it's first losing season since women's basketball became a collegiate sport at K-State in 1968. The Lady Cats are 8-19 overall and 1-13 in the Big Eight.

Of all the teams K-State has played during the Big Eight season, Mossman thinks the team has the best chance to beat its first-round opponent.

"I think if we had a choice of any team in the conference to play it would be Nebraska," Mossman said. "We've played them in a 10-point game and a 6-point game earlier in the year. In Lincoln we had an 8-point lead with 13 minutes left in the game."

Coaching may play less of a role in the matchup with Nebraska than in any other game the Lady Cats have played this season. Mossman only has seven players to put on the floor and will not be able to resort to bench as much as she has become accustomed to during the season.

"We've got seven healthy bodies and those seven have to ready to go on the floor and play hard for 40 minutes," Mossman said. "I don't think there's any coaching involved. Our kids just have to play as hard as they can, because there's no tomorrow. The next game we lose, our season is over.

"There are some kids who have played 35, 40 minutes a game every game. We are just going to have to go as hard as we can as long as we can, and with only two subs, possibly three, we are going to have to be very conservative in our substitutions," she added.

The Lady Cats will have to reverse their shooting slump and continue to perform well on defense to defeat Nebraska. K-State has connected on less than 40 percent of its shots taken in the last four games, but has kept the games close through strong rebounding and aggressive defense.

"I think we've shown improvement all year long," Mossman said. "We haven't shot very well in our last three or four games and that in itself has been up and down. We've got to go into the conference tournament thinking about our offense, attacking the basket and just shooting the ball. All year long we've played good defense, we're second or third in the conference in rebounding and our turnovers have come way down since early in the season. We've got to shoot the ball well in order to win."

Coaches to sign autographs

Those in attendance at Saturday's K-State-Missouri men's basketball game are invited to a post-game autograph session with former Wildcat coaches who have guided teams in Ahearn Field House.

All four of the previous Ahearn mentors — Jack Gardner, Tex Winter, Cotton Fitzsimmons and Jack Hartman — are scheduled to be on hand at the game and will be available after the contest for autographs. Wildcat coach Lon Kruger will also be available.

Each of the coaches will be honored during a special cermony at halftime of the game.

A sellout crowd of 11,220 is expected for the last regular season contest in 38-year-old Ahearn Field House.

Persons wishing to have a tangible memory of Ahearn may pick up an information-only paper at the game about a book being put together on the history and tradition of the fieldhouse. The book, which costs $16.95, will include sections on games in Ahearn, biographies of coaches and players and statistics.

Tracksters to compete at CU

Six athletes from the K-State's track and field squads will travel to the University of Colorado Invitational on Saturday to compete in a last-chance qualifying meet for the national meet.

The athletes that will be competing for K-State will be Kim Kilpatrick, Joy Jones, Felicia Curry, DeDe Henderson, Dan O'Mara and Brad Speer. The NCAA meet is set for March 11-12 in Oklahoma City.

Honoraries sponsor convention

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State chapters of the Kappa Kappa Psi and Tau Beta Sigma band honoraries are sponsoring the 1988 Midwest District Convention which began today and will continue through Saturday.

More than 150 members of the honoraries from the universities of 10 Midwest states will be represented at the convention. Among the universities attending will be the University of Kansas and The Wichita State University.

Most of the convention will be "basically just a business session," said Darin Baugher, junior in civil engineering and district convention co-chairman.

Baugher, who is vice president of Kappa Kappa Psi, said that business at the convention will include electing officers at the district level, discussing treasuries and conferring about different aspects of the bands.

The highlight of the convention will be the concert given by the Gold Star Band of North Dakota State University. The performance will be 4:30 p.m. Saturday in Forum Hall. The concert is open to the public at no charge.

The 56-member Gold Star Band is currently touring schools and universities in eight states. The band's concert at K-State is partly in conjunction with the convention, Baugher said.

The three levels of the organizations of Kappa Kappa Psi and Tau Beta Sigma are local, district and national.

SEARCHERS! RENEW with us! St. Isidore's! Sunday! (112)

DIAMONDS ARE forever, like our friendship! Have a great weekend, Rieck! Signed? (112)

AGR DOUG: Happy six months. Can't wait 'til the formal tonight. Get excited. I Love You, ya 'lil sh—t. Sandy. (112)

TO THE smokin' hot women of Alpha Xi. Today we'll see how fun a baptism can be! We'll dunk our big baby and slam some brew, dancing and romancing the whole night through! This bash together was meant to be all along, anxiously awaiting the fun—The men of Delta Upsilon! (112)

CHI-O JENA, AXO Karen, AZD Jacinda—The time is drawing near, your final weekend at the Kappa house is here. We hope you enjoyed your stay and all the friends you made along the way—We'll miss you! The Kappa's. (112)

CHRIS K.—If you won't shut up, then grow up 'cause when I look at you I throw up—aahh! Happy Birthday! (112)

TERRILL R.—Remember, friends do fun things to friends. (112)

ALPHA CHI'S—It's that time of year for me to appear. With the seniors I'll go a'drinking a beer. Beginning at four and ending at Kite's, this is the first of many calamitous nights. Beware! Annabell. (112)

WOMEN OF Kappa Alpha Theta—Get excited, Senoritas, it's time to go south of the border and fiesta all night long with the men of Pi Kappa Phi. (112)

HE-MAN woman haters fear not, Spanky's back. (112-113)

TKE'S—"A Family Reunion" is in the air, it's gonna be wild, do you dare? Dress like your uncle and your grandma too, we'll be over at 5 to function with you. Bring the whole family, they're welcome to come, the party's not over till the G-Phi's are done. Love, The Gamma Phi's. (112)

RACHELE, JOANIE, Karla—We had a great time while you were here, you all are so great, you've become very dear. We know the time has gone so fast, but please come back, for we've made friendships that last. Love, the Gamma Phi's. (112)

SAE'S—WE'RE excited without a doubt, we can't wait to "twist" and shout! Get ready to function and take off those shoes—dressed in red, yellow, green or blues! The Kappas. (112)

BETAS CHAD and Karl! Black you will wear. Fun we'll not spare. Get psyched for tonight, it'll be outasight! Expect the unexpected! Love, your Chi Omega dates! (112)

AXO ROOMMATES Candy, Katy, Sondra: Your rotating around our house was great. We all think you are first rate! Come back and see us. Love, the Alpha Chi's. (112)

SIGMA SIGMA Sigma, We don't need a theme, we don't need to dress up, all we need is you and a rather large cup. Cause our purpose will be clear, when the beer is flowin we will be knowin, that God made Fridays for beer. Phi Delta Theta. (112)

ROTATING ROOMMATES Kristen B., Jodi M., and Anne S.—We have really had fun getting to know all of you the past two weeks! We'll miss you! Happy Birthday, Jodi! Love, the Thetas. (112)

THETA BEC—Clinique, the Beatles, advice on the sun, "Oh, if we could only wear your shoes!" Wait—are you a music major—or was that math? Meanwhile, back at The Ranch . . . Pray and good things will happen at church! Today and every day you're #1 with us! Happy Birthday! Love, Heath and JR. (112)

PI KAPPA Phi's: Hola, Amigos! How do you do? We're all excited about our fiesta with you. With pinatas, a hat dance, and Mexican tunes, we're gonna party as the Mexicans do. The margaritas you'll be sure to bring, and Saturday morning our heads will ring. We'll supply the scarves, don't forget your hats, and our function will be a first class act. The Thetas. (112)

THETAS—I can't believe these two weeks have past. Thanks, you've made my stay a blast. I'll miss you all! Anne S. (112)

TO: "JAZ," "Quill" and "Red," the sexually untamed missing Alpha Xi's: Roses are pink, Al Fuzzy is brown, we've sure missed seeing you around! Come home soon! Boom, boom, boom. (112)

AZD ROTATING roommates—Leslyie, Lindy, Nancy, Tracy: To have you here as Xi's has been the best! We've really enjoyed you all being our guests. We're sad it's now time for you to go, you're very special to us we want you to know. Love, the Alpha Xi's. (112)

THETA'S—WE'RE havin' a fiesta. It'll be no siesta! So come to our casa, we'll party till we say no mas. Amy, the safe sex pinata was a great idea! Shawn and Arlo. (112)

CHI OMEGA dates, Probation has been tough, we know it's true. The shots will come fast, and by ten you'll be through. But that's alright for that you're known. There is a Tyson fight, so the night won't be blown. The Bad Cab Drivers. (112)

DDD ROTATING roommies Karin, Kathleen, and Bobbi—It has been great having you with us. We will miss you. Love, the Tri-Delts. (112)

SIGMA NU Steve M., Sean, Mike, Steve H. We've waited for tonight's big bash forever and a day, so put on those rusty dancing shoes—let's party the Chi-O way! Your XO dates. (112)

"SHADOW," I'll be laughing through November. Call me at work at 776-0010. (112)

HELLO PI K.A., What do ya say, I guess no food or hot water make Pikes dull boys. We hope you'll joy the extra sleep. Sincerely, Spring Pledges. (112)

LON AND the 'Cats: From Ahearn to Bramlage; What a long, strange trip it's been. U.J. (112)

CHI-O ROTATING roommates Missy, Heather, Angie and Heidi: Your stay with us went by too fast, we're sorry it couldn't last and last. Many friendships have started that won't end after we've parted. Just remember: after you go, you'll always have a home at Chi-O! We Love You! (112)

DELTA DELTA Delta: Mexico, Japan, Canada, Russia, and USA, today's the day you pick the place to play around the world the Phi Kap way! See ya tonight! Phi Kaps. (112)

TONIGHT WE'RE throwing a birthday bash, for all Gator's friends to come and crash. Now it's time to get excited, because anyone who reads this is invited. (112)

THE MEN of McDonald's. How drunk were you? We told you everything you need to know. The women from Hardees. (112)

Alumni donate gift of $500,000 to University

Staff/Jeff Stead

Fred Germann, president of the Livestock Meat Industry Council, talks with Frances Lewis, a $500,000 donor to the LMIC at K-State.

By Janelle Larson
Collegian Reporter

A gift of more than $500,000 for the Livestock and Meat Industry Council at K-State was announced Thursday night at the Stockman's Dinner, held in conjunction with today's Cattlemen's Day.

Frances Lewis, Larned, followed the wishes of her late husband and established the Walter M. and Frances A. Lewis Trust to support research and teaching related to all areas of animal agriculture.

"The LMIC was always his big love," said Lewis of her late husband. "He was a charter member and a lifetime director of the council."

"Kansas State University and the Livestock and Meat Industry Council are extremely fortunate to have received such an outstanding gift," said Calvin Drake, professor of animal sciences and industry and executive vice president of the LMIC.

"This level of support lends a great deal of credibility to the LMIC mission, and it is incumbent upon our leadership to provide the best stewardship possible for this gift," he said.

"It's not every day we see a donation like this," said Gordon Dowell, assistant director of communications for the KSU Foundation. "We'd be doing well to get two donations like this a year."

The trust, funded with proceeds from a livestock auction held last fall and the pending sale of 1,600 acres of Pawnee County ranch and farmland, will pay Lewis a lifetime income.

The LMIC, the only organization of its kind in the United States, provides funding for research and teaching in animal agriculture and related areas. Led by a board of directors, the organization and its 1,400 members represent all phases of animal agriculture, including small and large agri-business.

Both Walter and Frances Lewis received bachelor's degrees at K-State — his in animal husbandry and hers in home economics — and both their children are K-State graduates.

"According to my father, there is only one university in Kansas — K-State. He worked at the experiment station in Hays and loved the University," Lewis said.

"My family has always been involved with K-State," Lewis said. "My great uncle wrote the alma mater."

Lewis was a member of the K-State Alumni National Board of Directors and received the 1985 K-State Distinguished Service Award in Home Economics.

She received the Polled Hereford Association Award of Merit for Youth Activities in 1975, and in 1983 Lewis gained national recognition when she authored a beef cookbook titled "Polled Hereford Collections."

Walter Lewis, who died Aug. 13, 1987, was born on his family farm near Larned. He was a member of FarmHouse fraternity and the K-State livestock judging team. After graduation, he judged livestock at county fairs throughout the state, at state fairs nationwide, at major livestock shows, and in several foreign countries.

Professionalism goal of symposium

By The Collegian Staff

About one-fifth of the population controls 40 percent of the money available in the United States, said a panel member during a discussion of "U.S. Politics: Media, Society and the Constitution" Thursday night.

Lelah Dushkin, professor of sociology, said this type of stratification should cause protest, but it doesn't.

About four-fifths of the students in Dushkin's classes believe in the concept of the power-elite or "wire pullers", she said.

The panel was a pre-lecture discussion for Michael Perenti's Lou Douglas Lecture at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in Forum Hall. His lecture is titled "Monopoly Culture and Democratic Struggle."

"This belief in the elite system does not make them (the students) angry, because they feel that someday they will belong to this elite class," Dushkin said.

The students' belief in upward mobility suppresses their anger, she said.

John Exdell, professor of philosophy, said that throughout the existence of the United States, there has always been a ruling, elite class. The founding fathers made the Constitution for the elite because they were the elite — not democratic, he said.

The checks and balances in the Constitution, Exdell said, help the elite and protect the rich.

Dushkin said 35 million people in the United States are below the poverty line and that the number is increasing. The majority of the population is in the middle or working class, she said.

Robert Daly, professor of journalism and mass communications, said that the rising consciousness of classes that is seen in the underground or "younger ground" press in the 1960s is not currently present.

"The traditional press does not tell you the truth. It tells you facts," Daly said.

The alternative press had focused on sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll, he said.

Parenti, who has written several books on the media, is against the traditional press because he believes it is run by the elite, Daly said.

"Parenti has done a lot of media-bashing," Daly said.

take it to them for a referendum."

"Students are real fed up with funding everything that comes along," said David Oswalt, junior in agricultural economics.

Juli Kramer, junior in accounting, said the co-op's current fee structure is unrealistic in that it attempts to provide high-quality care at the cheapest possible prices.

"I have a real problem with low-income students looking for high-quality care," Kramer said. "It's like being poor and wanting a Porsche."

Although opinion varied greatly on many issues central to the bill, all senators agreed that the co-op is a high-quality program.

When asking co-op officials to compare K-State's facility with those of other state universities, Student Body President Troy Lubbers asked: "Are we the cream?"

"We are," said Tammy Rankin, a lead instructor at the co-op.

Even if the fee had passed, co-op officials conceded that user fees may have been increased.

"(Even) if the fee passes, the tuition may increase somewhat," Gray said, adding that the co-op has "held the line" on fees for 1½ years.

Much of the discussion focused on what would happen to the co-op if it didn't receive the fee.

Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life, told senators that the co-op's debt is its own — not the Department of Housing's.

"The Department of Housing right now is not responsible for the debt," he said.

"The co-op is the agency that is in the hole." Bosco said he didn't know if the housing department would continue to support the co-op or negate its debt.

Emporia church scene of shooting

1 killed in surprise attack; gunman's motive unknown

By The Associated Press

EMPORIA — A heavily armed man walked into a crowded church Sunday and opened fire, killing one person and injuring four others before a church trustee chased him into the street and hit him with a hymnal.

Cheunphon Ji, 29, was being held Sunday night in the Lyon County Jail, said Capt. Bruce Fair of the Emporia Police Department. No charges were immediately filed.

About 110 worshippers had been singing a hymn at the Calvary Baptist Church when a man strode into the building and opened fire with a semi-automatic handgun, according to Pastor Donald Kusmaul.

He said the man was carrying a bag and was wearing ear protectors of the type used on firing ranges.

"He started shooting," Kusmaul said. "There was no time to think. I hit the floor and it helped signal to everybody that it was serious, to get down. I just heard these loud reports. It was very loud, rapid fire."

Parishioners scrambled for cover under pews. As the gunman tried to reload, one of the church trustees got up and ran toward him and chased him out into the street, Kusmaul said. He said the trustee, Jerry Waddell, hit the gunman with a hymnal and he and other members of the congregation who joined in the pursuit tackled him and held him for police.

Police identified the man who was killed as Thomas G. DeWeese, 47, of rural Americus. His daughter Beverly, 18, was among the four injured. She was treated and released from Newman Memorial County Hospital in Emporia.

Sandra Mattix, 43, of Emporia, remained hospitalized in fair condition with a shoulder injury.

Robert Adamson, 14, of Emporia, was in good condition at St. Mary's Health Center with a thigh wound. Another 14-year-old Emporian, Daniel Goza, was released from Newman Hospital after treatment of a flesh wound to the hip.

Blomenkamp said indications were that the gunman had left California within the past week and arrived in Emporia shortly before the shootings.

The suspect's late-model Cadillac, which bore California license plates, was found in the driveway of the church parsonage.

"It's just miraculous that more weren't injured," said Kusmaul. "I think he was prepared to just massacre people."

An usher, Scott Davies, said the gunman had first aimed the gun at him.

"There was about five or six seconds of just silence and there began to be cries and screams, hollers. It was just chaotic."
—Scott Davies

"I started to walk over toward him and by that time he had the gun pointed directly at me and took aim and fired," Davies said. "I jumped behind a wall in the church and looked back out to make sure what was happening was real and it was. He began just shooting across the auditorium itself randomly at people, about five or six shots.

"There was about five or six seconds of just silence and there began to be cries and screams, hollers. It was just chaotic," Davies said.

One witness told Emporia radio station KVOE that the gunman shouted "White supremacists!" before firing at parishioners in the predominantly white congregation.

Emporia Police Chief Larry Blomenkamp also disputed reports that the man had shouted before opening fire.

Blomenkamp, who said he did not know how many shots were fired, said officers recovered two other pistols and ammunition from a duffel bag that the man carried into the church.

"He had no particular target. He just entered and started firing random shots," Blomenkamp said."He said absolutely nothing. He just walked in and began shooting."

The gunman was not a member of the church, and no motive was known, Blomenkamp said.

Bloomingdale's delegation 'inspired'

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

RILEY — They came, they saw and they left inspired.

The three-member delegation from the Bloomingdale's department store chain that visited Riley antique shops Friday left with "design inspirations" for the stores' upcoming promotion of Kansas.

The six-week long promotion is a feature in all 16 of Bloomingdale's stores and begins May 10.

"The primary purpose of this visit is to give the two designers with me some visions of what Kansas looks like," said Debi Camarota, Bloomingdale's spokeswoman.

Camarota said she wanted the designers to see some antiques and to get ideas to use for design inspiration.

Dee Jensen, owner of a Riley antique shop, said she was pleased that Bloomingdale's was visiting Riley.

"It's super, whether they buy anything or not," she said. "We need all the promotion we can get. Sometimes people have to be lookers before they can be buyers."

The delegation had looked at the exteriors of buildings of an earlier time period in Dodge City, Camarota said.

"Dodge City has a general store and we're considering possibly doing a general store type of environment," she said. "It's all in the research stages; we're going to go back and put it all on the drawing table and see what's feasible and what we want to do.

"Everyone in Kansas has been very friendly and I'm actually going to be sorry to leave," she said.

Lorine Woodworth, owner of a floral shop in Riley, had a large marquee-type sign in front of her store emblazoned with the words "Welcome to Riley, Bloomingdale's."

Staff/Rob Squires

Debi Camarota, spokeswoman for the Bloomingdale's department store chain, looks over some of the items for sale in a floral shop in Riley. Camarota is designing a Kansas promotion for the 16 stores.

"We just wanted to let them know we were glad they were coming," Woodworth said.

Janet Davies, who works for Woodworth, said, "If Bloomingdale's will come, maybe others will, too."

"We have a lot more to offer than just cow patties," Woodworth said.

Tom Saporita, designer for Bloomingdale's, said he was surprised by the differences within the state.

"Seeing the diversity of the state has surprised me — the diversity of the terrain, the kinds of industry and the differences in farming," he said.

Saporita said he would be designing exhibitions to promote technology, home crafts, handicrafts and the history of the state and its relationship in history to the other 49 states.

"I've gotten a lot of inspirations for the design," he said. "The people have been both responsive and receptive to working with us."

Randy Tosh, director of trade promotions for the Kansas Department of Commerce, said the visit has been a good opportunity for the Bloomingdale's representatives to see Kansas and to get a feel for the environment.

"They're going to take the next couple of weeks and develop what they've been able to see in Kansas, and from that point they'll talk with us about the public relations, advertising and display effects they intend to incorporate into the stores for the promotions," he said.

Camarota said there was a great collection of antiques in Riley and that the visit had been helpful for design ideas.

"It's interesting that there are so many antique stores per square foot on one street,' she said. "It's very hard to purchase the antiques and bring them back, so what we'll do is go back and conduct some research and maybe design some new things, but using a similar style."

Briggitte Carver, former Riley businesswoman, said it's great for Kansas to be promoted.

"I would like to be able to walk into a store in New York and see items from Kansas on sale," she said.

Senators to propose referendum bill

By Deron Johnson
Campus Editor

Student Senate may not be finished debating the KSU Childcare Cooperative issue.

In wake of Senate's sound defeat Friday morning of a bill that would have allocated student fees to the co-op, one senator said a bill is being planned that could bring the issue to a referendum.

"It's something we're looking at right now," said Brenda Halinski, junior in pre-professional elementary education. Halinski is co-sponsoring the bill with Stu Duncan, graduate student in agronomy, and Randall Davis, sophomore in agronomy.

Although the original bill was defeated by a substantial margin, Halinski said she thinks senators would be more willing to pass a bill authorizing a referendum.

"I don't think there would be a problem with it going to referendum because (senators) would have nothing to lose," she said.

Halinski said the referendum is being proposed in case the administration interprets Senate's vote on

Foundation Telefund has record-setting year

Alumni pledge more than $500,000

By Chris Wilhelm
Collegian Reporter

The KSU Foundation Telefund set records for the ninth consecutive year, receiving 16,749 pledges that totaled $503,354.

"I think the success of the Telefund says a lot for our alumni, University and for the organization and cooperation here on campus," said Gordon Dowell, KSU Foundation assistant director of communications.

"We had over 1,200 faculty and students donate their time to make it a success and it just keeps getting better every year," he said.

The Telefund, which received an increase in pledges of almost 10 percent over last year, had records set in seven of the eight academic colleges and in the athletic department.

The College of Arts and Sciences, which accounted for the largest amount of pledges received, increased its pledges 11 percent over last year to a total of $127,478.

The College of Education received the biggest percentage increase, bettering last year's total by 31 percent. This year, the college received $54,709 from 2,330 alumni compared to $41,797 from 1,761 graduates last year.

"Telefund has had a tremendous impact on Kansas State University," Dowell said. "The funds raised during Telefund are returned to the colleges and expended at the deans' discretion. Students are the beneficiaries of the Telefund because the funds provide scholarships and other educational benefits."

The top student caller was Greg Covington, sophomore in engineering, who received 233 pledges in six calling sessions. Top faculty caller was Tom Parish, professor of education, who received 315 pledges.

The number of pledges and total amount pledged for each college are as follows:

■ College of Agriculture — 2,604, $70,646

■ College of Architecture and Design — 757, $23,342

■ College of Arts and Sciences — 4,015, $127,478

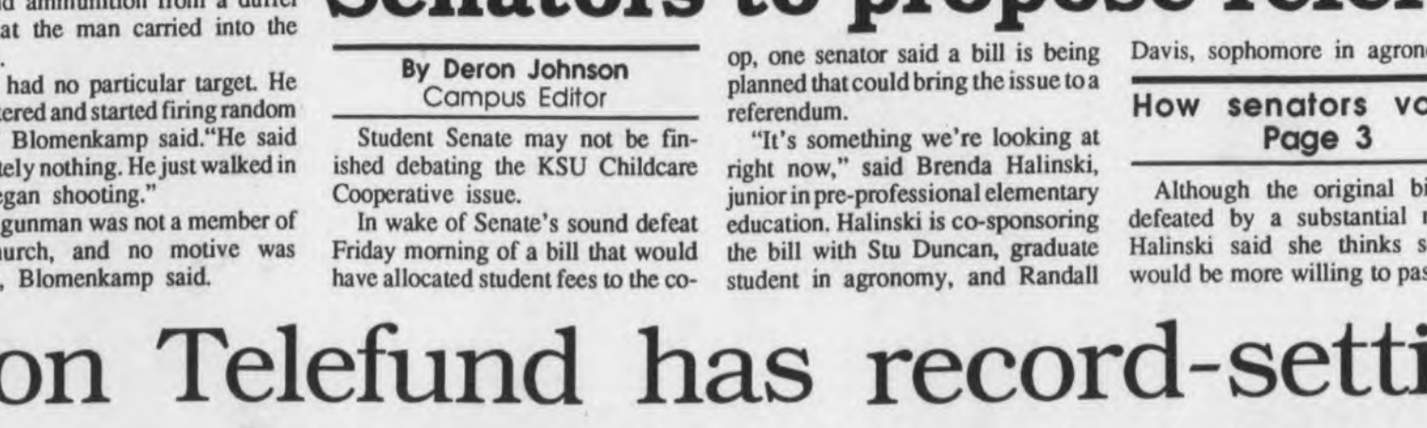
■ College of Business Administration — 1,789, $57,242

■ College of Education — 2,330, $54,709

■ College of Engineering — 2,293, $83,285

■ College of Human Ecology — 1,847, $44,065

■ College of Veterinary Medicine — 564, $25,640



■ Smith Scholars — 48, $1,920

■ Department of Intercollegiate Athletics — 232, $15,027.

Phil Helms, a representative with a telemarketing company based in Los Angeles, Calif., monitored the volunteer callers.

"Without question, the KSU Telefund is the best organized, totally volunteer telefund I've ever seen," Helms said.

"I'm particularly impressed with the quality of the students who enthusiastically participate. It is rare in a public institution of higher education to see so many deans, department heads and professors volunteering their time alongside the students," he said.

Israeli soldiers kill two teens

JERUSALEM — Israeli soldiers killed two Arab teen-agers Sunday and dragged an injured boy from his bed during violent sieges at two hospitals in the occupied territories, officials said.

In southern Lebanon, six Arab guerrillas were killed in clashes with Israeli soldiers and Israeli-backed militiamen, the army said Sunday. Three of the guerrillas were killed in a mission to attack Israeli targets and three were slain during an attack on militiamen, the army said.

Arab demonstrators in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and Gaza Strip hoisted hundreds of outlawed Palestinian flags to mark a PLO-organized "Flag Day." Arab reports said Israeli soldiers shot and killed a donkey decorated with both Palestinian and Israeli flags.

The army said an officer and two soldiers were indicted on charges of aggravated assault in connection with the beating of two bound Arabs in the West Bank city of Nablus last month.

The beating, which lasted more than 30 minutes, was taped by CBS News and sparked international criticism of the crackdown in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, which Israel occupied after the 1967 Middle East war.

Sunday's fatalities brought to 83 the number of Palestinians killed since violence erupted in the occupied territories on Dec. 8, according to U.N. figures.

Tibetans riot during festival

BEIJING — Thousands of rioting Tibetans set bonfires in Lhasa's streets and several people were killed during more than 12 hours of clashes with police, according to reports reaching Beijing Sunday.

Police fired bullets and tear gas at protesters Saturday and three to nine people were killed, according to the unconfirmed reports from Western sources in Lhasa.

The dead included one Tibetan monk and two Chinese police officers, the reports said. Calm was restored late Saturday and no further violence was reported Sunday.

The protesters were demanding Tibet's independence from China. The riots came at the close of a major Buddhist festival in Tibet's capital.

Soviets to still control Afghans

UNITED NATIONS — When Soviet troops withdraw from Afghanistan, as now appears likely, they will leave behind a Soviet infrastructure ensuring Moscow's influence in the strategic region once coveted by the czars.

The Soviets are training Afghan military officers. A Soviet adviser has been placed in every ministry. And 10,000 Afghan youths and kindergarteners are living in the Soviet Union, establishing what the Soviets hope will be lifelong ties with Moscow.

Afghanistan's financial debt to the Soviet Union alone — more than $2 billion — appears to ensure political attention to Soviet needs. And close trade relations, based on Soviet exploitation of Afghan mineral resources, will also bring the two countries closer.

Wheelchair driver gets DUI

GALLATIN, Tenn. — A man who rode his motorized wheelchair in the path of a police car has been charged with driving under the influence.

James L. "Ironside" High, 29, of Gallatin, was arrested early Friday, Assistant Police Chief Wayne Brooks said Saturday. The incident occurred about four miles from High's residence. He was not struck.

High, who uses the wheelchair because of a farming accident 20 years ago, said he drove his wheelchair in front of the police car to avoid a ditch. Detective David Lame said High fell out of the wheelchair as an officer tried to question him.

High was also charged with possession of marijuana, said Brooks. A small plastic bag found on him was sent to the state crime lab, he said. High was later released without having to post bond.

Foreign-made cars vandalized

CHICAGO — Vandals punctured tires on about 60 foreign cars at O'Hare International Airport, authorities said.

"It looked like it was somebody who didn't like foreign cars," Ismael Hernandez, a garage supervisor at the airport, said Saturday. "We don't know who would have done something like this."

Hernandez said vandals roamed the parking deck's fourth level late Tuesday and slit the tires on Mercedes-Benzes, Jaguars, BMWs, Volvos and other expensive foreign-made cars.

One Volvo had four tires punctured, but most cars had two tires punctured. Only two U.S.-manufactured cars were vandalized, he said. The garage increased security to prevent a repeat attack.

Hernandez said the car owners did get one piece of good news. "We didn't charge them for parking because a lot of them had to spend $300 or more for tires after they left here."

Dole vows 'to keep working'

HIALEAH, Fla. — Kansas Sen. Bob Dole, in his first campaign appearance since he was resoundingly defeated in the Republican South Carolina primary, vowed to press on, saying: "We got a long fight."

"We're going to go all the way to California, so we need all the help we can get in Florida," the Senate minority leader told 250 cheering supporters in a rally at a Spanish restaurant.

"We're going to keep working. We're going to do the best we can. It's going to be a long hard fight," he said.

South Carolina was only one state, Dole said, pointing out that he won weekend events in Wyoming and Kansas "and those are two other states."

In South Carolina, Dole edged out Pat Robertson but trailed far behind Vice President George Bush, whose sweeping victory Saturday gave him all of the state's 37 convention delegates.

Bush took 48 percent to Dole's 21 percent, Robertson's 19 percent and New York Rep. Jack Kemp's 11 percent.

Corrections

Due to an editor's error, Friday's Collegian stated "free admission" under an announcement of the Phil Woods Jazz Quintet Concert to be held Wednesday in McCain Auditorium. The tickets are $15 for the general public, $11 for students and senior citizens on the main floor, $13 and $9 in the lower balcony, and $11 and $7 in the upper balcony.

Due to an editor's error in Thursday's Collegian, a winner in UPC's photo contest was incorrectly identified. Ward Taylor, senior in physical sciences, was a winner in the landscape and still-life and interiors categories. Also, Diane Nunley, sophomore in secondary education, won in the animals category.

Stan Eckert, Lawrence, announces his candidacy for the U.S. House of Representatives Friday in the Riley County Office Building.

Lawrence man seeks representative seat

By The Collegian Staff

At a Friday press conference announcing his candidacy for the U.S. House of Representatives, a Lawrence man called for less waste by our federal government and more opportunity for public interaction in politics.

Stan Eckert said he will seek the Republican nomination for U.S. representative from Kansas' 2nd District. The seat is currently held by Democrat Jim Slattery.

"We need to join together and really do something to change our government. Our government is ... unaccountable to the citizens and inaccessible to their needs," Eckert said.

Eckert presented several examples of government mismanagement of funds that he observed while working in the U.S. Department of Labor.

Millions of tax dollars could be saved if each department would make an effort to conserve, he said.

He cited two incidents of overordering of various office supplies, including bundles of plastic binders and printed paper products that were discarded while still in the case.

Eckert said he would also argue for a change in our governmental system that would allow voters to have more say on national political issues. The federal government has become a place for only the powerful and wealthy, Eckert said.

"The U.S. government has lost sight of the average citizen — the average working man or woman.

"We see the Iran-Contra affair with no one in authority getting anything but a slap on the wrist. Nobody cares in our government — that is our problem, that is why we have scandals," he said.

In response to questions at the news conference, Eckert said Slattery is concentrating too much of his attention on the national deficit.

It takes more than talking about an issue when representing the people — it takes showing them some results too, he said.

Eckert also held news conferences in Topeka and Lawrence on Friday.

Gunmen beat, rob workers in Beirut

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Three gunmen stormed into an International Red Cross center in the southern port city of Sidon and beat and robbed 25 relief workers, several victims said Sunday.

They told The Associated Press the gunmen also asked the group, which included Swiss, Norwegians, Danes and Belgians, if there were any Americans or Frenchmen among them.

The relief workers from various humanitarian groups had met Saturday night to call for the release of Peter Coleridge, 44, of the British Oxfam relief organization and his Syrian aide Omar Trablousi, 31.

"They robbed everything we had on us, including passports and identity cards," said one victim, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Another said Swiss Red Cross attendants called in four Red Cross ambulances after the attack to take all of the victims to Beirut "because that was the only way to make it through Syrian army checkpoints without requests for IDs (identity papers)."

In Beirut, aides to Sidon's Sunni Moslem leader Musfata Saad said he was intensifying pressure on the Palestinian guerrilla group led by Abu Nidal to free Coleridge and Trablousi.

Police accused Abu Nidal's Fatah-Revolutionary Council of holding the pair at Sidon's sprawling Ein el-Hilweh refugee camp despite denials by the faction's spokesmen.

Coleridge and Traboulsi were kidnapped Thursday during a visit to inspect Oxfam operations in Sidon, 25 miles south of Beirut.

Saad, whose militia controls Sidon, has threatened to reconsider his alliance with the Palestinians if Coleridge and Traboulsi are not quickly released.

Wrong will be righted tonight with KKK forum

Despite protests to the contrary, freedom of speech will finally be exercised tonight at the University of Kansas when Ku Klux Klan members speak to as many as 2,000 people in Hoch Auditorium.

The controversy began at that university in February, shortly after journalism professor Harry Jones invited two Klansmen to speak to his intermediate reporting class. A broadcasting student found out about the plan and scheduled the men to speak on the university's radio station.

When protests culminated in a closed meeting between a group of black community leaders and university officials, the invitation was canceled.

A campus organization, Slightly Older Americans for Freedom, thought the university officials were "in error" and decided to invite members of the Klan to be panelists at a free-speech forum, "Freedom of Expression in the University Environment: Voices from the Right."

Slightly Older Americans for Freedom is to be applauded for righting a wrong — the wrong that occurred when the Klan was denied the freedom of speech. That right belongs to every American citizen, not just a popular majority.

Protest will more than likely occur at the forum, and that protest should be encouraged since it is an expression of free speech — just as is the Klan's vile message. Let there be no doubt: The Ku Klux Klan and the message it spreads is abhorrent and an insult to all who honor freedom, equality and decency.

But it is important that the protesters focus on the message of the Klan and not on the fact that the Klan is speaking. To do otherwise would typify the protesters as hypocrites, equal to the Klan in that they would also be seeking to deny the rights of others.

Not only would such a protest be a mark against those legitimately protesting the Klan's bigotry, it would raise further sympathy for the Klan. Whereas before the Klan was to speak only before 20 or more students and the occasional radio listener, it will now have a potential audience of at least 2,000.

Ironically, the Klan's goal for the forum — "to get the word out," as Klansman Dennis Mahon said — will succeed admirably, to the detriment of those it belittles.

The only potential benefit from that happening is that more than 20 people will see the KKK for what it truly is.

Senate should present co-op's fate to students

Despite Student Senate's disappointing refusal to increase student fees to support the KSU Childcare Cooperative, the co-op may have one last chance to get the funding it deserves.

The inital steps toward a student referendum are being taken by some senators who, at their Thursday night meeting, will present a bill that will place the decision where it ultimately belongs — in the students' hands.

Many of the senators who voted against the increase did so because they believed it would benefit too few students. What they fail to see is that the co-op is one way to attract and maintain faculty members. And good faculty members are something that a University can never have enough of.

But should Senate once again fail to realize the co-op's importance to the University by defeating the bill for the referendum, the senators must collect signatures from 10 percent of the student body saying that they would support a referendum.

Such a petition drive would require spending many unnecessary hours collecting signatures. Because, after all, it isn't as if the co-op can't justify its request for the $1 fee increase.

The co-op is facing a sizable debt from the last fiscal year that may force its closure. Its future projections don't look much better.

In addition, the salaries of the co-op's staff are pitiful. It's amazing that they work for a salary that places them below the nation's poverty level.

The worst part about Senate defeating the increase is that it could influence the administration to make the same decision on a similar request by the co-op.

It seems that a referendum is the best way for students to show whether they support the increase.

Rekindling old flames

Here are tips for getting ex-love back

Commentary

MARK SCHREINER
Collegian Columnist

A few weeks ago, I found in an Aggieville business's trash can a letter from a guy in which he begged his ex-girlfriend to come back to him.

Now, most of us would agree that getting back an old girlfriend or boyfriend is pretty important. But we do not know what method will work.

Maybe walking through the letter I found will help. Letter writing is a skill at least as important as resume writing.

I left out names and details that could identify the people involved. Quotes from the letter will be in italics, and I have left spelling and grammar alone.

The letter begins with (girl's name). This is bad already. He did not say "Dear." This implies that she is not dear to him.

You know that I hate to write anyone, so here I am typing a letter to you and hoping youll write back to me. He says that he is writing because he hates it. This makes no sense, but the idea is good — he wants her to feel special. He wanted to write something like "I hate writing, but I'm willing to do it anyway because I care for you so much."

Excuse my typing, This is only the second letter that I have ever typed in my life. This explains a lot.

I really miss you and I want you to come back to me I LOVE YOU (girl's name) and im sorry I hurt you. This is good. He is expressing some feeling, which is really the only thing letters are good for.

To type "I love you" is easier than saying it. Letters lighten heavy subjects. Weather-report letters are a waste. I don't care how many tomatoes my mother grows, but I care if she misses me.

I heard that you are really in love with this (the competition's name) guy, but I can do more for you than he can, and I will love you more. It is unwise to rip the competition. How can the guy know that he can do more than the competition?

When I saw you I couldnt beleive how much you have changed all the guys couldnt beleive it either you have really filled out a lot WOW.

The idea of complimenting the girl is good. But I always thought that you do not admit you like a girl because of what your friends think or because of her looks.

He might have said, "My friends thought you looked great. I've always known that, but that's not why I want you back."

Everyone here agrees that you are the best-looking girl at (a university). Another good compliment. Compliments in letters go down well, but criticisms do not.

Why did you walk away from me when we met? All I wanted to do was talk to you, dont you trust me enough to even do that? Well, obviously she did not trust him enough. And he questioned her actions, which would make her feel bad. Negative comments stay on the paper until the reader has assumed the worst. He even went so far as to badly split an infinitive.

I know that I really hurt you and destroyed all the things you beleived in,and Im sorry that I used all of your money, but if you come back I promise never to touch it again.

I am not making this up.

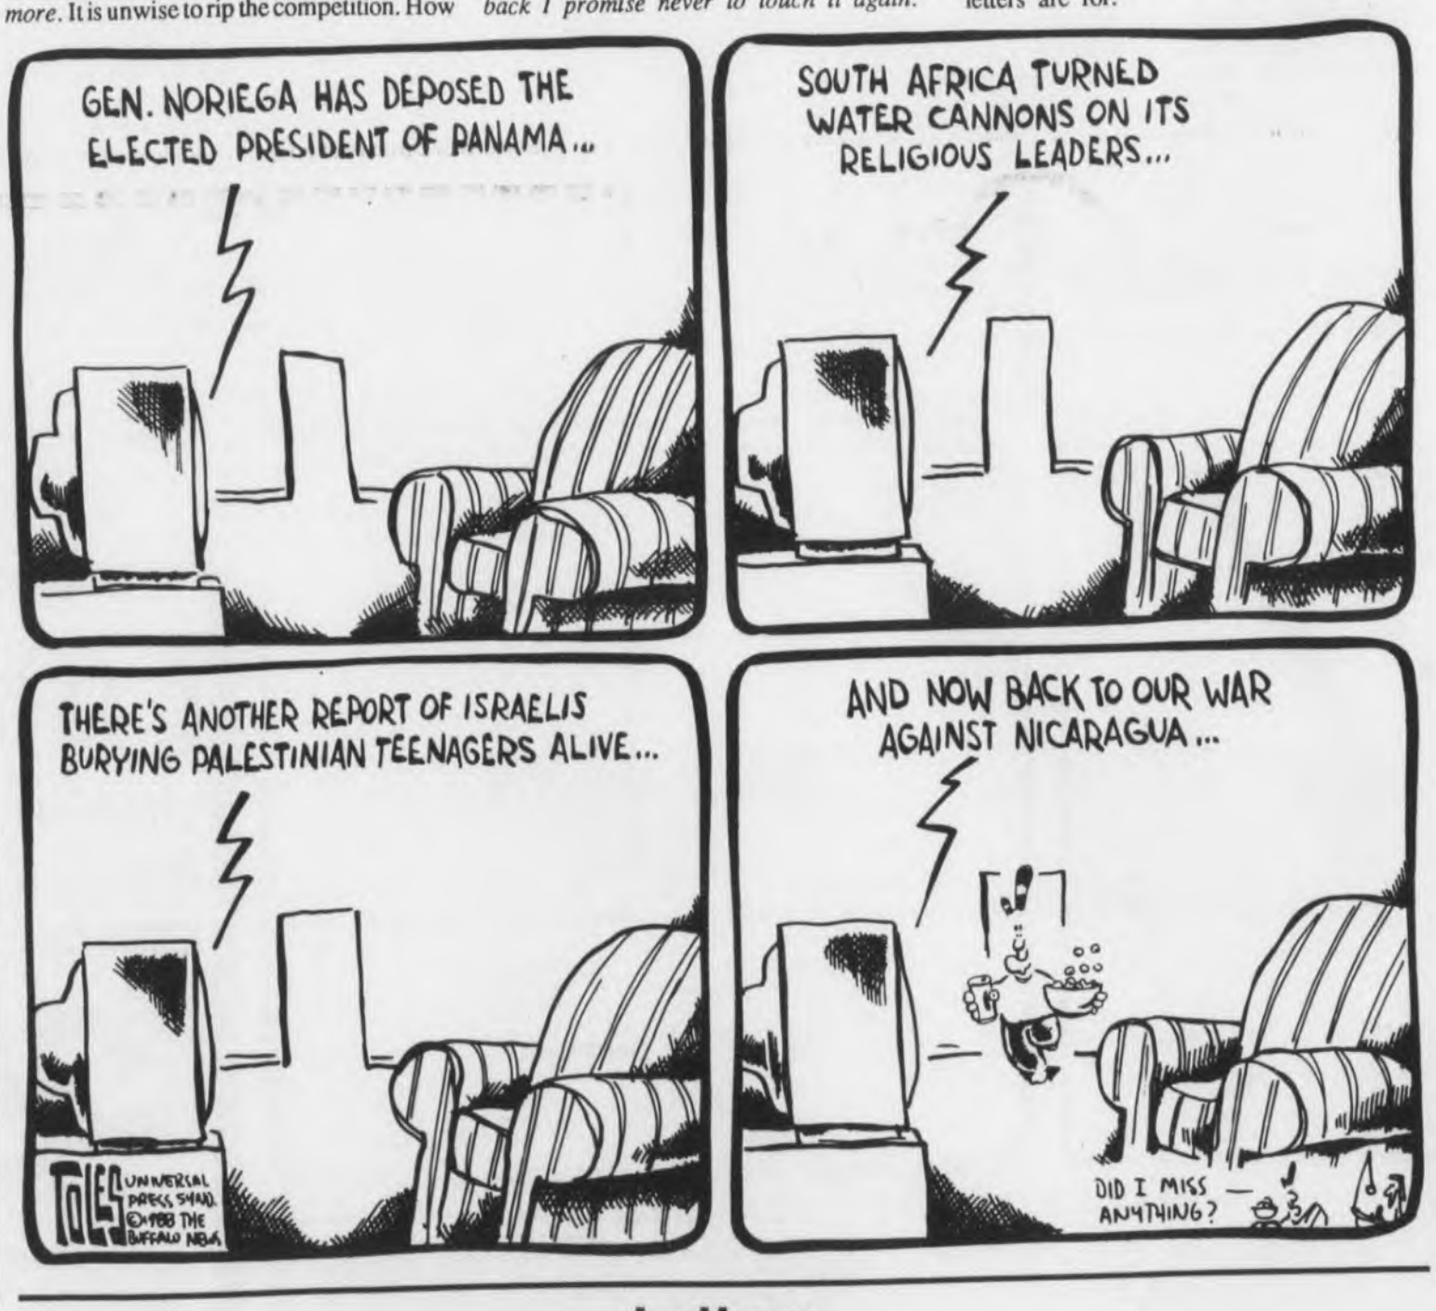
So, the guy was a jerk. But confessions are good in letters. When someone says, "I'm a bitch, I'm such a bitch," most people feel they must say the person is not a bitch.

Congradulations on (winning a contest). Another good compliment. People do not feel other people fully appreciate their successes. He also worked in the word "adulation."

You know I am not one to beg and you know that i get asked out a lot, but I dont go out cuz I love you and only you. This is bad. He begs, even though he says he is not begging. Lies are obvious in letters. This guy gets asked out a lot but does not go?

(Your friend) told me that the guy you are with is in the armed services how gross, they dont make enough money to live on let alone take you out anywhere nice. Watch out (girl's name) because he is probably going to hurt you worse than I ever did.

Insulting the competition never works. And he even admits that he was bad for her in the first place.



If you want to come back home I will pay your way. This is nice, but is the guy better than the competition or just richer?

He will pay her way home. He took all her money previously. He says men in the armed services do not make enough to live on. Does he want her or a mortgage?

Well cutie I should be going now I have a term paper to do. Please call or write back--send me your adress. Love, (guy's name.)

I would not say that I was going to quit writing to someone I loved for something as boring as a term paper. And I would not call someone "Cutie" if I was begging her to come back.

Letters make heavy subjects easier. They also make criticisms cut deeper. This letter shows that everyone writes stupid or sappy letters. But that is OK, because that is what letters are for.

Letters

Painful ignorance

Editor,

It is comforting to this writer that Edward Schiappa is so certain about First Amendment case law that he can pronounce other people (i.e., those who don't agree with him) to be painfully ignorant in regard to the outer limits of freedom of expression. It is also interesting that he considers opposition to allowing thugs and brutes to turn a citadel of higher learning into some bizarre version of the Phil Donahue show a sufficient condition for mind control.

Assuming that Mr. Schiappa was referring to Chaplinsky vs. New Hampshire (the "fighting words" case) in reaching his most certain conclusion about painful ignorance, possibly he could enlighten the ignorant as to how that case fits "on all fours" with the situation at the University of Kansas.

Is it just possible, Mr. Schiappa, that the issue is not one of fighting words but one of " ... expression so closely brigaded with illegal action as to be an inseparable part of it"? (See Justice Douglas's dissent in Roth vs. United States.)

Is there any way that the Ku Klux Klan can be separated from the recent lynching of a young black man for which the organization was found to be responsible and ordered to pay monetary damages to the victim's mother? Can the Klan and the 24 "Skinheads" who will supposedly provide protection for it at KU be separated from the white supremist network that has recently been found guilty of murdering a Missouri State trooper and a Jewish radio personality in Denver?

One could write volumes about the heinously illegal activities of the Klan, but the foregoing situations should serve as prime illustrations of the quintessential KKK.

Would it be too ignorant, Mr. Schiappa, to consider the very small minority of Afro-Americans and Jewish students at KU and the obvious trauma and threat to their well-being that will result from the pending fiasco? It would seem as though these students have some right to an environment free of people who would exterminate them.

This writer would like to extend apologies to the Palestine Liberation Organization, which is an invitee to the United Nations and a legitimate government of human beings who have been persecuted and deprived of a homeland. Never was there any intention to equate the PLO with the KKK. Since Mr. Schiappa finds that the two organizations have equal rights, it must be imperative that the KKK be invited into the United Nations.

Since this writer is so woefully ignorant and Mr. Schiappa has the matter so well in hand, possibly he could continue to guide everyone toward a learned discussion with the Klan. In the meantime, it is hoped the ignorant will continue to debate the freedom of expression issue without calling each other ignorant and thereby terminating the dialogue.

Technology aids cattlemen

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

The use of technology can help Kansas cattle producers meet increased consumer demand for "real beef".

"Real beef" and the impact of technology on consumer demand were the topics of the 75th Annual Cattlemen's Day, which attracted more than 800 beef producers Friday to the Brandeberry Sports Complex. Sponsored by the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry, the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station and the Cooperative Extension Service, the conference brought information and research from the University and industry to beef producers.

"The purpose of Cattlemen's Day is a transfer of technology ... to transfer technology to the producer that has been refined and (is) ready to use," said Guy Kiracofe, professor of animal sciences and industry.

"We try to gear Cattlemen's Day to topics and technologies that are ready for the producer ... to touch on the promotion of animal growth and efficiency of growth," said Kiracofe.

More than 40 exhibitors were on hand to inform participants about products and services representing various facets of the beef industry.

Technology information highlighted the use of ultrasound. Ultrasound, commonly known for its use on pregnant women to monitor fetus development, has crossed over to the livestock industry for the same use.

"In research, ultrasound is a really valuable tool," Kiracofe said.

Additionally, ultrasound provides an accurate measurement of the backfat and loin eye area in a slaughter animal.

"Consumers are starting to say what they want. ...Producers can then do a better job of saying if the live animal has desired qualities (of leanness) through ultrasound use," Kiracofe said. "Producers are better able to select animals that have characteristics people are looking for.

"Ultrasound is the biggest topic producers will take home with them ... it is certainly the key topic," Kiracofe said. He added this technology could be commonplace in five years.

According to Kiracofe, regular use of ultrasound will be possible in the future but users will need more data on the accuracy of ultrasound.

"Anyone in a feedlot can use (the ultrasound machine). The size makes no difference. A good machine can cost $15,000; maybe a big feedlot can afford one," Kiracofe said. K-State is considered to be one of six universities in leaders of ultrasound and its use.

Other events of the day included a bull performance test, which offered participants an opportunity to select which bull would best perform in terms of cow impregnation under a variety of hypothetical situations.

Various K-State animal science specialists gave presentations on cattle price outlooks for the coming year, silage research and integrating beef production and consumer demand. Beef industry speakers addressed topics of specification beef and beef promotions by the Beef Industry Council.

Participants in the 75th Annual Cattlemen's Day watch Kelly Lechtenberg, veterinarian from Nebraska and K-State graduate, demonstrate ultrasound technology at an open house at the beef research unit.

MOE final decision to be made in April

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

K-State and other regents institutions will have to wait until the first week of April before final action on the Margin of Excellence program is taken in the Legislature.

"Don't look for definitive actions on the Margin of Excellence until the first week of April," said Sen. Merrill Werts, R-Junction City, at the Eggs and Issues Breakfast at the University Inn on Saturday.

The biweekly event is sponsored by the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce.

Werts said by then an estimate of expected revenues will be available and that there is some indication of an increase in corporate tax revenues, which would make a difference in how spending bills are treated.

He also said decisions regarding how the income tax windfall is handled will impact on decisions.

Werts expressed optimism that the $1.7 million added by the House to Gov. Mike Hayden's budget proposal for faculty salaries would also be in the Senate's proposal.

Hayden had recommended a higher salary increase for teaching faculty than for non-teaching faculty. The House's proposal would allocate an additional $1.7 million to make up the disparity in salaries.

"There's one other little piece that needs to be fixed, and that is the mission-related program enhancements," Werts said.

The regents had recommended $8.9 million and Hayden recommended only $2.1 million, and the bulk of that went to the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Kan., he said.

"That leaves a balance of $6.8 million that we need to pick up," Werts said.

During the breakfast, House Majority Leader Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, said Margin of Excellence and selective admissions would be handled on the floor of the House next week.

Sen. Don Montgomery, R-Sabetha, said that in conjunction with corporate hog farming legislation, the Senate Agriculture Committee has proposed the development of a Swine Center for Excellence at K-State, with first-year costs of about $700,000 and annual operating costs of about $500,000 in the following years.

"This will increase the number of people and the amount of research done on swine development at K-State," Montgomery said.

Werts said an Added Value Center, with the mission of assisting in the marketing of Kansas products, has also been proposed.

First-year costs would be about $170,000, with additional personnel and a building to be appropriated for at some point in the future, he said.

When asked about the prognosis of getting the bills for the Swine Center for Excellence and the Added Value Center passed, Montgomery responded, "I will say they will pass."

The current status of the tax reform bill could be described as "disarray," Werts said.

"We have Republicans against Republicans, Democrats against Republicans, the House against the Senate and some counties against others," he said.

"There is simply not a majority at this point for any position on that tax bill in the Senate," he said.

Montgomery said debate over the tax reform bill was far from over.

"The Democrats voted in a block against most of the amendments we tried to put on," he said.

"We're trying to send back about $50 million to $60 million of the $135 million windfall," he said.

Kansas has one of the highest individual tax rates in the United States at 9 percent, he said.

Police prevent protest against Stalin legacy

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Police detained four people and used snowplows Sunday to prevent a protest against the legacy of Josef V. Stalin on the 35th anniversary of the dictator's death, witnesses said.

The witnesses said about 60 plainclothes police were on hand to prevent the protest in October Square, which is dominated by a large statue of Soviet founder Vladimir I. Lenin. Only about eight people came to the square to protest, they said.

The noon rally had been scheduled by several groups that have sprouted under the Kremlin's more liberal policy toward unofficial organizations.

Anatoly Petrunovsky, of the religious organization "Brotherhood in Dialogue," said the demonstration was called to protest the legacy of Stalin, who died on March 5, 1953 after ruling the country for 29 years.

Under Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the state-run press and officials have been increasingly critical of Stalin's role in fostering a stifling bureaucracy and a secret police apparatus that carried out purges in which millions died.

But Gorbachev has defended the industrialization and agricultural collectivization drives carried out under Stalin, and his role as military leader in World War II.

When one woman standing by Lenin's statue tried to raise a placard, it was ripped from her hands by plainclothes agents, the witnesses said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

A man who tried to come to her aid was shoved away, the witnesses said.

'Cats send off Ahearn, win 92-82

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

K-State defeated Missouri Saturday in Ahearn Field House, but no one expected the game to turn into a National Basketball Association push and shove match.

The only difference in the Big Eight Conference matchup, in which the 'Cats prevailed, 92-82, from the NBA was the officials were calling fouls — 52 in all. The two teams combined for 66 trips to the free throw line.

Just as Joe Frazier and Muhammad Ali slugged it out during their boxing careers, the Tigers and the Wildcats went toe-to-toe for the entire 40 minutes of the contest. It was one of the more — if not the most — physical games the 'Cats have been involved in.

"It's hard to say that one's harder than the other. They're all tough, but this one certainly ranks as one of the toughest," K-State coach Lon Kruger said.

"If you look back at the four-overtime loss (to Southwest Missouri State), that was a tough game," Meyer said. "There's been a lot of games all year that have been really tough, but I don't know if there will be one we remember more because of the situations involved."

Those situations included the six Wildcat seniors playing their final home game, the curtain call for Ahearn and the officiating controversy with 9:50 left in the second half.

After leading by as many as 15 points early in the second half, K-State's advantage had dipped to five when Steve Henson apparently was fouled by Tiger forward Mike Sandbothe. Henson shot the front end of a one-and-one, then the mixup began.

Missouri coach Norm Stewart went to the scorer's table to question the call and was whistled for a technical. He and Kruger ended up in a debate at midcourt before official Ron Spitler separated the two. When the smoke had cleared, the first foul shot was negated, the technical was erased and Meyer ended up at the line.

"I don't understand it," Kruger said. "They send a free throw shooter to the line because the officials told him to be there. That's not a correctable error. (Stewart) got a technical called ... and they took it all away."

But the controversy did seem to inspire the 'Cats. They went on a 13-8 scoring tear, boosting their lead back to 11 points with just under seven minutes remaining.

"If you worry about the situation that's going on, you forget about things you have to take care of. I thought we handled it really well," Meyer said.

Missouri could get no closer than seven points the rest of the way, as K-State hit 18 of 21 shots in the closing minutes.

"Coach (Stewart) told us before that to come in here and win this game, it would take a lot of extra, extreme effort," said Missouri forward Derrick Chievous, who led the Tigers with 22 points. "Since they have six or seven seniors, I think they wanted it more."

That statement was evident early in the first half. Missouri had built a four-point lead after its full-court pressure forced K-State into three consecutive turnovers.

"Our receivers weren't moving against the press. We're throwing the ball in and everyone's standing around and watching the guy get trapped," Kruger said.

K-State guard Steve Henson drives for a layup during the second half of the Missouri game Saturday in Ahearn. Henson scored 16 points in the 92-82 victory over the Tigers. After K-State's fifth straight win, the overall record is 20-7 and 11-3 in the Big Eight.

Switching to a man defense held Missouri without a field goal for the final seven minutes of the first half, giving the 'Cats a 37-26 lead at the intermission. Chievous' free throw with 1:31 left was the only point the Tigers scored during that stretch.

Once the game was concluded, it was time for the Wildcats and their coach to reflect on the finale in Ahearn.

"We wanted to go out winners. There was a lot of pressure on us, but I think it helped us because everyone tried to play hard," said senior forward Mitch Richmond, who led all scorers with 25 points and was one of four 'Cats to hit in double figures.

Kruger wasn't sure if he had heard a more supportive crowd.

"It seemed like it was as noisy as it has ever been from start to finish," he said.

K-State advanced to 20-7 overall and 11-3 in the Big Eight. Missouri dropped to 18-9 and 6-7. It was K-State's fifth straight win and the first time since 1982 that a Wildcat team has had back-to-back 20-win seasons.

The win was also K-State's first over Missouri in eight outings.

Kruger downplays halfcourt confrontation

Stewart upset with officials, says MU 'victim'

By Tom Perrin
Sports Writer

Call Saturday's post-game incident "Norm's Tirade."

And while you're at it, add Missouri coach Norm Stewart to the growing list of Big 8 Conference coaches who are fed up with the performance of the league's referees.

Prior to K-State's 92-82 win over Missouri, the normally vocal Stewart had obeyed an unspoken Big 8 rule and kept his feelings about the alleged inadequacies of Big 8 officials quiet.

That all changed after Saturday's game. Stewart spoke about the issue, using one of the harshest tones heard this year, remarks by Oklahoma State coach Leonard Hamilton and Iowa State coach Johnny Orr notwithstanding.

"We should expect people to know the rules of the game," Stewart said. "After that, a person has to be in position to make the calls. You then need to have the judgment to make a call, then have the courage to make the call. We obviously do not have a rash of people who can do that."

The incident which got under Stewart's skin the most came with 9:50 left in the game when MU forward Greg Church allegedly committed a foul.

The confusion centered on whether Church fouled Ron Meyer or Steve Henson. As Henson stepped to the line to shoot his first free throw, Stewart screamed at official Ron Spitler for making the wrong decision. He drew a technical foul for stepping across the coaching line.

The officials then conferred and decided that, indeed, Stewart was right.

Henson's free throw was taken away and Meyer went on to make one of two. Because the call was ruled a "correctable error," Stewart's technical was withdrawn.

"Today, my ballclub is a victim of people not knowing the rules," Stewart said. "A victim of people going to the free-throw line and sending the wrong people as the shooter."

The incident also inspired a midcourt discussion between Stewart, K-State coach Lon Kruger and Spitler. At one point in the meeting, Spitler had to put a hand between Kruger and Stewart, both of whom appeared angry. Kruger, however, downplayed the intensity of the confrontation.

"That conversation wasn't heated at all," Kruger said. "Norm was talking. I wanted to talk. Ron wanted to talk. Someone had to be quiet ... It was seriously kind of fun. We were smiling."

Kruger did admit that he thought the incident took away from the win. He also refused to follow Stewart's lead and rip the referees.

"Way, way too much," Kruger said when asked if the criticisms against the officials had gotten out of hand. "I think it's ridiculous. We expect good officiating, but if the (officials) have to worry about the coaches, it just puts a tremendous burden on them."

For Stewart, the frustration had been boiling for quite some time.

"It's unfortunate, also, because the same thing has occured to me for the last five games, but I never said anything," Stewart said. "Now there have been four games that people have shot more free throws than we have."

K-State hit 34 of 40 free throws and Missouri made 22 of 26.

Stewart will have a chance to see if his remarks have any affect when Missouri meets resurgent Iowa State at 12:10 p.m. in the first round of the Big 8 Tournament at Kansas City's Kemper Arena Friday afternoon.

The Wildcats will play Nebraska in the third game of the tournament at 6:10 p.m. Friday evening. Other first-round games include Oklahoma vs. Colorado at 2:10 p.m., and Kansas vs. Oklahoma State at 8:10 p.m.

Ahearn patrons, coaches have fond remembrances

By Bill Lang

Sounds of the K-State pep band echo throughout Ahearn Field House one last time following the Wildcats' 92-82 victory over Missouri.

"It was their finest hour."

The late British Prime Minister Winston Churchill said this in reference to the Allied troops as they advanced onto European shores.

Lon Kruger could probably say the same of his team as they defeated Missouri Saturday afternoon in Ahearn Field House.

The afternoon matchup was more than just a game, though. It was the end of basketball in Ahearn. And for some patrons, it was hard to believe that the Wildcats would never take to the court there again.

One person with this sentiment was long-time voice of the Wildcats, Dev Nelson. Nelson found it hard to describe the feeling of K-State leaving "The Barn."

"It's a weird feeling," Nelson said before the game. "I didn't sleep well (Friday) night. I'm just wanting the game to get started so I can get my mind on the game."

Former K-State coach Jack Gardner, who was the first coach in the fieldhouse, was especially saddened.

"It's a historical occasion, but a sad one," he said. "This building has meant so much to me.

"I was involved in getting it open and getting the plans for it," Garnder added. "Charlie Bennett (of Bennett Construction Co., the builder of Ahearn) said he'd have it ready in one year, and he did. I don't know how I can say what this building means to me. I just hope the new building does for Lon what this building has done for me."

Missouri coach Norm Stewart had the distinction of being the last opposing coach in Ahearn. Perhaps he sensed a special intensity and excitement in K-State's fans.

"This isn't exactly were I'd like to be right now," he said before the game.

During pre-game warm-ups, the Tigers wore T-shirts saying: "Ahearn Field House, thanks for the memories" on the front and "Welcome back Jack Gardner, Tex Winter, Cotton Fitzsimmons and Jack Hartman" on the back.

No one will ever know if MU coach "Stormin' Norman" Stewart was showing a gesture of genuine kindness or whether he was trying to coax the Wildcats' sentimental feelings into affecting their performances.

When the Missouri starters were announced, the Tigers took off their warm-up shirts and tossed them into a frenzied student section. This may have given the crowd more incentive to "yell like hell" during the contest.

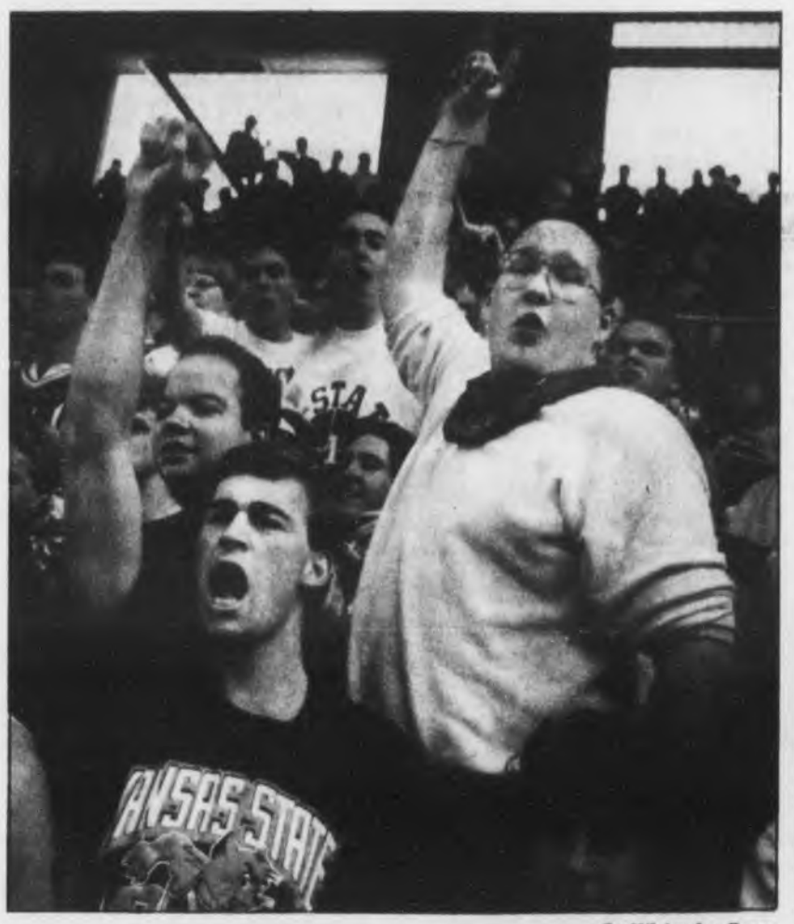
As the game progressed, the 11,350 fans in attendance let Missouri fans within shouting distance know that the 'Cats were not going to lose this one.

When fouls were called, the chant of "You ... You ... You" reverberated throughout Ahearn. And when Will Scott hit his first 3-point shot the crowd roared even louder. One had to wonder if the fieldhouse could take much more shaking.

K-State took its first lead of the contest, 19-18, on a Mitch Richmond 3-pointer at the 9:49 mark of the first half and the crowd went into ... well, mania is about the only word that captures the moment.

Midway through the second half when MU coach Norm Stewart came oh, so close to getting a technical foul, the crowd went bonkers. It was fitting that Stewart was the last coach to visit Ahearn — one only had to ask any of the former K-State mentors in attendance.

"Norm, the old war-horse, is one of the better coaches in the country and he's been around this league forever. I think he's honored to be here. I think he would like to have won, though," Hartman said.



Fitzsimmons, though, saw both sides of Stewart — before the game and after.

"It's fitting that he's here," Fitzsimmons said. "I was there when

And then there was none.

When the final buzzer sounded Saturday afternoon and K-State had taken a 92-82 victory over Missouri, so ended 38 years of magic in a building named Ahearn Field House.

The 10-point triumph that closed the building seemed only fitting in that the Wildcats had opened it Dec. 9, 1950, with a 10-point victory over Utah State, 66-56.

With an overflow crowd of 11,850 looking on, K-State's 1987-88 squad left Wildcats fans everywhere talking about the final game in Ahearn with a rather pleasant taste in their mouths.

"I'm just really pleased that K-Staters everywhere can talk about this game in a positive vein," K-State Coach Lon Kruger said.

Each K-Stater approached the final game in a different way, with a different feeling, a different memory of days gone by.

For those who were a part of it in the past or present, either as players or coaches, it hit rather hard.

"I didn't really pay much attention to the fact that this was it until I drove up here today," said Jack Hartman, who coached the 'Cats from 1970-1986. "When I finished my drive, I got out of the car and walked into the fieldhouse and it really hit me".

"It wasn't anything in particular, just the fact that we're not going to be coming here anymore."

Kruger said the players who took the floor for K-State in the final game were aware of the tradition of playing the final contest in a building that saw 369 Wildcat victories and only 96 defeats.

"They were ready. There's no question about that," Kruger said. "They sensed the significance of it and wanted to win very badly."

Kruger and Hartman agreed that a hard-fought final game in the building is what the fans deserved and what they got.

And as to the talked about nose-to-nose controversy between Kruger and Missouri coach Norm Stewart with just less than 10 minutes left in the game, Hartman and fellow former Wildcat coach Cotton Fitzsim-

Lady Cats play aggressively, go down fighting

NU ends season for K-State, wins 71-51

SALINA — It wasn't the way K-State's women's basketball team had hoped the season would end, but the Lady Cats went down fighting in the first round of the Big Eight Conference Tournament Saturday to Nebraska, 71-51.

When K-State loaded the bus to head to Salina Friday, it was well known that the odds were against them. The Lady Cats had finished the regular season in last place in the Big Eight and had to face the conference champions in the first round of the tournament.

Worse yet, the Lady Cats were without the services of three players due to injuries and a fourth, Kristie Bahner, was still recovering from mononucleosis and a broken nose.

But the Lady Cats, who finish the season 8-20, took to the floor anyway and did the best they could with only eight players and forty minutes of basketball to play.

"Anytime you play a team as good as Nebraska, you want all of your players," K-State coach Matilda Mossman said. "We came in here with two less than what we started out with and they were two people we depended a lot on. But our kids fought hard and competed hard. And I felt we stayed with them until their talent just took over at the end. I'm very proud of our basketball team.

"In the second half, we got tired. Nebraska is more talented than we are, there's no question about it. We put eight people on the floor and we fought as hard as we could for as long as we could. The game just lasted too long," she added.

Nebraska coach Angela Beck was impressed by the hard play and determination of the Lady Cats and even wished some of it would rub off on to her team.

"K-State played very admirably," Beck said. "They are a class act. She's got some youth and they're not polished, but they're hustlers. I need to get my kids to hustle just as much as that."

Nebraska built up a five-point lead in the first few minutes of the game, only to see the Lady Cats fight back to a four-point lead of their own midway through the first half. K-State then went into a shooting slump, scoring only two points in the next six minutes of play. The Lady Cornhuskers held a nine-point lead at halftime, 32-23.

"I thought (Nebraska's Maurtice) Ivy was the key," Mossman said. "She only had five points at halftime. We were still within nine points even though we didn't shoot the ball very well. I think that was the difference in the ballgame. At halftime, we were shooting 24 percent and Nebraska was shooting 50 percent.

"We did some things defensively to make them turn the ball over and we out rebounded them in the first half. The difference was we did not shoot the ball very well," she said.

Lady Cats Nadira Hazim and Bahner led K-State in the first stanza with 10 points and seven points, respectively. Bahner came off the bench after sitting out the previous three games and was looking to help the team as much as she could.

"I had a big incentive from the very beginning to go out and play as hard as I could," Bahner said. "There's nothing I hate more than watching my team play basketball and having to sit and watch. I wasn't really feeling the effects of mono."

It was K-State's defense, as it had been through much of the season, that kept the Lady Cats in the game. Nebraska was having problems with the zone and wasn't getting the good shots Beck had wanted the Lady Huskers to take.

"K-State's zone trap took us out of our basic running game," Beck said. "We were playing out of sync all night and weren't as intense as we should have been at times. When we switched to one of our zone offenses, we got a little better quality of shots."

Fatigue played an important factor in the second half, as the Lady Cats were worn out midway through the final 20 minutes of play. K-State was never able to pull closer than eight points in the second half, and Nebraska built up a 23-point lead before winning, 71-51.

Nebraska came into the Bicentennial Center planning to press the Lady Cats, wear them out and put them away as early as possible. But the plan didn't take work as quickly as Beck had hoped.

"We had planned to wear K-State out and press them in the man," Beck said. "They are kind of an unorthodox team in the sense they've got a lot of guts and are going to fake and drive every minute and we weren't doing a very good job of stopping the driving with our man.

"The adjustments we made in the second half, switching to the zone, I thought that frustrated them a little bit and they just really couldn't get any good shots," she added. "I'm not a big zone coach, but we went to the 3-2 and I thought that was very effective."

Nebraska's Ivy scored only 17 points, two points less than her average in conference play. Beck felt Ivy didn't get her average because of the aggressive K-State defense and was impressed by the play of Lady Cat Hazim on offense and defense.

"Hazim is going to be a great player," Beck said. "She and Ivy match up very well. I like Hazim and I know she's going to be a great player one day. She's not bad right now."

K-State was led on offense by Hazim with 20 points and Bahner with 10 points. Elyse Funk netted eight points, Rita Matteucci collected six points, Stacey Boyle had five points and Diana Miller scored two points.

Matteucci led the Lady Cats on the boards with nine rebounds. Boyle and Funk followed Matteucci with six caroms each.

Nebraska had four players score in double figures in the contest. Ivy led the team with 17 points. Kim Harris collected 16 points and 10 rebounds, Stephens scored 11 points and Ann Halsne netted 10 points.

Final weekend filled with big endings

KU's Manning gets roses sendoff; OU not 'ecstatic' about championship

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The end of the 1987-88 regular season was a historic day indeed for the Big Eight Conference. Consider that within a few hours:

- Danny Manning makes his final appearance in Allen Fieldhouse.
- K-State makes it final appearance in Ahearn Fieldhouse.
- Jeff Grayer makes his final appearance in Iowa State's Hilton Coliseum and becomes the Cyclones' single-season scoring leader.
- Oklahoma, the regular season leader from start to finish, wraps up Coach Billy Tubbs' third Big Eight championship with a 113-93 victory over Nebraska, the Big Eight school most Oklahomans prefer to beat any time in anything.

"And we didn't exactly catch the Big Eight Conference on a down year," Tubbs said. "That makes this special."

The fourth-ranked Sooners take a 12-2 conference mark and a 27-3 overall record into a Big Eight Tournament this weekend that decides who gets the league's automatic entry in the NCAA Tourney. In second place at 11-3 are K-State Wildcats, who bid farewell to their 38-year-old fieldhouse, once the largest building in Kansas, with a 92-82 victory over Missouri.

"People are what make a building special," said K-State coach Lon Kruger, a two-time Big Eight player-of-the-year for the Wildcats in the early 1970s. "When we came onto the floor today, the memories of all the people I've known and seen play in this building just came flooding back to me."

It was a time for nostalgia for the sellout throng that packed Kansas' Allen Fieldhouse, too. Manning, the league's all-time leading scorer and unquestionably among the greatest athletes ever to grace the Big Eight, scored 31 points as the Jayhawks capped a 9-5, 20-10 regular season with a 75-57 conquest of Oklahoma State.

Red Roses flew out of the stands onto the floor when Manning was introduced. He made his final walk to the Allen Fieldhouse bench with 1:26 left.

"It was a great feeling to look up and see the fans," he said. "Those are some of the best fans in the world."

"He has a lot of class and he represented Kansas well," said Oklahoma State Coach Leonard Hamilton. "I know how Kansas will miss him, but I can't say I will."

Grayer concluded his four-year career at Iowa State by leading the Cyclones to a 98-62 victory over Colorado. His 30 points established the Iowa State record at 758, surpassing the 739 of Barry Stevens.

"The emotions were high for me," Grayer said. "I wanted to leave Hilton Coliseum with a great game. I dedicated this season to my mother, and I'm glad she and 10 other relatives were here to see me play today. It was something special for me."

Lady Huskers down Kansas in semifinals

By The Associated Press

SALINA — Sandy Shaw scored 33 points to lead Kansas to an 87-84 victory over Nebraska Sunday in the semifinals of the Big Eight basketball tournament.

The victory put the Lady Jayhawks in tonight's championship game against Colorado, who defeated Missouri, 84-80, Sunday.

Lisa Braddy and Lisa Dougherty added 16 and 13 points respectively for the Lady Jayhawks, the defending conference tournament champions.

Wildcats win at home Sunday, fall to No. 5 Arkansas on road

From Staff and Wire Reports

After being set back by the Arkansas Razorbacks Friday and Saturday in Fayetteville, the K-State baseball team came home to Frank Myers Field to sweep Quincy (Ill.) College, by scores of 14-2 and 12-8 in a double-header Sunday.

The 'Cats swatted seven homers in 12 innings of play Sunday, with designated hitter David Chadd accounting for three. The senior was six-of-seven with seven runs batted in and 17 total bases on the day.

The 'Cats, 5-3, received a winning performance from Jeff Peterson in the opener. Peterson allowed only five hits and two runs, while striking out four and walking four. Reliever Jim McClellan picked up the second win of the day.

"We've have some good games, some good challenges ahead of us and we want to make sure we're doing the little things well," coach Mike Clark said. "The hitting is going to get better, the fielding still has work to do, but it's early. Pitching ... we still have work to do, but it's early."

The 'Cats fell short to the fifth-ranked Razorbacks to start off the weekend. Friday afternoon, K-State was handed its second loss of the season when Arkansas, now 8-2, scored a run in the bottom of the ninth inning to pull out an 8-7 win.

In the second game of the road trip Saturday afternoon, K-State jumped out to a 3-1 lead in the fourth-inning, only to suffer a 9-5 defeat. The final game of the weekend was called in the third-inning due to rain. Arkansas had the lead, 2-0, in that contest.

"They executed really well. They're the number five team in the nation because they execute well," Clark said.

Pitt holds on to win Big East; 5 teams qualify for tournament

By The Associated Press

Jerome Lane helped Pittsburgh to an early lead and the Panthers held on to beat Syracuse 85-84 for the regular-season Big East title Sunday as the college basketball season wound down to conference showdowns and postseason tournaments.

Lane had 18 of his 29 points before halftime and also finished with 15 rebounds for Pitt which scored 10 straight points after the Orangemen had taken a 2-0 lead and led by 14 with about five minutes gone in the second half before Syracuse whittled away at the lead.

Rony Seikaly finally tied the score 79-all, but Charles Smith had a basket and two free throws in the final two minutes to secure the victory for the seventh-ranked Panthers, 12-4 in the Big East and 22-4 overall.

It gave them the first seed in the Big East tournament, which begins in New York on Thursday. The 12th-ranked Orangemen, last year's national runner-up, finished 11-5 in the conference, 22-8 overall, and will be the second seed.

In other games involving ranked teams Sunday, No. 1 Temple routed Duquesne 77-57 in an Atlantic 10 quarterfinal tournament game; Illinois beat No. 11 Iowa 94-81; No. 14 Bradley beat Creighton 101-77; No. 16 North Carolina State defeated Wake Forest 86-82; and No. 20. Xavier Butler edged Butler 71-70.

On Saturday, the NCAA tournament got its first five qualifiers, including second-ranked Purdue, which clinched the Big Ten title with an 80-67 win over Michigan.

Also gaining entry were Cornell in the Ivy League; North Carolina A&T in the Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference; Southern University in the Southwest Athletic Conferencem, and Southwest Missouri State, in the Association of Mid-Continent Universites.

North Carolina A&T, 26-2, beat Florida A&M 101-85 in the finals of the Mid-Eastern tournament and earned its seventh straight NCAA trip; Southern defended its SWAC tournament title with a 78-62 win over Grambling State; Cornell lost to Princeton 79-58 but clinched its first Ivy League crown since 1954 when second-place Dartmouth lost to Yale 79-78, and Southwest Missouri by beat Wisconsin-Green Bay 70-52 to win its title.

No. 4 Oklahoma, meanwhile, clinched the regular-season Big Eight title while No. 8 Kentucky won the Southeastern Conference. Both, however, must now enter conference tournaments.

And Hersey Hawkins, the nation's leading scorer, broke records set by two of the greatest players in basketball history.

He broke Larry Bird's record of 40 points in a Missouri Valley Conference tournament game with 41 in No. 14 Bradley's 93-74 win over Indiana State which ironically got 21 points from Larry's brother Eddie. That gave Hawkins 1,014 points this season, breaking Oscar Robertson's 28-year-old MVC mark of 1,011.

Two Top Twenty teams were upset in double overtime Saturday — No. 13 Georgia Tech bowing to Clemson 97-84 and No. 15 Brigham Young losing to Texas-El Paso 83-80. No. 19 Vanderbilt was beaten by Mississippi State 73-68.

However, third-ranked Arizona beat Washington 89-71 and No. 18 Loyola Marymount outlasted Portland 110-104 in the opening round of the West Coast Athletic Conference tournament.

Mark Macon, the Atlantic 10 Conference's Freshman of the Year, scored 28 points to help Temple beat Duquesne in the quarterfinals of the league tournament.

Missouri beat Oklahoma (Thursday). I talked with him after the game and he didn't sound too sure about coming to Manhattan.

"He said that the only chance he might have in winning this game is if Lon decided to hand over the reins to us four old guys (Fitzsimmons, Hartman, Gardner and Winter) late in the game, and that way he could make a comeback."

Veteran Wildcat ticket holders were also happy to bring down Ahearn's curtain on Stewart and his Tigers — especially Jack Wilson of Manhattan, a ticket holder since 1960.

"To beat old 'Stormin' Norman' — it's great," Wilson said with a clenched fist. "He's had some great teams and some big wins in this building and he remembers that. But today it's our turn."

But the most pleasing aspect and the one that stuck out in the minds of all present is the loyalty of K-State's fans and the spirit with which they support their team.

"It's a strange feeling," Fitzsimmons said. "I left K-State in 1970, but in all honesty I never did leave. I've always been a K-Stater.

"The thing that I noticed — even after 18 years away — the only thing that has changed in Ahearn has been the faces. The spirit and support that this crowd shows has been the same and will always be the same," he added.

Fitzsimmons said the move to Bramlage Coliseum next season may hurt the Wildcats in the beginning. He noted that Missouri had the same problem when they moved from Brewer Field House to the Hearnes Center in 1972.

"I see the fans being taken away at first," he said. "But it won't last that long. They'll be back before the first season is over and K-State will be up there again."

Dave Mugler, associate dean of agriculture and season ticket holder for 24 years, has seen both the beginning and the end of Ahearn. He thinks the atmosphere of the fieldhouse has gotten better every year.

"K-State basketball is at its best," he said. "But we've always been at our best.

"I saw K-State in the beginning when Gardner was here," Mugler said of his high school days in Clay Center. "I've always had high regard for Tex, Cotton and Jack."

One of the brightest moments in the eyes of Mugler, though, was when Lon Kruger decided to return to his alma mater as head coach of the 'Cats.

"I remember Lon as an outstanding player," Mugler said. "He's a builder of people and that's an important part when you're a coach. I'm glad that the leadership with the K-State coaches continues under Lon. I know it will carry over (to Bramlage Coliseum). What a way to close up 'The Barn.'" mons got an unexpected treat of sorts.

The former coaches were seated at courtside and got a ringside seat for the discussion.

"We got a front row seat and didn't want it," Fitzsimmons said.

Hartman said: "Yeah, it brought back memories of a few go-arounds I had with Norm through the years."

Fitzsimmons: "Who didn't have go-arounds with Norm? I told Norm nothing had ever changed in him."

And very little had changed in Ahearn Field House in its 38 years as home to K-State basketball.

The inside of the building has seen several coats of paint and the playing surface has been replaced several times, but the 16 men's championship banners that hang from the rafters have served as a guardian.

Kruger's not so sure it shouldn't stay that way, admitting the idea of leaving the banners right where they are when the team moves to Bramlage Coliseum next season is one he'll think about.

"It would make for almost a haunted house-type atmosphere, wouldn't it?" Kruger said. "We could tell people 'you've got to go to Ahearn to see the banners.' That would be neat, to make this place a museum of sorts. It sure holds a good many memories."

But none possibly as fond as those made March 5, 1988, the day "The Barn" said its farewell.

A Renaissance trip

Participants travel back in time to raise funds for Farrell Library

A reception, with music played on traditional instruments, precedes the dinner.

About 130 people left the 20th century behind Saturday night as they passed through the main doors of the old wing of Farrell Library.

At first the transformation was gradual — a mixing of the past with the present. However, many guests said they had gotten a real feel for old Renaissance Europe by the end of the evening.

"The music that was being played on the old instruments may have been more authentic than what we heard in Cardiff (Whales)," said William Moore, professor of laboratory medicine. He and his wife traveled to Whales with the K-State Choir during the summer of 1983. They attended a medieval banquet in Cardiff Castle.

"Some of the people were in good costumes," he said. "I thought it was very enjoyable."

Opal Hill, professor emeritus, agreed with Moore.

"The whole tenor of the evening made me think of old Europe," Hill said. "I thought there was some very good music from the period."

"Gaudy Evening of Auld Englysshe Feaste and Merriment," a benefit sponsored by Farrell Library and the Friends of the Libraries of Kansas State University, began at 5 p.m. when Farrell closed to the public.

Then the transformation really began.

At 6:30, two pseudo-monks dressed in white robes stepped from the library carrying torches and welcoming the guests "to the Great Hall of Farrell."

Just inside, two men guarded the entrance to the Great Hall with crossed lances.

Once inside, guests were greeted by the Jester, Scribe and maids of the Manor, who were dressed in colorful clothing from the Renaissance era.

The Scribe, John Vander Velde, an assistant professor at the library, checked guests' names off the list as the Jestor, Noel Young, an instructor at the library, mingled with guests, providing ad-libbed foolery.

Maids escorted the guests up into the Outer Hall of the Manor, third floor Browsing Room, where they were allowed to leave their coats and partake of wine and hors d'oeuvres.

In the center of the room, background music by a recorder ensemble consisting of a krummhorns, recorders and cornettos provided the setting.

A brass fanfare signaled the ceremony's beginning and the opening of the Great Hall, which was protected by the two guards with crossed lances.

The Royal Nonesuch serenaded the guests from above the fourth floor Minorities Area with madrigals from the period who further set the mood.

Then Young introduced himself and began the ceremonies.

"I'm a full-time fraud, passing as a poet. It's filthy work. But, someone has to do it," he said.

He then introduced the Lord and Lady of the Manor.

Harry Marsh, professor of journalism and mass communications, was the Lord and his wife, Ellie, a library assistant, was the Lady of the Manor.

Inside the Great Hall, Old Reading Room 315, the transformation was complete. Most of the electrical lighting was replaced by candlelight, and banners hung from spears over the head table.

"I think the room itself with its arched windows, timbered roof and big expanse gave it the feel of that period," Marsh said. "The spirit of the jester and all the others made it easy for everyone to relax and enjoy the evening."

Once the guests were seated, the festivities began.

Music, dance and merriment filled the evening, broken only by Young's foolery and the maids who served the guests.

Early in the evening, an argument broke out between the resident Carpenter, Doug Varney, who is a special student, and the Clerk of Oxford, George Tompkins, senior in industrial engineering, over the amount of attention the Clerk was paying to the Carpenter's wife.

With his honor at stake, the Carpenter challenged the Clerk to a fencing dual to the death.

The duelists fought across the Great Hall with the guests beating their chalices on the tables and crying "run him through."

At one point, Marsh, as Lord of the Manor, brought the crowd to laughter with a cry of "Eat 'em up, eat 'em up, KSU."

The men then took their duel out of the Great Hall, only to appear moments later on the balcony overlooking the room.

The duel ended with the Carpenter running his challenger through at the very table where the Carpenter's wife was sitting.

The Fool, played by library instructor Noel Young, makes a royal proclamation.

His honor saved, the Carpenter returned to his wife's side and Young dragged the loser out of the Hall. Then, as if nothing happened, the festivities continued.

Young said that as Jester, he was in charge of keeping things moving.

If things began to slow down, Young said, he was to fill the space with ad lib.

At one point in the evening, Young was speaking with President Jon Wefald when Wefald asked him who the King of England was during the Renaissance.

"He got me on that one," Young said.

He had intended to include those little bits of information in his research, Young said, but hadn't gotten around to it.

Before Wefald could realize his victory, Young came back with "Henry VIII" and immediately broke into "I'm Henry the Eighth I am..." and left to find another target.

To keep the evening going, Young said he used poems from Robert Burns and Geoffrey Chaucer, and riddles from Mother Goose.

"Riddles were used (by jesters) for audience participation, " he said.

Although Chaucer and Burns were not from the Renaissance period, the point was to set the mood of a past time, he said.

The evening's festivities ended with Young's reading of Burns' "Auld Lang Syne."

The event raised about $1,300 for the Friends of the Library. The money will be donated to Farrell for the enrichment of its resources and facilities.

Comedian's performance part of Union's Irish Fest

By Julie Hanna
Collegian Reporter

Vic Henley, a comedian from Alabama, performed for about 50 people as a part of Irish Fest Friday night.

"The Eclectic Committee wanted to participate in Irish Fest, so we chose a comedian as our contribution, said Monte Stull, chairperson of the Eclectic Entertainment Committee and junior in business administration.

"We thought it was a good idea to finish it off with Vic Henley, because he's a really good comedian," he said.

Henley found something humorous to say about a variety of subjects, including the Texan concept of time, football in Kansas, New York cab drivers and how to confuse an employee of McDonald's.

Henley wore a "Swatch" pinned to his white shirt. He said a woman at a department store in Texas asked him what it was, and when he told her it was a watch she asked, "What does it do?" Henley said they (Texans) must have no concept of time.

Henley said although K-State's football team is bad, the basketball team is doing well. Henley told the audience to imagine the combination of University of Kansas' and K-State's football teams.

There would be "one bad football team representing the state of Kansas," he said.

"At Harvard the football players wear patches on their elbows and the quarterbacks say, 'Biff, please do throw the football,'" he said.

Henley said his trouble-maker personality began in grade school when the teacher told him to put his head down and he replied, "Why don't you?"

Music is a subject Henley has his own ideas about.

"I don't like rap. Anyone can do it," he said. He impersonated a member of Run DMC, using his own rap lyrics.

Henley also impersonated Bruce Springsteen, saying he sounds like he has something caught in his throat.

Henley said cab drivers in New York hear his accent and think, "Oh no, here's Andy Griffith," when he rides in their cabs.

He said he had to learn the New York accent so the cab drivers wouldn't take him through other states or overcharge him.

Vic Henley, a comedian from Alabama, performed in the Union Ballroom for about 50 people Friday evening as part of Irish Fest.

Henley was told by someone that people in Alabama speak slow.

His response: "I speak fast because I'm intelligent."

He said to try going into McDonald's and talking with a British accent. The clerk will think it's a Beatle and run to get the manager. When the manager shows up, Henley said, talk in your regular voice.

Henley asked an audience member if he was a law major.

The man replied, "There's no law here."

Henley said there is law here. According to Henley, one of these laws is: "Don't pick the corn before it's ready."

Henley has appeared at several concerts in colleges and clubs throughout the country as well as being featured on radio and television shows.

Band honorary representatives meet for convention

By Angela Hale
Collegian Reporter

More than 170 members of the band honoraries Tau Beta Sigma and Kappa Kappa Psi, representing 10 Midwest states, attended the annual Midwest Convention Friday, Saturday and Sunday on the K-State campus.

The 1988 Midwest Convention, which was hosted by the local chapters of the honoraries, gave members a chance to decide "the course of action the district will take for the next year," said Darin Baugher, junior in civil engineering and district convention co-chairman.

The convention consisted of business meetings which included budget talks and nominations for officers at the district level, Baugher said. Two K-State students were elected to district-level positions.

Tim Stark, junior in computer engineering, was elected as the district president of Kappa Kappa Psi and Nikki Haunschild, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, was voted to be the first vice president of Tau Beta Sigma. (The honorary has both a first and second vice president.)

The members of the band honoraries also attended a meeting in which they decided to premiere an original piece of music at a future district convention.

"We would commission a major piece of music," Baugher said. The honoraries would put forth money to have any interested composer write the college level music to be performed at the convention by the university band, a local band or any other band, he said.

The convention also included displays which "represented activities that each chapter participated in over the past year," Baugher said. The displays, which included plaques, posters, videos and music, were to reflect the convention's James Bond theme. The K-State display was the winner for the third straight year.

A highlight of the convention was a performance on Saturday given by the Gold Star Band of North Dakota State University. The 56-member band is on tour and performed partly in conjunction with the convention.

The band's program included "El Camimino Real" written by Alfred Reed, "Festival Variations" by Claude T. Smith, and "Chester Overture for Band" by William Schuman. The conductor of the band was Orville Eidem, band director and associate professor of music at NDSU.

"The band was entertaining and provided a nice break from the meetings," Baugher said.

A banquet in keeping with the James Bond theme followed the Gold Star Band concert. Those who attended dressed as Bond or their favorite character in the Bond movies, Baugher said. The banquet included a dance and a casino.

Co-op

the original bill as a statement that students don't want or need the co-op.

"We want to have it ready in case the administration decides not to fund it entirely or if it says, 'Look, students aren't interested in the co-op, so let's close it to students and have it for faculty only,'" she said.

Halinski said the bill, if passed by Senate, would be presented to students sometime this semester. If Senate fails to pass the bill, a petition signed by 10 percent of the student body would override Senate's decision and force the election, said Sally Routson, Senate adviser.

For the fee to be approved by students, a simple majority of one-third of the student body would be necessary. If one-third of the students don't vote, then two-thirds of the voting students would have to approve the fee for it to pass, Halinski said.

Halinski, who said the bill will be presented to Senate Thursday night, said she thought those senators who voted against the co-op bill were being "selfish."

"We're doing the Margin of Excellence because we want better education," she said. "We want better faculty. But we don't want our kids to have it.

"I think they're being a little selfish."

Todd Johnson, sophomore in agronomy and one of the bill's chief opponents, said one of the reasons he voted against the fee was because he thinks the co-op is already too expensive for those students who have children and that asking them to give another dollar to support it would be unfair.

In addition, he doesn't believe Senate was the co-op's last option for funding.

"I hope the University (administration) will fund the co-op," Johnson said. "I think the co-op's a long way from closing. It wasn't just either Student Senate passes this bill or the co-op closes. They have a lot of other options."

Johnson, who said a referendum would be an "excellent" option for Senate to consider, believes students — like Senate — would vote against a fee increase.

"I think the outcome would be the same," he said. "It would be hard (to pass it) with as many different aspects of the bill as there are."

Co-op officials have gone back to the drawing board in wake of the Senate rejection, director Nancy Bolsen said Friday afternoon.

"A number of our parents have come in today and said, 'Yes, we're willing to do some things,'" Bolsen said. "We are planning some other kinds of things."

"In terms of the decision to wipe out (the debt), it is a monumental one. It hasn't been discussed."
—Pat Bosco

However, none of those ideas had been spelled out as of Friday. Bolsen said co-op officials would meet through the weekend and they hope to have some firm plans by today.

Although Bolsen said she was unsure in which direction the Senate vote would go, she did say she was disappointed in the outcome.

"We had hoped the Student Governing Association would see the reasons for the money being allocated to us, and we felt like our reasoning and logic was spelled out," she said.

However, she added, "We think it was very important and gratifying that 22 young people wanted to share the (co-op's) responsibility."

In addition to co-op officials, the administration is also going back to the drawing board, said Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement. He assured that the co-op is not a "dead issue" with the administration.

It is imperative that the co-op be brought out of debt, Krause said, adding that — with a re-organization — it is possible for the program to run in the black even without funds from the University.

"I don't think we can have it run in debt," he said. "There's no way to cover (it). Our task now is ensuring that it doesn't run in debt."

That task, most would agree, is a formidable one. Figures presented at Thursday's Senate meeting indicate the co-op already faces a substantial debt — one that threatens to become even more burdensome.

The co-op's current debt is about $49,000, and a debt of $70,000 is projected for this year. In addition, if the co-op remains on its current path, it will generate an additional $50,000 debt next year, said Esther Gray, assistant director of the co-op, who told senators that "the Department of Housing has already incurred incredible debts for us."

Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life, told senators that housing department officials haven't decided if they will negate the co-op's debt.

"In terms of the decision to wipe out (the debt), it is a monumental one," he said. "It hasn't been discussed."

Although Krause said he wasn't sure what effect Senate's decision would have on the administration's decision to fund the co-op, he believes a "yes" vote by Senate would have increased the chances of the administration saying the same.

"I can leverage more funding by saying, 'Look, the students want the program,'" Krause said.

Furthermore, he said the chances of increasing teacher salaries to the point co-op officials would like are not as likely as they would have been had Senate passed the fee.

From co-op officials' points of view, other Kansas universities apparently value their child care centers more than K-State does. The co-op is the only regents university child care center not funded in some way by students or administration, say co-op officials.

"What we're asking for is only bare bones," Gray told senators.

Krause said the administration's decision to fund the co-op is largely dependent on the amount of funding allocated to the University by the Kansas Legislature — namely in the form of the MOE.

"Part of the difficulty we have right now ... is that we're not sure of the funds the Legislature (will give us)," Krause said. "There are no unallocated resources at this point. When you have a finite amount of resources, there's no bag of gold."

Krause said it's important to consider the changing face of K-State's student body, primarily the increasing number of older, non-traditional students.

"You still basically have to provide service for the residential, traditional-age students," he said. "(But) as we have a changing population, you begin to introduce some new programs."

Tom Harrell, Hal Galper, Steve Gilmore, Bill Goodwin

"The fieriest of Charlie Parker's children," Phil Woods leads a band that's arguably the best working group in jazz today. In an age of loud, overamplified music, the Phil Woods Quintet performs completely without microphones. This crisp, exciting band plays jazz in its purest, most classic form.

"The Phil Woods Quintet comes about as close to a kind of jazz ideal as any group in existence. Its music is straight-ahead, melody mainstream—be-bop with a civil tongue—and its members play with, off, and against each other like men who can read each other's souls as well as minds." —The Sacramento Bee.

My first time tutoring was a night to remember. My student was something called Bone Crusher Reed, a.k.a. Billy Jo, defensive tackle for the football team.

I had the shock of my life when he answered his dorm room door. He was about six foot seven...in diameter. And when he shook my hand, I thought I'd never get it back.

So there I was, face-to-knee with the big man on campus, wondering how I was going to relate American Literature to The Hulk.

But then he pulled out a can of Orange Cappuccino. I was shocked! Could it be that this tough jock liked its delicate taste? And when Bone Crusher brought out the bone china, I was beyond belief.

Reading the expression on my face, he said, "What can I say? I like it. The Café Francais is pretty good, too." Well, who's going to argue, I thought. As we sipped our Orange Cappuccino, I discovered that Billy Jo loves reading novels; his only problem was poetry. So I gave him tips on reading Emily Dickinson, and he gave me a copy of Ann Beattie's "Falling in Place."

All I could think was, Dad's never going to believe this!

Klansmen speak at KU free-speech forum

Staff/Chris Assaf

Two University of Kansas students join about 3,000 people protesting a visit by two Ku Klux Klan members Monday night in Lawrence.

Thom Robb, national chaplain of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, and J. Allen Moran, exalted cyclops of the Missouri Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, spoke Monday night in Hoch Auditorium on the University of Kansas campus despite strong protests against their visit.

Black ministers receive ovations

From Staff and Wire Reports

LAWRENCE — Up to 3,000 people protesting a visit by two Ku Klux Klan members gathered outside an auditorium at the University of Kansas Monday night as police dressed in riot gear guarded entrances to the building.

The protesters shouted "KKK not today" and "Don't go in" as about 2,000 people gathered inside Hoch Auditorium for the forum on free speech.

The forum was scheduled to begin at 8 p.m., but by 6:30, a large crowd had gathered at the north entrance of the auditorium, displaying signs ranging from "Racism equals ignorance" to "White supremacists are white trash."

Other signs read "I am Catholic and the KKK wants to kill me," and "Ban the Klan before the Klan bans you."

During the protest, Bjorn Skaptason, head of a theater committee for non-violent protests, read a list of people who had been killed as a result of racial violence. The list included two former KU students.

"Tonight the dead will speak," Skaptason said. "And tonight when we sing, the dead will speak through us."

By 7:10 p.m., a steady stream of spectators had arrived, and KU police estimated a crowd of at least 1,000. As the numbers grew, many people climbed in nearby trees to get a closer look at the situation.

At 7:15 p.m., protesters began chanting, "Don't go in. Don't go in." When the doors were opened at 7:17, however, only a few minutes passed before the word went through the crowd that Hoch was filled to capacity.

By 7:25 p.m., people at the doors were chanting "We want in," with the protesters answering, "Don't go in."

"This could turn violent very easily," said one man standing in line.

"It feels like the '60s," a second man said.

Said another: "It's a death trap."

At 7:40 p.m., police announced that the auditorium was filled to capacity, and the crowd waiting outside grew restless.

No serious violence was reported, but several windows were broken as protesters tried to push their way into the auditorium. Police inside the building broke up one shouting match and ejected another person.

The forum was delayed for about 20 minutes when eight black ministers from Lawrence and Kansas City stood up and began singing spirituals. The audience joined in and gave Opposition forms alliance for Panamanian control

By The Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama — The opposition united Monday in an alliance including deposed President Eric Arturo Delvalle to call for removal of Panama's besieged strongman and establishment of a transitional government.

The political and civic alliance comprises virtually all the nation's civilian political forces not directly linked to the armed forces or to the regime of Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega.

The announcement came 10 days after the Legislative Assembly ousted Delvalle in a move orchestrated by Noriega hours after Delvalle tried to remove him as military chief. Delvalle remains in hiding in Panama.

Accompanying the declaration was a statement by Delvalle and Roderick Esquivel, the vice president ousted with him. In it, they support the call for a government of national reconciliation and outline its objectives.

Local banks were shuttered for a fifth day Monday. Thousands of retired people, unable to cash pension checks, blocked traffic and shouted "Where's my money!"

A U.S. judge extended a freeze on Panamanian government funds in American banks.

The government assured pensioners they would get their money and promised to set up payment centers. The centers were not in operation Monday.

Washington still recognizes Delvalle as Panama's chief executive. The Reagan administration has called for Noriega's ouster since he was indicted in Florida in February on drug trafficking charges.

Noriega, as commander of the 15,000-person Defense Forces, is Panama's de facto ruler.

In Washington, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the Reagan administration was considering economic and trade sanctions against Panama, including withholding monthly payments for the Panama Canal and putting the money into escrow.

About 500 people marched on the U.S. Embassy Monday to denounce U.S. policy on Panama.

Some of the audience chanted, but many appeared uninterested.

Panama Canal Commission spokeswoman Willie Friar denied reports that port authorities were requiring cash payments from ships traveling through the canal. She said the flow of traffic was "completely normal."

At a news conference in a downtown hotel, the opposition set as "our principal objective ... the establishment of a government of national reconciliation that guarantees justice, a state of law, liberty, recon-

Delegates to be chosen
Super Tuesday's aim in South

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

The political primary was invented in 1903. It proved to be a successful method for political parties to select a nominee for the general election.

The "Super Primary" was invented in 1988. Whether it will prove to be a successful adjustment to the presidential primary system remains to be seen.

Today is Super Tuesday, the day when Democrats in 20 states will select National Convention delegates and Republicans will do the same in 17 states. Of those states, 14 are located in the South.

Democratic leaders in southern and border states (a definition designed to include Oklahoma and Missouri) originated the concept of Super Tuesday to launch one candidate into front-runner status during the first half of the primary season. Thus, they gave the South added influence in determining the next president.

Over the last few days, as the candidates have made short airport stops in selected cities and sent television commercials everywhere else, two outcomes are becoming almost certain.

First, Super Tuesday will not decide the Democratic front-runner — its original purpose. Instead, it may only narrow the focus of the race to four candidates: Gov. Michael Dukakis, Rep. Richard Gephardt, Sen. Albert Gore and the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

Secondly, it will designate Vice President George Bush as the clear Republican front-runner. After his win with 48 percent of the vote in Saturday's South Carolina primary, he is expected to win about 500 of the 803 Republican Super Tuesday delegates.

Should Bush be more successful than expected, he could put the other realistic hopefuls (Sen. Robert Dole and the Rev. Pat Robertson) in a situation where neither of them could gain the nomination on their own. They could only join their forces to try to keep Bush from winning the nomination on the first ballot at the National Convention.

Here is a list of the candidates, their standings going into Super Tuesday, and the latest predictions of what their standings will be thereafter:

■ Michael Dukakis — The Governor of Massachusetts comes into Super Tuesday as the Democratic front-runner, with wins in New Hampshire, Vermont, Minnesota and Maine. He is counting on victories in his home state of Massachusetts, and in Rhode Island, Maryland and Washington state. Current polls place Dukakis as the favorite in Texas and Florida — which combined select 24 percent of Super Tuesday delegates.

His main contention is his experience. In a democratic debate he claimed to be the only candidate to ever prepare a budget or select a cabinet.

■ Richard Gephardt — The

Admissions bill fails in House

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — After a two and a half hour debate, the House on Monday failed to approve a bill that would have ended the state's longstanding policy of open admissions to all state universities.

House members voted, 43-80, against the bill, sponsored by Rep. Denise Apt, R-Iola. Apt said she would not try to get the bill debated again this session.

Currently, the six state Board of Regents universities must admit all graduates of Kansas high schools. The universities can set admissions requirements for out-of-state students.

Under Apt's bill, the universities would have been required to admit only those Kansas high school graduates who had passed a certain set of classes while in high school.

"When we send a student not prepared to college, we set them up for failure," Apt said.

However, Rep. Gary Blumenthal, D-Merriam, said the bill would limit some young Kansans' opportunities to go to college.

"If we are so concerned about the products that come out of our Kansas high schools, why aren't we strengthening the K through 12 programs," Blumenthal asked.

Beer popular during elections

NAIROBI, Kenya — Election campaigning is causing some beer lovers in Kenya to run short of their favorite brew as politicians try to woo voters with free rounds, an official of Kenya Breweries Limited said Monday.

The result, according to bar and restaurant owners across the country, is that they aren't getting enough beer to satisfy customer demand.

Many politicians vying for Parliamentary seats and civic posts in the March 21 election have been buying beer for would-be supporters.

Peter Burugu, transport and sales director for the privately-owned Kenya Breweries, said the company Saturday released 500,000 crates of beer for distribution throughout the country. Each crate holds 24 bottles.

"Normally this is enough but it proved inadequate during this period of the year and the 1988 political campaigns," he said.

Donations help frostbitten girl

GARY, Ind. — More than $120,000 has been donated to help Darlwin Carlisle, the 9-year-old girl who lost her lower legs to frostbite.

Ganier Bank officials and the Lake County Welfare Department will handle Carlisle's trust fund for the rest of her life.

Carlisle, who was found abandoned Jan. 17 in a dirty, unheated apartment, may be out of the hospital soon and a custody decision may be made within a few weeks.

L.T. Proctor, the senior manager of the bank's trust department, said Carlisle or her guardian will ask the bank's trust officer for money needed, and the department, not Carlisle or her guardian, will have the final say.

Proctor said there usually are few disagreements about spending the money in trust funds of this type.

Mecham trial continues

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Arizona's top police official testified at Gov. Evan Mecham's impeachment trial Monday that he realized almost immediately Mecham had committed a crime in ordering the official to not cooperate in an investigation of an alleged death threat.

"I was in shock over what he was saying, taken aback, speechless," said Col. Ralph Milstead, director of the state Department of Public Safety.

Milstead quoted Mecham as angrily telling him: "I don't want you to help the attorney general hang me. Don't tell him anything."

12-year-old dies in dishwasher

GREEN BAY, Wis. — The death of a 12-year-old boy whose nude body was found in his family's portable dishwasher has been ruled accidental, authorities said Monday.

Brown County Coroner Genie Williams has not officially ruled on a cause of death, but Cmdr. David Zasada said initial indications are that Michael Conard "very probably died of a lack of oxygen prior to the hot water" beginning to circulate in the machine a week ago.

The boy, who was 4-foot-10 and weighed about 90 pounds, apparently used the soap dispenser inside the door to pull the door shut, Zasada said. There is no release mechanism inside the machine, he said.

The boy took off his clothes and watch before climbing in machine, apparently to see how it worked, Zasada said.

Suicide was ruled out because there was no note and friends, family and teachers indicated the boy was well-adjusted and happy, Zasada said.

Billy Carter beats alcoholism

LOS ANGELES — Billy Carter, brother of the 39th president and a one-time beer guzzler, is singing the praises of sobriety.

In town recently to tout a new CareUnit Behavioral Center, the Plains, Ga., resident said the attention given him during his brother Jimmy's presidency drove him to the bottle.

"The press made me something I really wasn't and I tried to live up to what they made me. It was kind of hard," Carter said.

Carter, 50, checked himself into the alcohol rehabilitation program in 1979 and has been dry since.

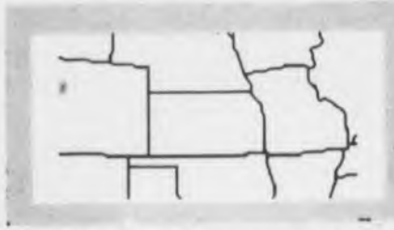
Carter also is battling pancreatic cancer. About five months after a doctor said Carter's prognosis was poor, he reportedly is doing well with an experimental treatment with platinum.

Teenager killed by train

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — A 15-year-old girl who was acting out a scene from the movie "Stand By Me" was struck and killed when she misjudged the speed of an oncoming train and stepped into its path, authorities said Monday.

The accident Sunday in suburban Fairport occurred behind the American National Can Co., said Fairport Police Chief Joseph D. Picciotti.

Kimberly Anne Strassner and three friends were singing the movie's title song and recreating the scenes in which four boys artfully dodge trains, Picciotti said.



"They actually heard the engineer (whistle) and felt the rumble of the track," said Picciotti, who interviewed one of the friends Monday. "The victim for some unknown reason challenged the train and lost."

The 105-car Conrail train was heading east when the conductor spotted the youths and blew a caution whistle, Monroe County sheriff's deputies said.

Strassner and her girlfriend were standing between two sets of tracks as the train approached. At the last moment, she leaped into the train's path and was struck and thrown 50 feet, Picciotti said.

Strassner's mother, Patricia Sampson, said "Stand By Me" was her daughter's favorite movie.

"She watched it over and over again. And she had a crush on the actor. She bought the video and she went to any friend who had a VCR and watched it," her mother said.

Baby drowns in backyard pond

ELKHART, Kan. — A baby drowned after she slipped and fell into a fish pond behind her parents' home, officials said.

Justine Marie Wadlington, aged 14 months, was knocked unconscious as she fell into the pond containing about two feet of water, said Elkhart Police Chief Loren Youngers. Elkhart is a southwest Kansas town with a population of 2,200 residents.

Youngers said the child's parents, Sid and Wincy Wadlington of Elkhart, found the body.

Spanking popular in Missouri

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Missouri schools mete out more corporal punishment to students than all but eight states, according to U.S. Department of Education statistics.

Statistics for 1986 indicate about 4.1 percent of Missouri children in public, private and parochial schools were struck by faculty, compared with about 2.7 percent nationally.

The national figures also indicate that black children are more than twice as likely to be struck, 5.2 percent, as white children, 2.3 percent.

Irwin A. Hyman, director of the National Center for the Study of Corporal Punishment and Alternatives in the Schools, said poorer children also were four times as likely to be struck as affluent children.

Corporal punishment is legal in 41 states, including Kansas and Missouri. The Education Department ranked only the top 10 states in the number of occurrences. Missouri was the only non-Southern state listed.

Nancy Berla, a staff member of the National Committee for Citizens in Education, said her group got more calls on corporal punishment or in-school abuse in Missouri than from other states.

Future uncertain for 62-year-old Van Zile

Staff/Rob Squires

The dining area of the empty Van Zile Hall is cluttered with pieces of plaster which have fallen from the ceiling. The hall was originally closed in 1984 for renovation, but the $1.5 million cost of the project was determined to be too high and the renovation was never completed.

Officials considering renovation; campus residents may pay price

By Paul Branson
Collegian Reporter

The future of Van Zile Hall is once again being discussed by University administrators who are considering reopening the hall that has been closed since 1984.

The hall was originally closed for renovation, but because the projected cost was so high, Thomas Frith, director of the Department of Housing, decided against the $1.5 million renovation. The hall houses 160 students.

Former University President Duane Acker gave Van Zile to the Department of Continuing Education with the intent that the department would refurbish it and use it as temporary housing for evening and weekend students and as a child care center. Funds for those purposes, however, were never raised.

George Miller, vice president for administration and finance, said that before anything is done with Van Zile, a feasibility study would have to be done to determine whether the Department of Housing needs the building.

Frith said his department is conducting such a study, but the need for Van Zile currently does not exist.

"I'd say that we're at about 93 percent capacity in the residence halls," Frith said.

Robert Felde, assistant director of housing, said he thinks the need for Van Zile may be created within the next five years.

"The forecast I've seen says that enrollment will continue to increase," Felde said. "If this is true, we would be able to fill the space offered in Van Zile."

Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said: "As our retention and enrollment increases in the next five years, we'll need Van Zile to house the overflow."

Krause said his office began looking into renovating Van Zile when they recognized the possible need for its space and received suggestions on what to do with the historical building.

When it was built in 1926, Van Zile cost the state $175,000. At that time, it housed 130 women on a cooperative plan. Women in the hall worked within the hall for their room and board.

Felde said that the currently proposed renovation would cost between $2 million and $3 million. It would take approximately six months to complete.

Funding for the renovation would be raised by increasing residence hall fees by about $80 to $100 per student per year.

The renovation would include the installation of new plumbing, wiring, air conditioning and heating systems in the hall.

In addition, cosmetic improvements would need to be made and the building must be brought in line with present fire codes.

"We need to install smoke detectors and double-walled doors to meet these codes," Frith said. "The building is structurally sound; it's just tired.

"There was a rumor that part of the foundation had caved in, but this is not true, although we do have a problem with it leaking."

Another factor to be considered about the renovation, Felde said, is that a residence hall the size of Van Zile tends to put a drain on housing funds.

"A hall that small usually doesn't meet its operating costs with revenue," Felde said.

Edwards Hall, he said, is an example of a building that houses too few students to meet its operating costs.

"As I look at it now, it is too great an expense for the return," Frith said.

He said housing was looking at several options for Van Zile, including:

- using the building as a conventional hall with two students per room and a common bathroom on each wing;
- making the rooms into suites in which two rooms are connected by a bathroom;
- making the majority of the rooms single with a communal bathroom.

Felde said there may be a demand for the suites and single rooms, since there was already an abundance of conventional residence halls on campus.

"Right now we're doing a program analysis," Krause said. "We really can't make a decision (on whether or not to go ahead with the renovation) until after we get the plans back from the architect."

Frith said that he is looking for student input in the decision.

"What I'm looking for now is student input. We've gone through the association of residence halls and the hall presidents to try to get it, but I'd like to have more," he said.

Kelli Nichols, housing programmer, said that students' reactions seem mixed.

"The people over in Boyd and Putnam want to see Van Zile back. And most of the other residents agree that the hall should be renovated because of its historical value, but they don't want to see their housing bills increase $100," she said.

"I like the idea," said Doug Annis, sophomore in electrical engineering. "I live in Putnam, and I think if they don't do something with it they'll end up tearing it down."

Larry Hackleman, sophomore in architectural engineering and a resident of Haymaker Hall, agrees.

"I think they should open it back up at any cost. It's an incredible building and it's terrible that it's closed," Hackleman said. "I'd be the first one in line (to live there) if they opened it back up."

Jeff Priddle, sophomore in architectural engineering, isn't as enthused about the project.

"Sure it's got a lot of historical value, but if they jack our bills up another hundred dollars, I'd be able to live off campus cheaper. Right now housing has a tough offer to beat," he said.

Former residents miss hall's family atmosphere

By Paul Branson
Collegian Reporter

In Van Zile Hall's 62 years of history, the structure has gone from being a bustling K-State hallmark to a vacant building awaiting renovation.

When Van Zile opened in the fall of 1926, it was the only residence hall in Kansas.

It was planned and constructed during the administration of President William Jardine, who recognized the need for on-campus living quarters in 1922 and asked the Kansas Legislature to appropriate funds for that purpose.

The Legislature acted on Jardine's request and appropriated $200,000 for the building of Van Zile.

In a paper written in 1974 about the history of K-State residence halls, A. Thornton Edwards, former director of housing from 1946 to 1974, said that at the time of construction, many students lived in the University greenhouse, dairy barn and other agriculture-related buildings. These students worked where they lived in return for room and board.

The hall was named for Mary Pierce Van Zile, who served as K-State's dean of women from 1908 to 1940.

It was opened to accommodate female students at K-State and had room for 150. Many of them worked in the hall to help pay their housing expenses.

In 1926, 4,083 students were enrolled at K-State. About 4 percent of them lived on campus.

Van Zile continued to be an all-women's dormitory until it was closed in 1967 for renovation. When it was re-opened in the fall of 1968, it provided co-educational housing.

Chuck Shoemaker, a junior in architecture and a former resident of Van Zile, would like to see the hall reopened.

"The hall was unique. It was one of the smallest halls on campus, and the halls (within the building) were straight. You could see from one end of the building to the other," Shoemaker said.

"If you wanted to see if somebody was home, you just yelled. This and the fact that it was coed, really led to residents being able to call Van Zile 'home'. That's not something all residents can say about their halls," Shoemaker said.

D.J. Jorgensen, another former resident of Van Zile, agrees with Shoemaker.

"The way the place is laid out really lent itself to a family type of atmosphere," Jorgensen said. "A lot of us had brothers or sisters who lived in the dorm, but we also thought our neighbors were family too."

Shoemaker said the placement of Van Zile made it a prominent building on campus. "It's right in the middle of things, up on the hill. You can't help but be impressed by it," he said. "I think this made it a leader on campus. We always had something going on."

Civil rights supporters see through Reagan fog

A vote by the U.S. House Wednesday, approving a civil rights bill in the face of a promised veto by President Reagan, goes a long way toward re-establishing an effective method for promoting greater equality in American society.

The bill, called the Civil Rights Restoration Act, requires an institution receiving federal funds to practice non-discrimination in every program the institution operates. This was the standard until 1984, when the Supreme Court ruled in a case brought by Grove City College of Pennsylvania that only the specific program receiving the federal money had to practice non-discrimination, not the entire institution.

Since 1984, the Reagan administration has used that Supreme Court decision to justify regulations limiting the applicability of federal non-discrimination statutes in colleges as well as other institutions which are given federal subsidies.

Under the Grove decision, for example, it would have been possible for K-State to discriminate against individuals applying for teaching faculty positions without losing federal aid for students. This has not been the case at K-State, but other institutions may have practiced discrimination knowing the federal government would not threaten a withdrawal of necessary funds.

The potential for such discrimination will be removed when the bill becomes law. Even though President Reagan has promised to veto the Restoration Act, supporters of the bill pointed out he made a similar threat about legislation creating a federal holiday honoring Martin Luther King Jr., only to sign the King holiday bill after its passage by Congress.

And the size of the majorities voting for the Restoration Act in both the Senate and House should give the president pause before he acts to veto the bill. In the House alone, large numbers of Republicans ignored Reagan and the House Republican leadership to vote with Democrats in support of the bill.

Republicans in the Senate did the same when they voted for the bill earlier this year. Enough voted against the president in both houses to guarantee a veto will be overidden.

As America moves to select a new president, it is apparent that Reagan's influence is waning. And the overwhelming adoption of the Civil Rights Restoration Act proves the nation is rejecting the foul values his administration has promoted.

Communications center to benefit entire state

After receiving approval from the administration, K-State's $6 million communications center has cleared all the hurdles in the way of becoming a reality.

The center will be well worth the cost. It will provide K-State students with quality television production equipment and laboratories.

It will also strengthen the University's land-grant commitment by allowing K-State to offer students across the state courses ranging from elementary to graduate levels.

This will not only benefit students who cannot travel to Manhattan but also business people who cannot take a semester off of work to attend K-State.

Another strength of the communications center is it can be utilized by all the regents schools. In times of tight budgets, it is wise to share each school's assets.

K-State, regent schools and the state of Kansas have waited a long time for the facility, which will be located north of Umberger Hall. They have begged for money from the regents and Legislature, they competed for federal grants, and they have researched where the best place to build it would be.

The communications center will add not only to the University, but also to all the regents school and the entire state.

Free speech prevails despite poor planning

It's finally over.

It, of course, is the free-speech forum at the University of Kansas involving members of the Ku Klux Klan. And although free speech was ultimately honored, it was by no means sent up in a blaze of glory.

By nearly everyone's estimation, the event was poorly organized. A limited number of people were allowed into 2,000-seat Hoch Auditorium, and some 1,500 were left outside chanting, "We want in."

However, their chants were in vain and eventually gave way to the more realistic — and slightly more sarcastic — shouts of "Nice public forum." Appropriately, a vocal group of anti-Klan members protested the Klan's visit and encouraged others to "Just say no" to hearing the KKK speak.

Other things — including Jesse Jackson supporters who conveniently saw an opportunity to brazenly promote their candidate, and a saturation of media — made the whole event somewhat of a circus.

But free speech was honored, protests were generally peaceful and the KKK certainly has a much larger number of people sickened by its vile message now than it did Monday morning.

Poor, know thy place

Senator's views cold, calculated

Commentary

CHRIS KIPPES
Collegian Columnist

During Student Senate's debate over the KSU Childcare Cooperative Thursday night, Juli Kramer, student senator from the College of Business Administration, made the following remark: "I have a real problem with low-income students looking for high-quality care. It's like being poor and wanting a Porsche." The co-op lost the battle for a student support fee during the early hours of Friday morning. The time-consuming parliamentarian war of attrition ended at 2 a.m., and the heartless logic of Kramer won the day.

The troubling thing about Kramer's simile is that it was not spoken with the brazen callousness that one would have expected. Kramer's comment should have been offered up like a spear being stuck in the side of a helpless animal. When Kramer said, "It's like being poor and wanting a Porsche," her words should have had a punch of resentment behind them; they should have been spoken with emotion and with feeling. Words of utter hard-heartedness used to be spoken this way; in the past, when a person had absolutely no compassion for someone, it used to be obvious.

However, scornful words like Kramer's Thursday-night analogy are no longer spoken with the feeling of an attack. The forum of ideas has been reduced to cold, calm, rational calculation, and hate no longer has a steamy heat behind it but is, instead, pulled-out of the dark, cold chasm of a heartless rationale.

It seemed absolutely rational to Kramer that the desiring of high-quality care when one has no money is an unnatural contempt for the privilege of wealth. From Kramer's use of the Porsche analogy, it is obvious that, to her, it is a totally absurd proposition that a poor person might want something that he or she cannot afford. To Kramer, a poor person does not even have the right to want; to think that a poor person might deserve something would be perverse, indeed. "It's like being poor and wanting a Porsche." It would have saved me a lot of time analyzing if Kramer would just have said, "Poor person ... know thy place!" It is obvious that this is what she meant.

So Kramer's opinion was a representation of the majority view. The vote was 27 against, 22 in favor. Senate has decided that each person should earn the services he or she receives, and I suppose that since my tuition was only $665.65 this semester, K-State is only obligated to give me a third-rate education. God knows, I have no right to expect Ivy League when I can only afford public high school.

From Senate's Thursday-night example, it is obvious that America's hell-bent consumerism is taking its toll on morality. Since becoming the world's leading capitalist nation, America has been a caste society of have's and have not's. But with the advent of Yuppies, deficit spending and unabashed consumption, America has slipped even further down the ladder of good taste and acquired a general mind-set about what is real and what is not, what is right and what is wrong. Kramer is the embodiment of the new American rationale: America is no longer simply a nation of have's and have not's but is now a nation of the deserving and undeserving. To deserve or not to deserve — selfishness intensifies.

A person who does not have the money for a Porsche cannot have a Porsche, does not deserve a Porsche, should not want a Porsche, Kramer says. Yet a person who has little money may actually deserve more than a wealthy person. How many student Porsche owners on K-State's campus actually earned the money for their high-class car? Why do the instructors at the co-op deserve to earn salaries below the poverty level of the United States? One of those two groups — i.e., the student Porsche owners and the co-op instructors — works a lot; the other works little, if at all. Kramer has a "real problem with low-income students looking for high-quality care." How far does Kramer's callous stand extend?

Interpreting Kramer's remark, it seems that low-income families only deserve low-quality care for their children. Do these children also deserve only low-quality food and, when they are older, only a low-quality education? Kramer makes it very clear that when a child from a low-income family is old enough to drive, he does not deserve a Porsche ... he was born poor. And when that poor child's rich friend lays a track of burnt rubber in front of the house as he drives his new Porsche to Harvard, that poor child had better check himself, bite his lip, and stifle any and all jealousy. He was born poor.

The co-op fee did not pass. It is more important to the student senators to up the endowments of established line items like the powerless and costly Associated Students of Kansas. The child holding the sign which reads "Save my school" has just got to understand that you don't deserve anything in life unless you are born with it.

Consider Van Zile

Editor,

Soon important decisions will be made about the future of Van Zile Hall. The question is: Will housing renovate it and open it again as a dorm, or shall it sit empty and in all probability be torn down for a parking lot?

For 60 years, Van Zile was home for approximately 150 students a year. Since the 1960s it was a coed dorm. The small size and the character of the building created a warm, open family atmosphere. It was a place where, along with 149 others, a just-out-of-high-school kid could make the transition to adulthood a little easier. With the not-too-big lobby with its fireplace, the stone front steps, the music room, tiny library, dining/ballroom and the sun deck wall, Van Zile is in many ways the perfect home for an extended family of 150 brothers and sisters.

The atmosphere in this small dorm fostered commitment and friendship between the residents. Through the residents, this attitude was passed on to the rest of the campus. Through Van Zile's participation in campus activities such as intramurals, Open House, Spring Fling and the canoe race to the University of Kansas, Van Zile had a major impact on K-State, especially Boyd and Putnam halls. Without Van Zile, K-State loses.

To be realistic, one cannot expect Van Zile to open as it was. It will lose its kitchen, and fire doors will be installed. It needs renovating. I have seen some of the figures for financing the renovation, and it is clear there are several good options available. A 20-year loan for $2 million at 7.5 percent interest spread across all housing residents would only raise the yearly total housing fee by $50 per student. This is just one possibility.

As of now, Van Zile's future is positive. The people making the decisions appear to favor its reopening as a dorm. We as a student body need to be aware of and kept current on Van Zile's status. The Collegian needs to do a story on it — why is it empty? Now Van Zile sits; it is the perfect home, not the perfect parking lot.

Spring break tragedy

Parties need not end in death

Commentary

EDEE DALKE
Guest Columnist

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — "I looked over the balcony and saw that it was Keith, so I ran down the stairs. I was crying and blood was everywhere. I kept yelling, 'Keith, Keith.' I wanted him to be alive. I wanted a chance to say goodbye."

The words of a brother were quoted in the morning paper — the morning after.

A 1987 spring break party ended in tragedy. Keith Edwards, 21, had tumbled from a fourth-floor balcony after attempting to crawl from one balcony to another.

"What a senseless way to die," the brother continued. "Keith wasn't the daredevil type. All he was trying to do was climb over to talk to this girl."

Deaths like Edwards' have become a dark undercurrent to spring break. Lives ending in statistics. Every year, the figure changes. Every year, newspapers report the tragedies.

Daytona Beach records, starting from 1966, report 16 students have fallen and died, and even more have been left with serious injuries. In just the past four years, 31 people have fallen from hotel balconies in Daytona Beach; six died. Of these statistics, the average fall is four stories; 30 of the 31 cases involved alcohol; there were 28 males and three females; and ages ranged from 18 to 22. They have represented schools from Michigan, Illinois, Arizona, New Jersey, Georgia, Nebraska, Ohio, Wisconsin, and even the community college in Daytona Beach. It has affected students and families nationwide.

As a 1983 graduate of K-State, I recall my own spring break memories clearly. OK, some aren't all that clear, but with memories from South Padre Island, Texas, to Fort Lauderdale, Fla., I consider myself a spring break enthusiast. I fully endorse spring break as an important — no vital — aspect to the college experience.

I'll admit, spring break looks different when you live here. "Breakers" move in and out of town in the course of a week, uncovering all that lies in their path. But for locals, spring break lasts 10 weeks. That's 10 weeks of more energy than the race cars at the Daytona International Speedway.

Living in Daytona Beach, I hear conversations among residents during spring break that are often full of dismay: "You wouldn't believe what those kids were doing...."

Oh, I believe it.

But what's hard to believe is the news, year after year, of another falling accident at a hotel just down the street. Sadly enough, response to the deaths by the students have been only a pause — and then the party continues. Many feel that it's not a possibility for themselves. Many think that the victims are crazy daredevils — the other guy. But imagine knowing that guy; imagine not returing with someone you arrived with.

A newspaper article quoted a 1985 victim's mother, who spoke of the attitudes: "Losing a child is a pain that is profound and unrelenting. There's a cavalier attitude toward these deaths. People think the kids deserve what they get," she said. "We encourage the free and easy dispensing of alcohol. Then when tragedy happens, people say, 'What a drunken bum.'

"He was a young man of strong faith, goal- and family- oriented," she continued. "If it can happen to this kid from this kind of family, it can happen to anyone."

"What a senseless way to die. Keith wasn't the daredevil type. All he was trying to do was climb over to talk to this girl."

Daytona Beach, with high-rise hotels that line the oceanfront, has been marred with these tragedies. But other spring break "capitals" have had balcony falls as well as other accidents, most alcohol-related. All cities share the concern for safety.

Daytona Beach has taken a firm stand. Last year, there was a significant change in the state law. It allowed the hotel management, not just a police officer, to detain a student acting in a life-threatening manner. The law proved beneficial: 72 people were arrested last year. And yes, dangle from a balcony and they will arrest you faster than you can say "wet T-shirt contest" again this year.

One major hotel implements its own balcony-safety plan by sealing balconies and windows. Most hotels require guests to sign a "code of ethical conduct." The safety measures the police and hotels endorse in our city are not to damper fun.

If fun is what you seek, Daytona Beach is expecting the biggest spring break crowd ever. Tour companies, as well as hotels, are showing record reservations. A projected 400,000 students will pass through in February, March and April. That's like the entire city of Cincinnati coming to your town on vacation.

Along with record crowds, special events include: The International Hawaiian Tropic Pageant hosted by Lorenzo Lamas, and the National College Sports Festival.

Promotions include: College Expo, Expo America — an exhibit of products that cater to the college consumer and a Guiness Book world record attempt for the "world's largest human logo," creating an aerial view of the Playboy bunny on the beach.

Concerts include: Expose, Squeeze, Richard Marx, Eddie Money, Georgia Sattelites, Linda Ronstadt and Whitesnake. And other activities include: MTV filming live, Spring Break Comedy Fest '88 and, of course, sun, surf and suds.

With so much to do, why are there balcony accidents? One thing that all the accidents have in common is that it was a student attempting to have a good time. But many do not realize the accidents have been falls, not jumps. Most have been attempts to cross to surrounding balconies by climbing, side jumping or a loss of balance while risking a rail maneuver. Alcohol has been linked to most cases.

If you plan on coming here or to any other spring break city, remember: If you think the next balcony looks so close ... and there's a better party over there ... and you think it might impress someone ... and you saw this movie "Tarzan" once and....

Spring Break is a great chance to discover "How much fun is too much fun?" But realize you are responsible not only for yourself but those you arrived with. These accidents have been exactly that — accidents. A weak amount of judgment, a slip, a tumble, a fall....

And the morning after, there is no chance to say good-bye.

On excellence

Editor,

When I think of excellence, a cauldron called Parris Island comes to mind. During such thought, the season in Kansas, even on cool days, turns tropical for me. Parris Island was the least discriminating of schools.

This semester, I have applied what I had learned on the island to the redesign of the Chemistry I laboratories. Coupling of the techniques I learned on the island with Elliot W. Eisner's work on curriculum development at Stanford University produced a great change in the attitude of the students and teaching assistants in Chem I. Although it is only four weeks into the semester, the enthusiasm is phenomenal.

The kids are actually required to read and write, and the TAs are actually required to teach. I had expected opposition to a demanding program, but what I have found is hunger and pride. Sure, we have a lot more work to do, but the kids are much more hungry and curious about chemistry than in the past.

The TAs are instructed to demand a 120 percent effort from the students (and to expect no less) in writing a professional lab report. I now see TAs with pride in their teaching. They know they are making a difference with these students.

We are not teaching these kids to survive. They can survive by mopping floors at Dillard's or by working at Shop Quik. We are teaching them to grow and go beyond their full potential — beyond a margin of excellence.

We want them to run and never stop their curiosity for chemistry. We want the horizon to be their finish line.

Oh yeah, a small aside. You may find excellence wherever you seek it: in the heart, on the farms, down the block, in the labs in King Hall.

Study co-op

Editor,

This letter is in response to the article on Friday reporting Student Senate's rejection of a bill that would have established a fee to support the KSU Childcare Cooperative. I understand the senators' reluctance to levy a fee which would benefit only approximately 1 percent of the student population. However, I am strongly offended by a statement made by Juli Kramer, suggesting that quality child care is a luxury item like a Porsche. This statement is indicative of Ms. Kramer's ignorance of preschool children's need for a quality educational and social environment. I hope that her insensitive remark is not indicative of a pervasive attitude throughout the body of students we have entrusted with making decisions about the quality of this University.

The preschool period is a critical time in a child's cognitive, social and physical development. The experiences a child has during this period are essential in creating a base upon which his or her entire life experience will be structured. Children are not objects; they are dynamic, interactive individuals. It is absurd to suggest that students should place their children into a less than optimum environment simply because they have chosen to further their own educations.

A university is to be a place of learning, teaching and research. It seems ironic to suggest that Kansas State University has a mission to offer optimum educational experiences to students, while denying the needs of preschool children for similar opportunities.

I hope that Ms. Kramer and other student senators will take a moment to reflect on the fact that they are in no way paying what it actually costs to provide them with the education they are receiving. Should they also be denied access to a quality educational environment because they may not be able to afford to pay the actual costs?

Twisted words

Editor,

This letter is in response to the article on Friday about the KSU Childcare Cooperative's funding being denied. I am one senator who voted against it, and I am the one quoted as an uncaring individual comparing child care to cars. I feel like it was too easy to take my statements and twist them into something that sounds unhumanitarian, and I'm disappointed that the Collegian didn't fully explain my position — which is that the co-op is too expensive for low-income students and the cost needs to be lowered. After getting several phone calls, I felt it necessary to explain my terminology.

The child care co-op has 11 teachers who have four-year degrees and 13 assistants to teach children who attend. As they have told us many times, they are not babysitters. These teachers are underpaid and are doing a terrific job. My question was only, "Why should students fund an organization that has teachers teaching infants and toddlers, when my personal opinion is that most people don't have their children watched by teachers and taught things that parents don't already teach them until kindergarten?"

I feel that costs could be cut at the co-op so eventually the low-income students who really need low-cost child care can afford it. Evidence was presented during Senate's debate that those in most need of child care can't afford the fees of the co-op. Our help would not increase the chance that these students get in because representatives from the co-op stated that fees may even increase in spite of our help.

I believe the federal government should concentrate on helping social programs, but I don't believe we should take homeless people and put them in condominiums. I wouldn't support everyone paying taxes for condos any more than I would support using money from the entire student body for 162 students to give their children the kind of early childhood education that even my very wealthy friends didn't get. Child care is essential but not to such a degree.

I apologize to those who were offended by the quotes on Friday. I assure you it was a misrepresentation, and in the future I'll be much more careful not to give such tempting statements.

Parenti to give lecture

By The Collegian Staff

Michael Parenti, a guest professor of political science at Howard University, will speak tonight as part of the Lou Douglas lecture series.

Parenti's lecture, "Monopoly Culture and Democratic Struggle," will begin at 7:30 p.m. in Union Forum Hall. A press conference is scheduled for 9:15 a.m. in Union 204.

He received a doctoral degree in political science from Yale University in 1962. He has taught at a number of universities and colleges including State University of New York, Stony Brook, the University of Vermont, and Sarah Lawrence College.

He is the author of numerous books and has written articles which have appeared in such publications as the Nation, the Progressive, Political Affairs and Harvard International Review.

Parenti has received research grants from the Social Science Research Council, the Ford Foundation, the Society for the Scientific Study of Religion and various universities. Parenti has served on the advisory boards of Politics and Society and New Political Science.

In discussion of current issues or ideas from his published works, he has appeared on numerous radio and television talk shows.

Also, he has lectured widely on college campuses in addition to groups across the country. Among the topics he has spoken on are: U.S. foreign policy; democracy, revolution and free speech; democracy and capitalism; and the functions of fascism.

Man charged with murder in Emporia church slaying

By The Associated Press

EMPORIA — A former Emporia State University student who opened fire on parishoners at a church service had been spurned by a woman who used to belong to the congregation, a church member said Monday.

Cheun-phon Ji was charged Monday with one count of first-degree murder in the death of Thomas G. DeWeese, a 47-year-old farmer from rural Americus.

Ji, 29, was also charged with six counts of attempted first-degree murder involving four other people who were wounded and two who were shot at during services Sunday at Calvary Baptist Church..

Ji is a native of Taiwan who left Emporia after earning a master's in business administration in December 1984. He apparently had been living most recently in California, and arrived back in town shortly before the shootings.

Magistrate Judge Francis Towle set bond at $1 million, and appointed Emporia attorney Irvin Shaw to represent Ji. A preliminary hearing was scheduled for March 31.

As Ji was being brought to the courthouse past a group of waiting reporters and photographers, he said, "Justice, revenge" when asked by a careraman why he had done it.

Ji, wearing an orange jump suit given to prisoners, was handcuffed as police escorted him from the county jail to the court house a block away. The handcuffs were removed in court after an attorney was appointed to represent him.

Renita Rothe, 34, a member of the congregation, said Ji had attended Bible classes in her home in 1983 or 1984 with a woman he hoped to marry.

She said the woman rejected his proposal and that Ji became "very bitter about the whole thing." She said the woman, whom she declined to identify, still lives in Emporia.

Rothe said the woman had met Ji through her work and invited him to attend the weekly Bible classes.

"She just wanted to share the Lord with him," she said. "But we knew he was different. He had a different kind of religion, you know, Buddha and all that."

Rothe said Ji attended only two classes, and rarely spoke during them.

She said he eventually asked the woman to marry him and return to Taiwan so she could take care of his parents.

"She wasn't interested in him in that way," she said.

She said that after the woman married someone else about two years ago, Ji was "really upset."

"For him to harbor that feeling for so many years, that's amazing," she said.

Investigators were seeking out people who knew Ji when he lived in Emporia as they tried to find a motive.

Police Chief Larry Blomenkamp said Ji apparently entered the United States in 1982 and enrolled at Emporia State University the following spring. Kim Maxwell, director of university relations, said Ji listed an address in Hacienda Heights, Calif.

British soldiers kill three men in Gibraltar shooting Monday

By The Associated Press

GIBRALTAR — British soldiers shot three IRA members dead, and Britain said Monday that the killings averted a "dreadful terrorist act" in its fortress colony on the southern coast of Spain.

Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe said in London the soldiers opened fire Sunday after the three unarmed IRA members parked a white Renault-5 with Spanish license plates near The Convent, the official residence of the governor. He said the soldiers acted on a tip from Spanish police.

Police said they were searching Gibraltar and adjacent Spanish territory for a car believed connected with a bomb attack the Irish Republican Army allegedly planned at the governor's residence during the ceremonial changing of the guard, which hundreds of spectators attend.

Members of the Royal Anglian Regiment, just transferred from duty in Northern Ireland, were scheduled to participate in the ceremony Tuesday. The IRA is fighting a guerrilla war to drive the British from Northern Ireland.

The two men and a woman were shot by men described by witnesses as wearing jeans and speaking with British accents.

The British soldiers were believed to be members of the Special Air Services, or SAS, an elite undercover unit that has been involved in previous actions against the IRA.

Sgt. George Field of the 220-man Gibraltar police force said officers were looking for a Ford automobile but did not believe it contained explosives.

The independent Spanish news agency Europa Press quoted police in Madrid, however, as saying the car might contain explosives intended for an attack Tuesday.

Jackie says 'yes' to Jason

Marriage proposal successful

By Janet Swanson
Campus Editor

She said yes.

Yes — even though Jason Bingham's proposal of marriage to Jackie Hull with a full-page advertisement in Thursday's Collegian was anything but traditional.

But, then again, Hull says that there is very little about Bingham that is traditional.

"He's not the usual kind of guy. But he's a real romantic," she said.

Bingham and Hull, both juniors in marketing, have set Aug. 5, 1989, as their wedding date.

Bingham said he wanted his proposal to be something different — something imaginative.

"I just wanted to do something original. This is something we can get out 20 years from now and look at," he said.

The couple, who met in a class during their freshman year, discussed marriage about a month ago, Bingham said. However, he arranged the ad and his proposal to coincide with the arrival of the ring he ordered for Hull.

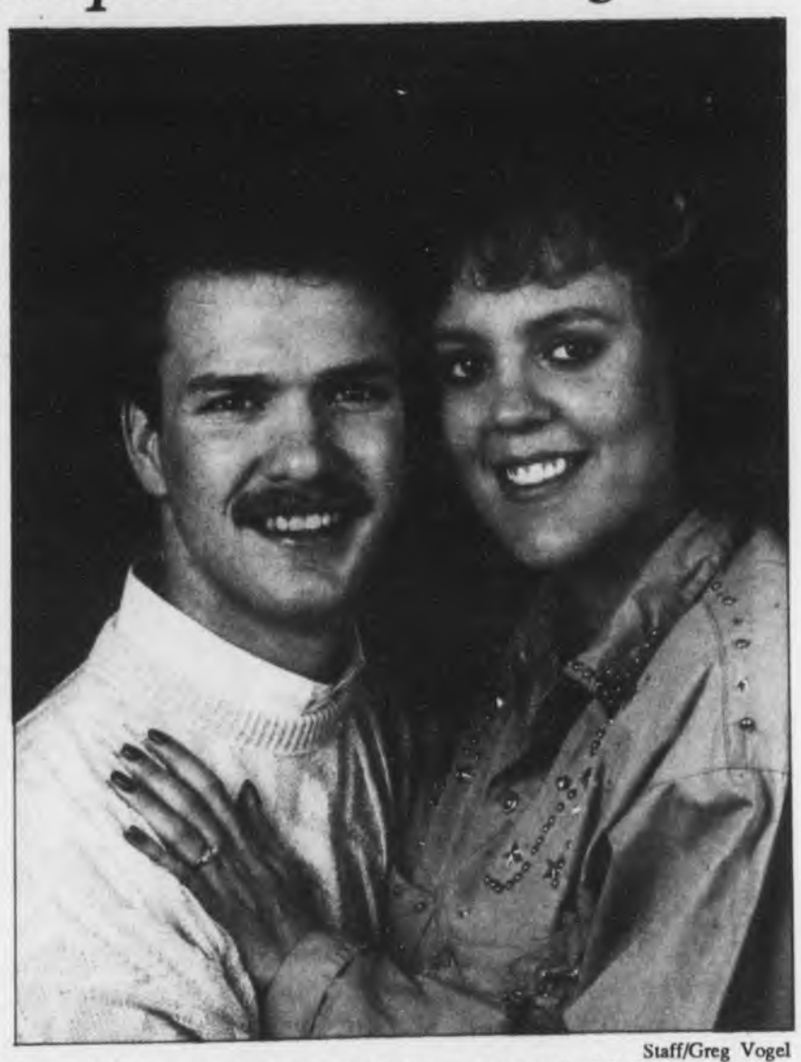
"She didn't have any idea what was going on," Bingham said.

Hull said one of her friends stopped by her house about 11 a.m. Thursday with a copy of the paper. But, she said, her friend hadn't noticed the ad.

"I just picked it up and started looking through it," Hull said. "When I saw it (the ad) ... well, it was great."

Despite her excitement, Hull said she had to go to classes that afternoon to take a test.

"It was a little hard to study," she said. "But I was able to forget it for awhile and go ahead and take the test.



"When I was in class, I heard people talking about the ad. It was kind of strange to hear them talking about it. A few of them asked if it was for me — I told them it was."

While Hull was in class, Bingham said he had taken the afternoon off from work to move into the second stage of his plan.

He had purchased, in addition to the ad, two dozen red roses, a bottle of champagne and Hull's engagement ring.

"I had about 70 papers that formed an aisle leading from the door to her table. There, I had the ring, still in the box with a lace bow, and the champagne on ice. On either side of that, I had a vase of the flowers and an ad," he said. "Then I turned the lights off, sat there and waited."

When Hull got home from her class, she said a copy of the ad was taped to the door and Bingham's car was out front.

Staff/Greg Vogel

Jason Bingham, junior in marketing, proposed to Jackie Hull, junior in marketing, with a full-page advertisement in Thursday's Collegian.

"I went inside and turned the lights on. Then, I saw everything. I couldn't believe it. He really went to a lot of work," Hull said.

Although Bingham said he was fairly sure Hull would accept his proposal, he was still nervous.

"I don't know if I was more nervous or excited," he said. "We went out last (Thursday) night to celebrate, and people that I had forgotten that I even knew came up, talked to us and congratulated us."

The couple's parents were pleased, Bingham said.

"Mom's always said I was a romantic," he said.

Hull said her parents were happy for her and that she mailed them a copy of the ad.

The couple will be working together this summer in Salt Lake City for Certified Environmental Management of Salina. Bingham currently works full-time for the company.

"They are training me for a marketing position, so they are having me work in each of the company's divisions," Bingham said.

As part of their internship, Bingham and Hull will be conducting tests on asbestos.

Janelle Dennis, Collegian advertising representative, said she wasn't quite sure what to think when Bingham inquired about purchasing a full-page ad.

"I was really suprised when he came in. I thought he was just kidding," Dennis said.

Ann Foster, office specialist for Student Publications Inc., said that she has worked for Student Publications for 10 years and during that time, she can't remember anyone purchasing a similar ad.

Since Bingham is a student, the cost of the ad was $384.30. The same ad for a business would have cost $544 in cash or $573.30 if it was charged.

"My roommate and her boyfriend wondered how much it cost. I guessed $24," Hull said.

Since the ad ran last week, Dennis said the advertising department has received several calls inquiring about its cost.

Class of '88 establishes league's credibility

Big Eight's magnificent seven 'best in country'

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Call them the "Magnificent Seven" of the Big Eight Conference: K-State's Mitch Richmond; Iowa State's Jeff Grayer and Lafester Rhodes; Kansas' Danny Manning; Missouri's Derrick Chievous; Oklahoma's Harvey Grant; and Colorado's Scott Wilke.

The aforementioned seniors are the top seven scorers in the conference — the cream of the crop. Fourteen seniors are among the league's top 25 scorers. And Big Eight coaches have said there isn't a finer graduating class anywhere.

"Seldom does a league anywhere have five, six or seven seniors with the quality the Big Eight has had this season," K-State coach Lon Kruger said. "The Big Eight has never had it, and very few other conferences have ever had it."

Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs said the conference's senior class could be unbeatable.

"I say pick a Big Eight all-star or all-conference team, and we could take anybody. We'll just use the seniors. We'll play any team in the nation, and we can beat them," Tubbs said.

Nebraska coach Danny Nee said he could start a National Basketball Association franchise with the senior class. Coach Leonard Hamilton of Oklahoma State said the "Magnificent Seven" will have an effect on the Big Eight long after they graduate.

"I think they're the reason so many good, young players are coming into the league right now," he said. "(The seniors) have gotten national recognition as much as any group."

The seniors even resulted in Marty Blake, chief scout for the NBA, scheduling a trip to Kansas City for the Big Eight's postseason tournament for the first time since the early 1980s.

"To be honest, the talent in the league hasn't been enough to make it worth the trip. This year, the Big Eight is loaded with forwards and guards, and guards playing forward," Blake said.

And CBS announcer Billy Packer added, "The Big Eight has the best senior class in the country, and that's how you win."

Though it's difficult to put a monetary value on the seniors' impact on the Big Eight, attendance figures indicate the Class of '88 hasn't done anything to hurt the conference's credibility.

For the ninth consecutive year, the Big Eight has topped the one million mark in attendance. Conference arenas ran at close to 90 percent capacity this season for all games, and more than 90 percent in Big Eight games. Both Kansas and Iowa State have attracted more than one million fans over the past five seasons.

As for the conference tournament, attendance last year set a three-day record of 61,285 fans. This year's tournament, which gets under way Friday, has long been sold out.

Without a doubt, one of the "Magnificent Seven" will be the Big Eight's player of the year. Manning, who was named Monday as a first-team All-American by the United States Basketball Writers' Association and Basketball Weekly, appears to be the front-runner. Richmond was named second team on both lists. Grayer was picked to the second team by Basketball Weekly, and the publication selected Grant to its third team.

Manning, the 6-foot-10 senior forward who is also a candidate for national player of the year honors, was a unanimous choice by the coaches as the player they would choose to build a team around.

Staff/Brad Fanshier

K-State's Mitch Richmond is congratulated by University President Jon Wefald. Richmond is one of the top senior players in the Big Eight and was recognized along with other senior Wildcats prior to Saturday's regular season finale in Ahearn Field House.

"He does so many things well. He's very competitive and makes the players around him better," Kruger said.

"I voted for him last year, will this year and would next year," Nee added. "He's a complete player who makes the players around him better. He'll rebound, shoot, pass, handle the ball and play defense. Great players do it effortlessly, and Danny does that."

Richmond agreed with the Big Eight coaches.

"I think everyone would rate (Manning) No. 1 in the Big Eight," Richmond said. "You can't actually know what he means to Kansas besides scoring. He deals out assists, he grabs rebounds and he's been good for Kansas all the years he's been playing there. I'm a Danny Manning fan."

Some of the seniors will see their final action in Kansas City. Some will go on to showcase their talents in the NCAA's postseason tournament and, possibly, the Final Four. But what will the Big Eight be in '89 without the Class of '88?

"It will be a totally different look in the league next year. No question," Kruger said.

It doesn't mean, though, that the Young Lady Cats 'team of future'

By Chase Clark
Sports Writer

Experience, not wins and losses, was the goal of K-State's women's basketball team during the 1987-88 season.

The season was also one of change for the program as a whole. The Lady Cats ended their season Saturday, with a 71-51 loss to Nebraska in the first round of the Big Eight Conference Tournament.

Sports Analysis

In the 20 years of its existence, the women's basketball program had never had a losing season until this one. This year's squad broke that string, finishing 8-20. In 12 years, the Lady Cats had also never lost a first-round game in the conference tournament before this season.

But the broken winning strings and disappointing record are not something that worries K-State coach Matilda Mossman and the 11 members of K-State's team too much. None of them believe they will have a poor season again anytime soon.

"The season is frustrating from the point of wins and losses," Mossman said. "But it's probably the most rewarding year of teaching young people and seeing them be successful and improve."

The 1987-88 campaign was a building block for the K-State women's basketball program. It was a year that saw five players — four freshmen and one junior college transfer — become initiated as Lady Cats. The other six players were making the transition from being reserves last year as freshmen to being starters and leaders on the court.

"Every game we played this year was a building block for next year," Mossman said. "People didn't give us much of a chance in the beginning (of the season). People said we were young and immature and that this wasn't going to be our year anyway. We were a little frustrated by trying to prove them wrong. I still think we have a good basketball team."

Youth, determination, and just plain guts describes the 11 players who took the floor and endured through the ups and downs of the season together as a team, a concept the squad and coaches revere.

As a team, the Lady Cats won five of their first seven games, including a record-setting 110-46 whipping of Pan American in the Dallas Hilton Classic. Entering the Big Eight season, K-State was 7-5 and had lost four games by a combined total of 10 points.

One of the high points of the season ws a 73-61 victory over previously nationally ranked Louisiana State in Ahearn Field House on Dec. 30, 1987. Unfortunately, the game was during Christmas break — when most of the students were home celebrating the holidays — and the Lady Cats were unable to celebrate the victory with many of their friends and fellow students.

It was the Big Eight season that gave K-State trouble. As hard as the Lady Cats tried, they were still unab-

Temple still No. 1; 'Cats move to 21st

By The Associated Press

For the fifth consecutive week, Temple remained atop the Associated Press college basketball poll Monday, while Purdue, Arizona and Oklahoma held on to the No. 2 through 4 places for the same period.

Temple, 27-1, has advanced to the semifinals of the Atlantic 10 tournament and a victory in that could assure the Owls of a No. 1 seeding in the NCAA tournament when the pairings are announced on Sunday.

Purdue, 26-2, has already clinched a berth in the NCAA as champions of the Big Ten. The Boilermakers won the title on Saturday with an 80-67 victory over No. 10 Michigan.

Arizona, 28-2, clinched the Pacific 10 regular-season title quite a while ago and the Wildcats are assured a bid even if they don't win the conference tournament. Oklahoma, 27-3, had already won the Big Eight regular-season title before losing to Missouri, 93-90, in overtime last week. The Sooners should be in the same spot as Arizona as far as a bid is concerned.

Temple received 42 first-place votes and 1,232 points from the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters, while Purdue was first on 17 ballots and had 1,205 points.

Arizona was the only other team to receive first-place votes as the Wildcats got four and 1,148 points, while the Sooners had 1,019 points.

Pittsburgh, the Big East regular-season champion, jumped from seventh to fifth, the same improvement made by Kentucky, the top seed of the Southeastern Conference tournament.

Pittsburgh, 22-5, received 924 points after beating then-No. 12 Syracuse in the Carrier Dome for its first conference title. The Panthers had lost their previous game to Seton Hall and needed the victory for the No. 1 seeding in the conference tournament.

Kentucky beat Georgia and Mississippi last week to improve its record to 22-5 and received 886 points, 66 more than Nevada-Las Vegas which had been No. 5.

The Runnin' Rebels, 26-4, lost their third home game of the season last week when they fell to Long Beach State, 79-77.

Duke, 21-6, improved one place to eighth with 802 points after stopping a three-game losing streak with a 96-81 victory over North Carolina, which fell from sixth to ninth with 772 points. North Carolina had already clinched the Atlantic Coast Conference regular-season title and the loss was the second this year to Duke.

For the second straight week and third of the last four, Michigan rounded out the Top Ten. The Wolverines, 23-6, split two games last week, beating Northwestern, 105-67, before losing to Purdue.

North Carolina State led the Second Ten with 526 points, two more than Bradley and 11 more than Syracuse.

Rounding out the Second Ten were Wyoming, Iowa, Loyola, Calif., Brigham Young, Georgia Tech, Illinois and Xavier, Ohio.

Two qualify for national meet

The K-State track squads sent five athletes to the 47th Annual Potts Invitational in Boulder, Colo., for a last chance qualifying meet before the NCAA Championships Friday and Saturday in Oklahoma City.

Qualifying for the national meet for the Wildcats were DeDe Henderson in the high jump and Joy Jones in the 55-meter dash.

Jones' performance was the second event in which she has turned in a national standard mark. She recorded a time of 6.84 and placed first, while Henderson posted a winning mark of 5-11¼, setting a new meet record.

Other K-State finishes:

Women: Triple Jump—1, Felicia Curry, 40-8½.
55-meter Hurdles—2, Kim Kilpatrick, 7.84.
Men: Shot Put—4, Dan O'Mara, 57-9.

Royals get exhibition win

By The Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — Thad Bosley keyed a 13-hit attack off six pitchers with a two-run triple in the fifth inning Monday as the Kansas City Royals defeated the Minnesota Twins 9-4 in an exhibition game.

Bosley's triple off Jim Davins followed Steve Balboni's tie-breaking RBI single and made the score 4-1. Balboni had three hits.

Charlie Lea started for the Twins and gave up four hits and a run in two innings. Tippy Martinez followed and allowed just one hit over two innings, striking out two.

Ted Power pitched three shutout innings and Don Welchel two for the Royals, now 2-2 in Grapefruit League play. Starter Floyd Bannister gave up one run in three innings to earn the victory.

Three of the four Minnesota runs came on a homer by Dwight Lowry in the bottom of the ninth.

Baseball eclipsed by other programs

Commentary

RUSS EWY
Sports Writer

When people look at the athletics at K-State, it seems they focus on the football and basketball programs, and fail to see the fact that we are in a very competitive baseball conference.

For those who enjoy good collegiate baseball, one doesn't necessarily need to look too far. The K-State baseball program, even though it is being overshadowed by the bigger revenue sports, has a very aggressive schedule this spring, playing nationally-ranked teams from the Big Eight Conference and around the area.

Included on the 'Cats slate are the pre-season No. 1 ranked Oklahoma State Cowboys, 11th-ranked Oral Roberts, 12th-ranked Oklahoma and 19th-ranked Wichita State. However, due to lack of money for promotion, the attendance at the K-State games is sparse.

"The biggest problem is promotion to get people out to the games. Last year when we went down to Texas, the smallest of the two crowds was 5,000 people," coach Mike Clark said. "Arkansas, last year, made 120,000 dollars in gate reciepts. They have the budgets to promote their teams, like in radio promotions. Every radio station there was running spots about every thirty minutes about the baseball game.

"Wichita State is the same. They have a big baseball budget," Clark said. "I spoke with (WSU coach Gene) Stephenson about some of their promotional (ideas), and he said that (WSU) put in 95 new box seats which sold for $1,000 dollars, and along with the box seat, (patrons) received membership to a booster club."

If K-State's baseball program could overcome its budgeting problem, and could draw a few more people out to the games, it could have a snowball effect on attendance.

"We just don't have the money in our budget to run those promotions," Clark said. "What we could do, and what I've done, is to do everything I can without spending any money to get people out and get them interested in our program. I think if they go to a couple of ballgames and like what they see they will hopefully

A group led by several black ministers sang loudly throughout most of the free-speech forum Monday night in Hoch Auditorium in an attempt to disrupt the event. The audience joined in and gave the ministers two standing ovations.

Forum

the ministers two standing ovations before the forum began. The ministers continued singing throughout most of the evening, before marching out a side door in protest.

Jeanne Longaker, a spokeswoman for the KU Police Department, estimated that 3,000 people were gathered outside the auditorium and that an additional 2,000 were inside. Other estimates of the crowd outside ranged from 800 to 2,000.

One of the Klan members, Thom Robb, of Harrison, Ark., accused the ministers of stifling free speech.

"These people are so filled with hatred and bigotry they refuse to let you hear us," said Robb, national chaplain of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. He was accompanied by J. Allen Moran, the exalted cyclops of the Missouri Knights of the Ku Klux Klan.

Allan Hanson, a professor of anthropology participating in the forum, told the students to listen to the Klan members and make up their own minds.

"If you find the ideas here are ugly or twisted, use your own judgment and freedom of expression to tell other people that," Hanson said.

Michael Foubert, a graduate student at KU and director of "Slightly Older Americans for Freedom," said he invited the KKK members to the campus as a way of examining whether a university should support free speech for all viewpoints.

Foubert organized the forum after faculty members in February canceled a planned visit to campus by two Klan members. The two had been scheduled to speak to a journalism class for an exercise on reporting on extremist groups and participate in a student radio talk show.

Black ministers in the Lawrence area and the Black Student Union had opposed the visit.

David Ambler, KU vice chancellor for student affairs, said the university did not interfere with the forum because it was sponsored by a student organization.

"Students have a right to explore ideas. We're obligated to protect that right," Ambler said. "I hope a lot of learning goes on tonight."

Mia Crawford, a black student from Kansas City, Kan., said she wasn't concerned that the Klan would recruit any students.

"I'm against the KKK but they do have a right to speak," she said. "I think a lot of people are here just out of curiosity."

When the spectators realized they were not going to get into the auditorium, many began to leave.

And many began to complain.

"People are getting really irate," said Marcie Gilliland, junior in education. "This is very poorly organized. They should have announced ahead of time that there would only be a designated number of people they would let inside."

Gilliland said she did not condone the Klan, but was not opposed to the Klansmen speaking because she believes in free speech.

"I wanted to hear what they had to say," she said.

"It's aggravating," said Jann Bredesen, graduate student in film studies, who also was not able to get in. "I don't think anyone here knew what was going on."

"The Klan has no place on campus," said one male student, who did not wish to be identified. "This is not a free speech issue. The Klan should not be here speaking. They should be in jail."

Race

Missouri Congressman took an early lead when he won the Iowa caucuses. He has placed well elsewhere, coming in second in New Hampshire. On Super Tuesday, he is the favorite only in his home state of Missouri.

His main issue is trade. He plans to implement restrictions and tariffs on many foreign imports if elected president.

■ Albert Gore Jr. — As a senator from Tennessee and the only Southerner in the race, his whole campaign depends on doing well on Super Tuesday, because he has declined to participate in previous competitions. He leads in Tennessee and Kentucky, and appears to be doing well in Arkansas, Louisiana and North Carolina.

■ Gary Hart — The former Colorado senator and former front-runner has finished in the bottom half of every democratic contest thus far. He says he will drop out of the race if his standing doesn't improve after Super Tuesday. He is favored to win in none of today's races.

His main issue has been his plan to balance the budget by 1993.

■ Jesse Jackson — The Illinois minister and civil rights leader has done well in previous contests, especially in Minnesota where he finished second. Jackson is the favorite to win in Virginia, Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia and North Carolina. In the states where he doesn't win, he is expected to be the benefactor of a Democratic rule which awards delegates to any candidate who gets over 15 percent of the vote in a congressional district.

His main issues are many. He is no longer the one-issue civil rights leader, but a candidate attempting to develop broad appeal who may be the Democratic front-runner after Super Tuesday.

■ Paul Simon — The senator from Illinois is not entering into the Super Tuesday competition. He insists that he is not out of the race, and hopes to win big in the Illinois primary, which will be held one week after Super Tuesday.

■ George Bush — The vice president is coming into Super Tuesday as the Republican front-runner. The question is not "Will he win on Super Tuesday?" but "How much will he win by?" He is the favorite in every Super Tuesday state except Missouri, where he is slightly behind Dole.

His main issue is his experience; as vice president, CIA director and U.N. ambassador.

■ Robert Dole — The Kansas Senator took an early lead when he won the Iowa caucuses. But losses in New Hampshire and South Carolina, make him the No. 2 man going into Super Tuesday. He is focusing on Missouri (where he leads in the polls), Oklahoma, Washington and North Carolina (his wife's home state). His campaign is already starting to gear itself for a revival in the Illinois primary.

■ Jack Kemp — A congressman from New York who finished poorly in all previous contests, he is predicted to do the same on Super Tuesday. His hope is to beat Robertson, as both candidates appeal to the same conservative voters.

He contends he is the only Republican candidate who will continue the Reagan Revolution.

■ Pat Robertson — The Virginia television evangelist surprised many voters when he placed second in the Iowa caucuses. He has not done as well since, but is counting on a big turnout from conservative southerners to give him another surprise finish. His best chances are in North Carolina, Virginia, Louisiana, Arkansas and Oklahoma.

He contends he stands for "principled" conservative leadership.

caliber of play in the Big Eight will take a nosedive. Oklahoma juniors Stacey King and Mookie Blaylock, and Oklahoma State freshman Richard Dumas, round out the top 10 among the conference's leading scorers.

Yes, it's "Pomp and Circumstance" time for the Class of '88. But don't shed a tear for the graduating class. Blake said most, if not all, of the "Magnificent Seven" will make names for themselves in the NBA.

And the coaches all agreed: This year's senior class has established a reputation and credibility for the Big Eight that will be difficult, if not impossible, to diminish.

come back. It's just like anything else; once you get them out there, you have to entertain them."

Another factor which is probably overlooked is the low price of a baseball season ticket — $5.

"We can't make (the season ticket price) any cheaper without giving them away. We think we have a pretty good product this year. It's hard for me to imagine that we can draw 18,000 to a football game, 12,000 to a basketball game and only draw around 200 to a baseball game," Clark said. "They either do not know where the baseball park is, or they don't know when we're playing.

"If we had the money to go out and do things promotion-wise right and advertise right, we would gain significantly bigger crowds," he added. "From talking to people, they were telling me, more or less, they didn't know when we were playing, or where we were playing. I think if we could get people out to see us play, and to see how much fun they could have, more people would come back.

struction of democratic institutions, fiscal order, economic development, conditions for authentic democracy and the celebration of free, open and honest elections."

The document was signed by Arnulfo Arias of the Panamanian Authentic Party, the country's largest party, and representatives of the two other opposition parties. Also signing it were representatives of the National Civic Crusade, an alliance of about 200 professional, business, labor and political organizations that has spearheaded resistance to Noriega since its formation last June.

While not specifying that Delvalle would head a government of national reconciliation, the document recognizes him "as he who now exercises the office of president."

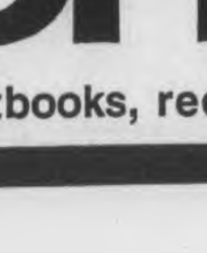
le to pull out the close games and record a win. In an eight-game losing skid, K-State found itself with a 0-6 conference mark.

And then the sun came out from behind the clouds, briefly, to shine down on the Lady Cats once again in Ahearn. The Iowa State Lady Cyclones met their match in the Lady Cats, as K-State blew by Iowa State, 83-70, and went on to play some of its best basketball of the season.

During a two-week span, K-State lost to Kansas in Allen Field House, 52-50; defeated Iowa State; played Nebraska, the soon-to-be conference champions, to a six-point game, losing 66-60; and then lost, 67-65, to Missouri in the Hearnes Center. Despite the losses, the efforts of the Lady Cats went a long way toward instilling confidence in a team that felt it could compete and wanted to prove it.



The Lady Cats kept their heads up and never gave up, which is what Mossman and everyone else should be proud of and remember the most.

"I think we got a lot out of our kids," Mossman said. "As the season grew on and we lost games, our kids never quit. That says a lot about their character. We definitely have a team of the future."

Students choose favorite trips for spring break

By Steve Walker
Collegian Reporter

One thing is for certain, students at K-State this year are heading for warmer lands and better tans as soon as Spring Break '88 begins.

The only thing holding them back is a lack of money, since there is no lack of imagination as to where K-State students want to go and what they want to do during spring break this year.

Where K-State students want to go can be broken down into two categories, based on the two types of spring break voyagers: realists and international travelers.

The realists stay within the realm of the possible — they might actually be able to visit the vacation spot of their dreams and do what they want to do.

International travelers have gone off the deep end and should probably be committed, but you have to admire their imagination.

Taking a look at some realists' goals might give someone a pretty good idea of what to do for a possible spring break excursion.

"I want to go with five or six girls and stay in a condo, learn to ski and pick up guys." — Melinda M.

"I want to go somewhere I can soak up a lot of sun, scope gorgeous bronze men and then party all night with the well-scoped men." — Kristen L.

"I want to go somewhere where there is lots of sun, lots of women and lots of beer." — Sean S.

"I want to go to Hawaii and bask in the sun, windsurf and just party the whole day long. I'd like plenty of romance in isolated spots with lots of moonlight." — Jeff M.

Not everyone is looking for a spring break romance. Some students don't want one, and some just aren't thinking about it.

"I want to go to Daytona Beach and soak up rays all day and suck down Corona all night." — Bob N.

"I want to take a cruise with all my friends, tan all day and dance all night — no romance. Men suck." — Debbie F.

Taking a look at the international travelers' goals might give someone a good idea where Robin Leach gets his story ideas or where your average K-State millionaire will be spending spring break.

"I'm going to slide across to the Alps for about three to four days of skiing. Then I'll hop down to Greece and crash on the beach for a couple of days while doing some incredibly harsh partying." — Jim V.

"I want to go to Jamaica with four or five guys, rich guys. Be wined and dined, with a major shopping spree in Paris when it's all over." — A.M.S.

"I want to bop around the south of France, getting a tan at all the clothing-optional beaches; meet an incredibly young, innocent and beautiful member of a royal family; and make the cover of the National Enquirer." — Stephen R.

It looks as if Spring Break '88 is going to be a good one for K-State students no matter where they decide to go.

For the average student sick to death of tests and pop quizzes, the whole attitude of what spring break means is best summed up in the words of Jerry Hedrick, senior in marketing, "I want my toes in the sand and a drink in my hand — ahhh, Acapulco."

Wide variety of styles, colors to go from beach to ski slope

By Steve Walker
Collegian Reporter

Whether K-State students are heading for the beaches of South Padre Island and Mexico, or the ski resorts of Breckenridge and Steamboat, they will probably spend some time thinking about what they are going to wear.

If students are going where the sun is bright and the tans are dark, swimwear becomes something to consider. According to swimsuit manufacturers, it's not only important that a swimsuit is functional, it is also important how it looks.

This year some big brand names in women's swimwear are Raisin, Gotcha and Take Cover, said Theresa Kemp, an employee of Aggie Ski & Sport.

"Take Cover is selling the best," she said. "Two piece suits with high-waisted bottoms and tank-style tops are popular. The average price is in the $35 to $45 range."

Some big names in men's swimwear are Catch It and Gotcha, Kemp said. The only new look is longer hems, from mid-thigh to the knee.

If K-Staters are heading for snow-covered mountains, they will have a little bigger choice in styles.

"Take Cover is selling the best. Two piece suits with high-waisted bottoms and tank-style tops are popular."
—Theresa Kemp

There are three distinct styles this year in fashion ski wear, said Dave Colburn, an employee of The Pathfinder.

A style that has definitely come back is the early ski look from the 1950s, he said. Big puffy jackets with tight ski pants being the hallmark of the trend.

The second style is a technical look, Colburn said. Backpacking and mountaineering equipment companies have come out with high-tech rackets with a lot of pockets and features.

The third trend is wild, super-bright colors and clay prints, he said.

Clay prints are done by using a clay roller to put the colors on the jacket, Colburn said. With this technique no two coats turn out exactly the same.

"One thing you definitely don't see anymore is people making do with what they've got," he said. "The only people who wear jeans are the locals and for them it's a statement that they are a local."

A new material that is starting to gain in popularity in both ski and swimwear is the nylon-lycra, spandex material most commonly associated with biking and jogging.

A type of men's swimsuit made by Dolfin and some ski wear have come out this year made from the slick, shiny spandex material. Many people probably noticed that the skiiers in the Olympics wore suits made from it.

Tanning might not provide enough sunburn protection

By John LaBarge
Collegian Reporter

From the mountains to the beaches, students are making preparations for spring break — a week of sun, fun and frolic.

Students from college campuses all over the country are making decisions: what to do, where to go, and whether or not to get a head start on their tan.

Brad Russell, manager of Tropical Tan, said once the spring semester starts the appointment book fills up in a hurry.

"We had one of our best days last week with 213 customers," Russell said. Most of the people who use artifical tanning are those who work inside all day and can't get enough sun, he said.

Many people are regular customers and come to the salon several times a week, he said.

For someone wanting to get a tan before spring break, employees of The Sun Connection in Manhattan suggests starting out with 15-20 minute sessions at a time, twice a week until a good base tan is acquired. Then exposure to the sun will be safer.

"No tanning is healthy — artifical or natural," said Cindy Burke, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center.

Artificial or natural tanning can have long-term effects on your skin that may not be detected for many years, she said.

Burke said the sanitary aspects of tanning in beds where hundreds of other people have lain, most likely in the nude, makes a person wonder what bacteria can be floating around.

"It's a warm moist environment, prime for bacteria to grow and no one knows for sure if they clean the beds well enough," she said.

Also, artificial tans might not protect people from the sun as much as they might think.

People who get an artificial tan that is dark may think they have a Sun Protection Factor of 10 or 15 but the highest skin factor they will receive from artificial tanning is an SPF of four, said Dr. Larry Moeller, staff physician at Lafene Student Health Center. If that person goes into the sun without a sunscreen they will burn.

"A person who has an SPF of four and uses a sunscreen with a factor of 10, that would give them an SPF of 14," he said. That would protect the average person from burning.

Potential sun worshipers should also be aware of any medicine that might affect their sensitivity to the sun.

Some forms of medication that many people use can increase the chance of getting a sunburn. Some acne medicines and other internally taken medications can affect sun exposure.

The most dangerous time a person can be in the sun is from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. This is the time the sun is the strongest and sunscreen should be worn.

The least dangerous time to be in the sun is from 8 a.m. to 10:30 a.m. and 3 p.m. to 5:30 p.m., but a person should still wear sunscreen.

"All people who plan on being in the sun over spring break should wear at least a sunblock of 10 to 15," Moeller said. Fair-skinned people should wear a sunblock of 15 and darker people should use at least a 10.

For those who remain...

Some find fun by staying in town

By Audra Dietz
Collegian Reporter

Picture this: spending spring break lying on luscious, green prairie grass as the western sun sinks over the horizon and the aroma of fresh clover tickles your nostrils as you watch a herd of cows chew their cud.

It's not Padre Island, and it's probably not even warm, but it's Kansas.

Yes, thousands of students rush to Daytona Beach and Padre Island, or head to the Rockies to escape from the pressures of college life during spring break. But there are people who stay in the reality of Manhattan for those seven days.

Kelley Reid, sophomore in pre-med from Manhattan, said things are mellow when school is out.

"It's dead around here," said Reid.

But there are things to do in Manhattan, she said, if you put your mind to it.

Reid said laying out at Pillsbury Crossing is a great way to keep up with the people tanning on the beach.

"You just have to watch out for snakes," she said.

Granted, there's no ocean view, but Tuttle Creek will do the job.

"It's a good time to start skiing. Just get a wet suit," she said.

Manhattan won't be quiet for all of spring break.

The St. Patrick's Day Celebration, sponsored by the Aggieville Merchants' Association, will be on March 12 and 13. The festival kicks off with a parade down Moro Street at noon.

Dean Taylor, owner of The Palace and member of the Aggieville, Merchants' Association, said he's looking forward to the celebration.

"The parade is the best part," he said.

The main events are the St. Pat's 10-Kilometer Road Race and the Shamrock Two-mile Fun Run. The day ends with an awards ceremony and a barbecue in Triangle Park.

"It's a fun day in Aggieville," Taylor said.

Aggieville never rests, and local bartenders say spring break brings out a different crowd.

Eldon Clark, manager of Dark Horse Tavern, said business slows down but there's not a big difference.

"A lot of people from Manhattan come back. It's an older crowd," Clark said.

Joe Rice, manager of Kite's, said student business is slow, but there's always a good local turnout. Kite's and Dark Horse will join the St. Patrick's Day festivites with floats in the parade. Kite's will also serve the traditional green beer, Rice said.

After the St. Patrick's Day Celebration, fishing at Tuttle is a good way to pass the time, said John Glenn, senior in construction science.

He said he likes just doing nothing on spring break.

"I work and play hacky-sack in the afternoons," Glenn said.

However, staying in Manhattan during spring break can have its drawbacks, he said.

"It's kind of lonely. There's not a lot to do unless you know people from Manhattan," Glenn said.

But spring break in Manhattan might not be bad after all. Have free time after the parade? Use a little imagination: rent a hot tub, or get some sand and make your own beach. Setting gopher traps on the Konza Prairie could be exciting.

Build a fire, roast s'mores and listen to the meadowlarks. Who knows, maybe the infamous ground hog will actually come out of his hole.

Take advantange of your home state. Remember, there's "wild life" in Padre, but not for free.

Students learn about MINI-GRANT program

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

A workshop to inform students about a way to gain more money for college through the MINI-GRANT program was held Monday in the Union.

Approximately 15 students received information on how to increase their finances by applying for community service grants.

The MINI-GRANT program is designed to help undergraduate and graduate students address specific community service projects. They must be initiated by a student currently enrolled in classes at K-State and deal with community concerns beyond the K-State campus.

Six grants, at $500 each, will be given and the student is expected to match the amount. The matching amount may be in the form of service hours performed by the students, cash or another acceptable alternative, said Janice Norlin, student project coordinator for the MINI-GRANT program.

Project ideas are determined by the applicant. They may range from tutorial projects to theater productions or health education. Funding will not be provided for thesis or dissertation research, Norlin said, but nothing else will be automatically ruled out.

Funded by a federal grant, Fund for the Improvement of Post-Secondary Education (FIPSE), the MINI-GRANT program is only one of four areas covered by the grant money, said Carol Peak, community service program director.

One of the other three projects is a community service team of graduate and undergraduate student who will be devoting eight weeks during the summer to community service projects in Kansas, Peak said. They will be provided with housing, transportation and office space. A $1,500 stipend and a $400 scholarship for the next semester's tuition are also included in the benefits.

A community service clearinghouse is another area funded by the federal grant. It provides the opportunity for students to participate in community service on the local, national and international level, Peak said. Information about all areas of community service will be made available through the clearinghouse.

The third area funded by FIPSE is Community Save, a short term clean-up, fix-up program designed to help rural Kansas communities. It is generally work that may be done within one day, such as cleaning parks or making minor repairs to homes owned by the elderly, Peak said.

"There are no special skills. If you can hold a paint brush, that's great," she said. "They make good community service projects for living organizations."

The four project areas are organized by students. According to the proposal written to obtain the grant money, these are the only areas that may be addressed with the federal money, and students must develop the programs.

"Students are recruited to go to the community and be involved in service projects. They define the problems and develop the job descriptions for what needs to be done," Peak said.

Palestinians hijack bus; three Israelis die in siege

By The Associated Press

DIMONA, Israel — Three Palestinian guerrillas seized a commuter bus Monday and held a group of nuclear plant workers hostage, killing three Israeli civilians and wounding nine others before being shot to death by police, officials said.

Army officials said the guerrillas infiltrated from Egypt and held 10 women and one man hostage for about three hours. The bus was seized as it shuttled workers of the top-secret Dimona nuclear plant.

In the occupied territories, at least 12 Arabs were shot Monday during clashes with Israeli troops, and the army said Palestinian protesters hurled a grenade at troops, wounding one soldier slightly in the West Bank village of Idna.

Also, more than 20 Arab tax collectors in the Gaza Strip submitted mass resignations after underground leaflets called for Palestinians to quit working for Israel's military administration. An army official says the resignations are not final.

Israeli analysts said escalating violence could harden the position of Shamir and the right-wing Likud Bloc, which has not accepted the peace initiatives of U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz.

Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin told Israel's Knesset, or parliament, that Monday's bus victims "were killed for nothing else but for their being Jewish residents of Israel."

In an anonymous telephone call to a Western news agency, a man claimed responsibility for the hijacking in the name of Force 17, a Palestinian commando group linked to Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization.

It was the eighth infiltration into Israel from Egypt, Jordan or Lebanon since late November.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Charles Redman condemned the hijacking and noted "with sadness that at a time when the majority ... are looking for a peaceful solution of the Arab-Israeli conflict, terrorists emerge to attack the innocents."

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, a leader of Israel's doves, said the hijacking was an indication of why Israel refused to deal with Arafat.

Lt. Gen. Dan Shomron, the armed forces chief of staff, said the guerrillas crossed the lightly guarded border from Egypt, and he criticized Egyptian authorities for not doing more to stop such infiltrations.

Army officials said the terrorists were armed with fragmentation grenades, two Soviet Kalashnikov assault rifles and a Swedish-made Karl Gustav submachine gun.

The Arab gunmen first seized a small military vehicle at about 7 a.m. near the Nafha prison, a few miles from the Sinai Desert border with Egypt.

The guerrillas, riding in the captured vehicle, went on a rampage along the highway, shooting at passing cars and trucks and wounding one Israeli man, officials said.

Police chased the car and shot out a tire, forcing the guerrillas to abandon the vehicle, police said.

The guerrillas then seized the red-and-white bus carrying workers to the nuclear plant. Police stopped the vehicle by barricading the road.

The Arab trio was headed toward Beersheva, away from the nuclear facility, when they seized the bus.

The guerrillas gave Israeli authorities one hour to produce an International Red Cross official and free jailed Palestinians.

Maj. Gen. Yitzhak Mordechai, the army's southern commander, said that moments later the guerrilla leader fatally shot in the chest Victor Ran, 39, the father of three children.

The ensuing assault on the bus by anti-terror police lasted about one minute, he said.

Mordechai said an investigation showed the shots were fired by the Arab guerrillas.

State crime rate increases 2.3 percent

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas Bureau of Investigation reported Monday that the state's overall crime rate rose 2.3 percent between 1986 and 1987, but the number of violent crimes declined 1.7 percent.

Decreases in rapes and aggravated assaults more than offset increases in murders and robberies, resulting in the 1.7 percent drop in violent crime.

However, the number of property crimes — burglaries, larcenies and motor vehicle thefts — went up 2.6 percent, contributing to an overall 2.3 percent increase in the incidence of crime between the two years.

Burglaries led the increase, up 8.4 percent, but the KBI said that figure may have been inflated because of a change in the way automobile break-ins are counted. Previously, they were listed as thefts; now they are counted as burglaries.

The statistics comparing the two years were compiled from reports filed by about 300 law enforcement agencies in Kansas, the KBI said.

The KBI makes public the crime statistics on a quarterly basis during the year. This report included the 12-month totals for 1987, and compared them to the 1986 totals.

Statewide, the KBI said, there were 109 murders reported in Kansas during 1987, up one or .9 of 1 percent, from 1986.

Robberies increased from 1,951 to 2,020, 3.5 percent; rapes dropped from 816 to 798, 2.2 percent, and aggravated assaults declined from 6,090 to 5,887, 3.3 percent.

Among the property crimes, burglaries were up from 34,645 to 37,569, 8.4 percent; larcenies were up from 67,194 to 67,228, .1 of 1 percent, and motor vehicle thefts dropped from 6,259 to 6,164, down 1.5 percent.

The total number of crimes reported — both violent and property — went up 2.3 percent, from 117,063 to 119,775.

Among the four largest counties, the number of violent crimes were up in Johnson and Shawnee Counties and down slightly in Sedgwick and Wyandotte Counties. Here are the violent crime figures on those counties:

Sedgwick — Murders, unchanged, 28 each year; rapes, down 6.9 percent, 290 in 1986 to 270 in 1987; robberies, up .3 of 1 percent, 614 to 616; aggravated assaults, up 1.4 percent, 911 to 924; overall, down .3 of 1 percent, 1,843 to 1,838.

Shawnee — Murders, down 66.7 percent, 12 to 4; rapes, up 15.2 percent, 66 to 76; robberies, up 8.1 percent, 248 to 268; aggravated assaults, up 7.1 percent, 539 to 577; overall, up 6.9 percent, 865 to 925.

Johnson — Murders, down 75 percent, 8 to 2; rapes, up 29.2 percent, 48 to 62; robberies, up 5 percent, 160 to 168; aggravated assaults, up 15.1 percent, 478 to 550; overall, up 12.7 percent, 694 to 782.

Wyandotte — Murders, up 45.5 percent, 22 to 32; rapes, down 1.2 percent, 165 to 163; robberies, up 8.9 percent, 632 to 688; aggravated assaults, down 5.7 percent, 1,653 to 1,558; overall, down 1.3 percent, 2,472 to 2,441.

Among the larger cities, here is the comparison between 1986 and 1987 in total number of crimes, both violent and property:

Wichita, up 4.1 percent, 23,858 to 24,844; Kansas City, Kan., up 2.4 percent, 16,277 to 16,672; Topeka, up 4.9 percent, 10,430 to 10,941; Overland Park, up 6.6 percent; 5,085 to 5,420; Lawrence, up 5 percent, 3,788 to 3,978; Olathe, down 1.7 percent, 2,747 to 2,699; Salina, up 1.2 percent, 2,127 to 2,153; Hutchinson, down 8.4 percent, 3,292 to 3,014; Leavenworth, up 5.9 percent, 1,560 to 1,652.

Manhattan, up 8.5 percent, 1,542 to 1,673; Shawnee, up 9.7 percent, 1,316 to 1,443; Emporia, down 2.5 percent, 1,508 to 1,470; Prairie Village, down 14.9 percent, 584 to 497; Lenexa, down 2.4 percent, 1,284 to 1,253; Garden City, down 3 percent, 2,074 to 2,012; Junction City, up 15.3 percent, 1,731 to 1,995; Dodge City, down 15.4 percent, 1,906 to 1,612; Pittsburg, up 8.1 percent, 1,273 to 1,376.

Hays, up 6.8 percent, 730 to 780; Great Bend, up 5.9 percent, 876 to 928; Newton, up 65.5 percent, 429 to 710; Liberal, up 14 percent, 1,559 to 1,778; Coffeyville, down 4.1 percent, 919 to 881; Leawood, up 31 percent, 397 to 520; Arkansas City, down 1.4 percent, 780 to 769; Parsons, up 34.2 percent, 453 to 608; McPherson, down 8.3 percent, 327 to 300.

Derby, down 11.1 percent, 397 to 353; Winfield, up 9.9 percent, 395 to 434; Atchison, up 18.4 percent, 467 to 553; El Dorado, down 8.1 percent, 557 to 512; Merriam, down 6.7 percent, 898 to 838; Ottawa, up 14.6 percent, 335 to 384; Independence, up 15.7 percent, 592 to 685; Chanute, up 2.1 percent, 338 to 345.

Hardees deliveryman Steve Anderson takes a phone order.

Food in the FAST LANE

With a Godfather's pizza in the passenger seat, headlights streak past Darin Brungardt's car as he drives to a customer's apartment.

When it's late at night and the munchies attack, you have to fight back. One popular way of waging war on hunger pangs in Manhattan is having food delivered.

The myriad of fast food places in Manhattan offering late night delivery service employ a variety of techniques to handle the food orders, but the concept remains basically the same: you call, they haul.

"A successful fast food business must meet the needs of three groups of people: those who want to go out to eat, those who want to go out and pick something up and take it back to a familiar surrounding, and those who don't want to go anywhere," said Greg Hill, manager of Hunam's Express.

The business that can best satisfy the needs of all three groups is going to do the best, he said.

"The Domino's Pizza chain set the precedent for a 30-minute delivery," Hill said. "Anyone else delivering food has to meet that standard — even if it's Peking Duck."

"A successful fast food business must meet the needs of three groups of people: those who want to go out to eat, those who want to go out and pick something up and take it back to a familiar surrounding, and those who don't want to go anywhere."

—Greg Hill

Coupons play a big role in the delivery business, he said. Even if the coupon is only for a free soda, people want it.

Hill said the growing success of food delivery can be attributed to changes in America's households.

"There is a trend to have both spouses working in a household and that has given fast food delivery its popularity," he said. "The wife and the husband have both been working and neither want to cook or go out, so they grab the phone."

Brent Leland, manager of the Aggieville Hardees, said the idea for Hardees to start delivering came from the Hardees stores at Purdue University and Indiana State University.

Leland said the delivery service for Hardees has not done as well as had been projected.

"We based our projections on the results achieved in Indiana, but they have been delivering for three years, and we have only been at it for one year," he said.

Drivers are paid an hourly wage, plus a delivery fee to compensate for the use of their cars, he said.

"When people are sitting at home and get hungry they don't think of us first," he said. "We are not one of the choices yet. It's kind of pizza, pizza, pizza."

"We have had some minor problems with bogus orders, but we are making more frequent call-backs to discourage it," he said.

"Finding apartments that are upstairs or in the basement with hard-to-find entrances presents a unique challenge when it's dark and snowing," he said.

"Lousy weather means good business for delivery. Before, bad weather usually meant a drop-off in all business. Now the delivery business compensates for any bad-weather-induced drop-off in sales," he said.

Ray Miller, manager of Godfather's Pizza and a junior in business administration, said the delivery business makes up 35 percent to 40 percent of his business.

Miller said he keeps five drivers on during the week and six on the weekend.

Godfather's Pizza began delivering about 4½ years ago, he said.

"Initially we had heated boxes that plugged into the cigarette lighters, but the boxes were hard on the car's interior, so we went to thermal bags about two years ago and they are just as efficient," he said.

The drivers are the best-paid employees in the store, receiving an hourly wage and a delivery fee, Miller said.

"Snow and final exams increase the demand for delivery service, and during finals, having enough drivers even presents a challenge," he said.

Miller said delivery allows access to some people who otherwise would not be reached as customers.

"A lot of people just wouldn't buy a pizza if it wasn't delivered," he said. "In delivery, everything is transacted outside the store, so there is no dining area clean-up, but the driver is being paid whether he is delivering or not so there is a trade-off."

Darin Brungardt, senior in finance, said he has been delivering for Godfather's Pizza for about seven months.

Weather makes a big impact on business, Brungardt said.

"When it's bad weather, we usually get hit real hard," he said.

"Snow and final exams increase the demand for delivery service, and during finals, having enough drivers even presents a challenge."

—Ray Miller

Brungardt said the availability of money at the first of each semester also makes a big impact on business.

"At the beginning of the semester, everyone is partying up pretty heavy," he said. "When people come home from a good drunk, they get the munchies and they order a pizza.

"The people often invite you to stay and drink a beer, but you really can't because you usually have a carload of pizzas," Brungardt said.

Steve Man, owner of Hunam's Express in Aggieville and Junction City and Hunam's Restaurant in Westloop, said he learned about the delivery business from the Domino's Pizza chain.

"The Domino's founder turned a small business into an empire," he said.

Man said 30 percent of his business in Manhattan and 80 percent of his business in Junction City is delivery. He said two drivers are on duty at night and are paid an hourly wage plus mileage or a commission (their choice) for the use of their car.

According to Hill, delivery people see a side of people one doesn't normally see while delivering food at night.

They see people who are drunk, who have little or no clothes on, who are tired and even see women who are wearing boxer shorts with rollers in their hair, he said.

"One night a lady came to the door in a negligee and a full-length mink coat and said she wanted me to do her a special favor, and that she would make it worth my while," Hill said. "My imagination was on a roll.

"What she wanted was for me to take the food I was delivering to her boyfriend and she gave me a $25 tip to do it.

"The most amusing aspect of late night delivery is listening to the stories that drivers make up. I guess some of them are at least possible, but wow!"

Steve Anderson, senior in medical technology, said he has been delivering for Hardees for almost one year.

"It's kind of a challenge for me to see how fast I can get the food out to them," he said.

Work isn't work if you can find a way to make it fun, he said.

"Sunday is our biggest time for delivery. The dorms and the greeks don't serve the evening meal, so we really get swamped," he said.

"During finals week and during the first part of the semester we get two to three orders a minute, and a driver can only take four or five orders out at a time, and we only have four to five drivers on duty at a time," he said.

Hardees' drivers play a lot of roles — working in the kitchen, cleaning the lobby, washing dishes, acting as bouncers, and helping out at the counter, he said.

Anderson also said delivering food to people's homes provides a view of people most never see.

"You see people who just crawled out of the shower or just woke up," he said.

Chen Li, graduate student in geography and a native of Taiyuan, China, said he has been delivering for Hunam's for about one year.

"Delivering is a lot better than working in the kitchen where there is no sunshine or fresh air," Li said. "When you are out delivering, you can play the radio and enjoy the driving.

"Staying around the University limits the number of Americans I get the opportunity to come in contact with, but delivering allows me to meet many more people," he said.

Kim Lopez, left, takes a delivery order to his car from Hunam's Express. Hunam's strives to have each order cooked within five minutes of having the order in writing.

Retirement account deductibility easy to understand

Commentary

STEPHEN P. HARRISON
Collegian Columnist

The passage of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 has created a great deal of confusion concerning IRAs and their deductibility. Who now qualifies for IRAs? Who's eligible for deductible contributions? How much money can be contributed to an IRA and claimed as deductible?

While the new tax laws may have left you in the dark, this article should shed some light on IRAs and the new laws regulating them. Once you learn more about these rules, you'll find IRAs are really quite simple to understand.

Cases in Which Full Deductions Can Be Claimed

Individuals who are not covered by an employer-sponsored retirement plan can still make deductible contributions of up to $2,000 annually. For couples in which neither partner is covered by an employer-sponsored retirement plan, the limit for deductible contributions is $2,250 for spousal IRAs and $4,000 for a working couple.

If you are an individual whose adjusted gross income is less than $25,000 or if you and your spouse's adjusted gross income is less than $40,000, you may still take advantage of full IRA deductions, even if either of you are participants in employer-sponsored retirement plans.

Cases in Which Partial Deductions Can Be Claimed

If you or your spouse are covered by an employer-sponsored retirement plan and your adjusted gross income is between $40,000 and $50,000, you are still eligible for partial IRA deductions. However, for every $1,000 of income beyond $40,000, you lose $200 of your deductible IRA contribution.

If you are an individual whose adjusted gross income falls between $25,000 and $35,000, you're still eligible for partial IRA deductions. The same restrictions for couples apply to individuals.

Cases in Which No Deductions Can be Claimed

If you are an individual whose adjusted

Kansas Senate passes kennel inspection bill

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Senate Monday tentatively passed a watered-down version of a bill that would require the state to inspect commercial cat and dog kennels.

The bill would require the state to inspect those commercial kennels currently not licensed by the United States Department of Agriculture. It was amended on the floor after considerable debate to delete state inspections of those kennels that already come under federal regulations.

Sen. Jeanne Hoferer, R-Topeka, said the amendment eliminating the USDA kennels from state jurisdiction weakened the bill.

"It's still better than what we have," she said.

The motion to remove those kennels licensed by the federal government from the proposed state inspection program was offered by Sen. Don Montgomery, R-Sabetha, who contended "double licensing and double inspection" was not needed.

Montgomery suggested the bill could be the first step by the Humane Society in attempting to regulate the treatment of livestock, a contention Hoferer denied.

"The next thing they might want to do is inspect our facilities where we slaughter our livestock," Montgomery said.

"This is not a Humane Society bill," Hoferer said and added its sponsors have no intention of attempting to regulate the treatment of farm animals in the future.

She said Kansas has a bad image for shipping sick cats and dogs to pet stores on the East Coast.

The bill as approved by the Senate would require the state to inspect only kennels that are not licensed by the USDA. The federal agency only licenses kennels if their owners sell dogs or cats in other states.

Hoferer said some breeders have circumvented USDA licensing by selling their dogs and cats to a Kansas pet broker, who then is licensed by the federal government.

Officials from the state Livestock Commission would inspect all unlicensed kennels twice a year if they sell 30 or more animals annually, under the bill. Hobby kennels also would be subject to inspection if they produce three litters or more a year, but an inspection would be conducted only if a complaint is filed with the state.

Hoferer also said USDA was not doing an adequate job inspecting kennels in Kansas, saying the federal government has only six inspectors and six veterinarians for the entire nation.

"It's too bad we have to have double inspection, but the feds don't have the manpower, the wherewithal, to do the job," said Sen. Dick Bond, R-Overland Park. "This is not a Humane Society plot, it's not a Communist plot."

But Sen. Jim Allen, R-Ottawa, said most of the USDA-inspected kennels were up to par.

"We're talking about passing laws because of one or two bad apples," he said. "What's going to be inspected next?"

The bill was also amended to exempt greyhound kennels, which are likely to breed dogs that race in Kansas if a track is built.

Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina, said greyhound kennels raise extremely valuable dogs and would be reluctant to allow an inspector inside the kennels because of the possibility of spreading disease.

"We have other people raising top quality dogs," Hoferer said. "There's no reason to treat greyhounds differently from other dogs in the state."

The Senate also gave tentative approval to a bill that would require both major parties to include the chairperson of their official black organizations on the state committees. Current law requires that both the Republican and Democratic parties include representatives of each party's women and youth organizations.

Sen. Wint Winter, R-Lawrence, said the bill is designed to encourage a broader participation in politics.

Other bills the Senate tentatively approved Monday include:

—A measure that would allow those who are discharged from the military while stationed in Kansas to attend state colleges at in-state tuition rates. Currently, military personnel and their dependents pay in-state tuition while on active duty, but when they are discharged or retire, they must pay out-of-state tuition.

—A bill that would amend the Uniform Credit Code to allow banks to charge a 21 percent interest rate on the first $1,000 of a loan and 14.45 percent on any amount over $1,000. Currently, banks can charge 21 percent on the first $300 and 18 percent on the difference between $300 and $1,000. The bill only applies to loans with installment payments.

—A bill that would create an "agricultural value-added" processing center associated with K-State in Manhattan. The center would provide technical assistance for those agricultural businesses involved in food processing.

Elections familiar to alumna

'Old-line' democrat supports Sen. Simon

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

Leila Colwell is a Democrat. She has seen every Democratic president since Franklin Roosevelt. She comes from a long line of Democratic Party members and was handing out party buttons as a third grader. And, she believes in Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois, a Democratic presidential candidate, whom she met while working in Evanston, Ill.

"I'm an old-line Democrat," Colwell said, referring to her history of Democratic affiliations.

Colwell, an Onaga native and K—State alumna, is now a retired Manhattan resident.

"He's an old-fashioned Democrat," Colwell said of Simon. "He's more for people ... he takes care of people," she said.

"I'm concerned he isn't coming across as what he's worth — 'the old—fashioned Truman worth,' who has his feet on the ground," Colwell said.

She considers him to have integrity, honesty, sincerity. "He's a real-honest—to—goodness Democrat.... He's respected and liked for his intelligence," Colwell said.

As for Simon's progress in the presidential race, Colwell said it is unfortunate he does not have the funding for additional campaigning. Due to this, Simon pulled out of the "Super Tuesday" primaries. Yet, that has not decreased the enthusiasm of Simon supporters such as Colwell.

Colwell believes Simon will do well in his home state during the Illinois primary next week. "I believe Simon will carry Illinois," she said.

Simon's political career began as an Illinois state legislator and from there he moved on to become lieutenant governor. He has also served as a congressman. Simon worked for the creation of the Missing Children Act while in Congress and supported every piece of legislation for promotion of senior citizens' rights. That record earned him the "Legislator of the Year" award for 1983-84 from the National Council of Senior Citizens.

"He's an old-fashioned Democrat. He's more for people ... he takes care of people."

—Leila Colwell

In 1984, the "Year of Democratic Losses," Simon ran for and was elected to a Senate seat, defeating well-known Republican Charles Percy. While a senator, his stand against nuclear weapons is strong. Simon alone led the first fight against the MX missile in 1980 and was an original co-sponsor of the nuclear freeze.

While in Evanston, Ill., Colwell was an active member of the Evanston Democratic Club for 14 years, six of those as treasurer and executive board member. Colwell was a charter member of the Adlai Stevenson for President Club.

It was with this campaign that she met Paul Simon. Simon was campaigning for Stevenson and Colwell had the opportunity to hear him speak. "I met him many times in Evanston in '54," Colwell said.

Colwell, a Landon Lecture Patron and member of the KSU Foundation, graduated from K-State in 1927 with a degree in home economics.

Upon graduation, Colwell traveled to Buffalo, N.Y., for an internship. She then moved to Evanston, where for 25 years, she was Director of Dietetics at Evanston Hospital, one of seven hospitals of the Northwestern University Medical Center.

Students to lobby in nation's capitol

By The Collegian Staff

While many students spend spring break relaxing, two representatives from K-State will be lobbying Kansas representatives and senators in Washington D.C.

Troy Lubbers, student body president, and Doug Folk, Senate chairman, will travel to the nation's capital on March 18, Lubbers said.

They will be lobbying on many issues affecting students this year. Among the items they wish to discuss are recommended changes on guaranteed student loans, Folk said.

The taxation of student scholarships and grants and President Reagan's budget for education will also be discussed with Kansas senators and representatives, Lubbers said.

"The president's budget for education, as usual, doesn't look bright," Folk said.

Lubbers and Folk will be traveling with other student leaders from the University of Kansas, The Wichita State University, Emporia State University, Fort Hays State University and Pittsburg State University. Chris Graves, executive director of the Associated Students of Kansas, will also travel with them.

"We encourage everyone with concerns that affect students to tell us, so we can present these issues to the state senators and representatives while we are there," Lubbers said.

"What we really want is input from the students," Folk said. "But make sure to get to us before (spring) break."

$7.7 million awarded in Challenger suit

Thiokol, government to pay claims

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The government and rocket-maker Morton Thiokol paid $7,735,000 in cash and annuities and divided the cost 40-60 to settle all claims by the families of four of the astronauts who died in the Challenger explosion.

Documents released Monday showed that Morton Thiokol, which produced the booster rocket blamed for the Jan. 28, 1986, explosion, paid $4,641,000. The government's share of the settlements was $3,094,000.

A lawyer who represented other family members called the settlements "woefully inadequate."

The surviving four spouses and six children actually will receive more than $7.7 million, because each was given an annuity that pays benefits larger than its cost but over a period of many years.

The dollar amount the families will receive over time and the breakdown by family were not released.

With the release of the documents, the Justice Department settled a civil suit brought under the Freedom of Information Act by The Associated Press and six other news organizations. The government originally had kept details of the settlements and negotiations secret, saying it needed to keep its internal deliberations confidential and that the company and families demanded secrecy.

The documents, with some deletions to preserve family privacy, included the final settlement agreements with the families and the company, some correspondence between the government and the company, and several Justice Department statements concerning the negotiations.

The settlements were reached Dec. 29, 1986, with the immediate survivors of spacecraft commander Dick Scobee, 46, a retired Air Force officer employed by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration; mission specialist Ellison S. Onizuka, 39, an Air Force lieutenant colonel; payload specialist Gregory Jarvis, 41, an employee of Hughes Aircraft Co.; and Christa McAuliffe, 37, a Concord, N.H., public high school teacher.

The four families had no lawyers during the negotiations. They relied instead on informal advice from Leo B. Lind Jr., the law partner of McAuliffe's husband and executor of her estate.

The Justice Department did all the negotiating for Morton Thiokol as well as the government. Lind said in an affidavit that the families never spoke to company officials.

Michael D. Oldak, the ex-husband of Judith Resnick, 36, a civilian NASA employee, represented her father, Marvin, and last month reached a settlement with the company to which the government did not contribute.

In January, Resnik's mother, Sarah Resnik Belfer, and Jarvis' father, Bruce, settled with Morton Thiokol.

Bush conquers South; Democrats split Dixie

By The Associated Press

George Bush won a spectacular 16-state primary sweep on Super Tuesday, reaping a rich harvest of convention delegates and taking command of the Republican presidential race.

On the Democratic side, Michael Dukakis captured Florida and Texas in a show of nationwide appeal while Sen. Albert Gore Jr. emerged to split the Deep South with Jesse Jackson.

In a single overwhelming night, Bush was winning half the delegates needed for nomination next August in New Orleans while Sen. Bob Dole talked bravely of "the road to recovery" in Illinois.

Dole's best primary state was Missouri, but even there his lead gave way — victimized by Bush's personal campaigning and television advertisements in the last few days. Pat Robertson, utterly unsuccessful throughout the primary states, led Bush and Dole in the Washington caucuses.

The Democratic race stayed muddled, but with a narrowing cast of characters. Dukakis, Gore and Jackson each earned hundreds of delegates and posted multiple victories on the busiest night of this or any other primary season.

That left Rep. Richard Gephardt the odd man out in the four-way Democratic contest. He won only his home state of Missouri and was failing to qualify for convention delegates in 11 states as he suffered through a virtual collapse of his White House hopes.

Gore captured his home state of Tennessee and added Kentucky, Oklahoma, North Carolina and Arkansas to his column as he jumpstarted his candidacy in the 14 Southern and border states. He ran second to Jackson in Louisiana, Georgia and Mississippi.

To go with the two biggest states of the night, Texas and Florida, Dukakis also won Maryland, Rhode Island and his home state of Massachusetts. He won the Idaho caucuses and had high hopes in Washington, Hawaii and Nevada.

Jackson and Gore — one a black civil rights activist, the other a white son of the South — dueled in a series of Southern contests. In Alabama, the two men swapped leads in the closest Democratic contest of the night.

More than 10 million voters participated in the Super Tuesday contests.

The tally of popular vote wasn't worth anything but it documented the scope of Bush's victories — he showed a 1.2 million-vote lead over Dole.

'Dole not dead,' analyst contends

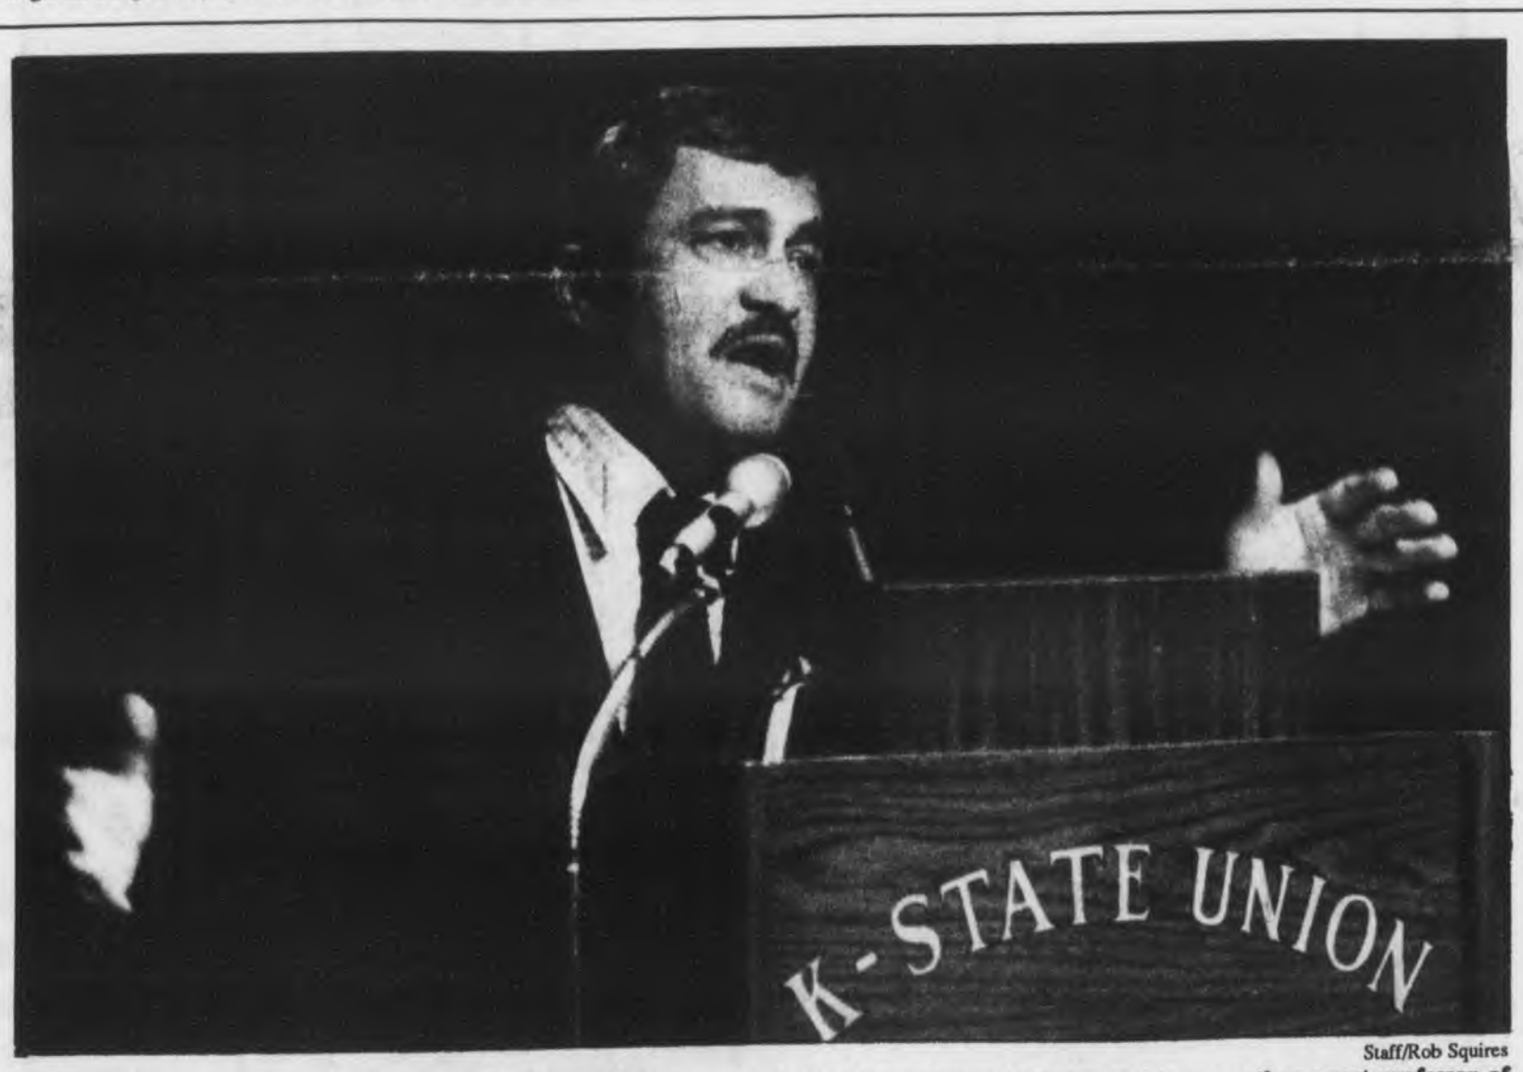
By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

For Sen. Bob Dole, the results of Super Tuesday make next Tuesday's primary in Illinois an important means of demonstrating that his campaign is not over.

"Dole has to prove that Bush can be beaten," said Jerry Rosenberg, assistant professor of political science.

Illinois, with its agricultural nature, would be the ideal place for a Dole victory over Bush, Rosenberg said.

"Dole is not dead," said Joseph Unekis, associate professor of political science. "Lots and lots of things can happen before the (National) Convention. The object of political primaries is not the making, but the breaking, of presidential candidates."



Dole's ability to continue to get contributions will be the deciding factor, not Bush's success on Super Tuesday, he said.

The Rev. Pat Robertson, who went into Super Tuesday in third place, came out of the contest in the same position. He had hoped for a surprising good showing in one or two southern states — just like his second place finish in Iowa. But the results left him with surprising big losses.

In Democratic contests, Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis finished ahead of other candidates, and thus emerged from Super Tuesday as the Democratic frontrunner. Wins in his home region of New England, and in the delegate-rich states of Texas and Florida, put him ahead of the competition in total delegates.

Michael Parenti delivers the lecture "Monopoly Culture and Democratic Struggle" during a Lou Douglas Lecture Tuesday night in the Union Forum Hall. Parenti is currently a guest professor of political science at Howard University in Washington, D.C.

Speaker: Capitalists own America

By Lori Ingmire
Collegian Reporter

The answer to the nation's problems is "democracy, democracy and more democracy," Michael Parenti said Tuesday night at a Lou Douglas Lecture Series address.

Parenti, currently a guest professor of political science at Howard University in Washington, D.C., delivered the lecture, "Monopoly Culture and Democratic Stuggle," in Forum Hall. The speech was the second of four scheduled for the 1988 season of the lecture series.

"You can't sit back and say America is the best country there is," Parenti said. "If you truly believe America is the best country, you must never forget the struggling and fighting that got us where we are today."

America's founding fathers did not hand down Americans' democratic rights, Parenti said. In fact, they voted the Bill of Rights down. They did not believe in a sense of commitment but rather a sense of fear, viewing democracy as a threat to freedom. He said they wanted freedom in order to enjoy their wealth and that they saw democracy as possibly being a prohibiting factor.

"Freedom of speech and the right to talk and fight back were not given to us by our founders, but were fought for by the people," he said. "This process and struggle of democracy is something we're still facing today."

Parenti said the issue of class freedom remains an on-going struggle. Further, he said a "dirty secret" in America today is class, which often is not talked about except in terms of class stratification. He gave the definition of class as relating to means of production, wealth and social power.

"It is not discussed that we are controlled by Fortune 500 or five New York banks," Parenti said. "Capitalistic ownership is highly diffused among these few families."

Parenti said the class system is a reality not confronted. It is a great unexamined question. In his lecture, he presented the idea of the capitalist class, which, he said, is missing in every breakdown given of the whole class system.

"This is the class that owns America — that is the capital of America," he said. "It isn't the small producer or business owner, but the giant multi-national corporation owner."

He referred to the small business owners as the squirrels who dance among elephants. He said there is not that much independent capital, but only the illusion of independent capital. This is the illusion of small business.

The function of capital is to invest it to make more capital, he said. Furthermore, the function of the capitalist class is to create more wealth. The goal is to accumulate profits to invest.

"Not need, but want plus money is equal to buying power and demand," Parenti said. "The secret to getting rich is not hard work, but getting others to work hard for you."

The owning class does not stand naked, he said. People legitimize rules and sanctify beliefs, therefore claiming they are doing what is best for all. Those in this class have always cast about for ways to legitimatize their holdings, Parenti said. He gave the example of America in the late 19th century.

"The railroad presidents, steel masters and others became U.S. senators, church lay leaders, university figures and figures of the fashionable society. They became philanthropers under the theory of 'give a little to keep a lot,'" he said.

What people didn't see, Parenti said, was the starvation of workers, breaking of strikes and the sweat off people's backs used to carve their huge fortunes. Instead, people saw institutions that were built with the intention of conveying the message of what this class of people can do for the country. They turned economic power into cultural power, he said.

"Fortune 500 determines the air we breathe and the images available for consumption," Parenti said. "Capitalism is not an economic system, but a whole social order."

Parenti, who received his doctoral degree from Yale University in 1962, has written several books and articles. He has lectured to a variety of groups and numerous college campuses across the nation.

He has made numerous appearances on radio and television talk shows.

House keeps bill alive despite initial refusal of admissions policy

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — After rejecting it overwhelmingly Monday, the House may try Wednesday to resurrect a bill that would modify the state's traditional policy of open admissions to state universities.

The House voted, 43-80, against advancing the bill to a final vote Monday, but did not strike it from its calendar, keeping alive the measure sponsored by Rep. Denise Apt, R-Iola, chairwoman of the House Education Committee.

Apt said at first there would be no additional effort this session to pass the bill. However, an effort was launched Tuesday to make a second attempt to pass the bill, which remained at the bottom of the House debate calendar.

Majority Leader Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, said an effort to revive it could come Wednesday, the last day for debating bills in the house of origin.

Knopp, who met with Speaker Jim Braden, Apt and other GOP leaders on the fate of the bill, said unspecified amendments were being considered that might gain the bill enough votes to pass it. It needs 20 more than it received on Monday.

There was speculation one amendment being considered was to make the selective admissions policy apply only to out-of-state students. The universities already can set requirements for admitting out-of-state students, but this amendment would mandate minimum requirements.

Currently, the six state Board of Regents universities must admit all graduates of accredited Kansas high schools, regardless of grades, test scores or class standing.

Under Apt's proposal, universities would be required to admit only those Kansas high school graduates who had passed certain required courses in high school.

At a news conference Tuesday, Gov. Mike Hayden said he's not surprised the bill to end open admissions failed.

The House vote Monday was the first time either body of the Legislature has voted on a bill to end open admissions although the proposal has been discussed in committee meetings since last year.

"Changes in education, especially progressive educational reform, have always come slow in Kansas," Hayden said.

But, Hayden said he thinks the Legislature will pass it in the next few years.

"I think it will get more support, especially as people realize the high cost of remedial education," Hayden said.

Unrest continues in Panama City

By The Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama — Demonstrators protesting the strongman leadership of Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega threw up barricades Tuesday in hundreds of blocks in Panama City.

Earlier Tuesday, Foreign Minister Jorge Abadia charged that U.S. military maneuvers along the Panama Canal were "a prelude to an armed invasion."

Small groups of demonstrators, most of them young, built barricades of garbage, tires, street signs and dry palm fronds in central and eastern parts of the capital.

Scores of barriers were set afire and plumes of black smoke rose over the city. The protesters ran when approached by riot troops, whose heavy deployment prevented larger demonstrations.

Many shopkeepers closed early.

Police and soldiers jumped from trucks to chase demonstrators or clear barricades.

The riot troops, wearing gas masks and holding clubs and shields, fired tear gas to disperse protesters. The clang of pots and pans — a familiar symbol now of anti-government protest — rang out from some apartment buildings.

Abadia told a news conference that exercises begun over the weekend by the U.S. Southern Command were "acts of arrogance that are intolerable" and that Panama was "suffering the aggression of a foreign colossus."

The United States has been calling for Noriega's removal since his indictment in Florida last month on drug trafficking charges. U.S. criticism of Noriega increased after he orchestrated the removal of President Eric Arturo Delvalle on Feb. 26.

Ortega cancels truce talks

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — President Daniel Ortega canceled truce talks with Contra rebels Tuesday after the rebels said they would not attend a planned meeting in southern Nicaragua.

Ortega accused the rebels of sabotaging the talks by demanding preliminary discussions.

"This signifies the killing of the possibility of a meeting," he said on Voice of Nicaragua radio, but suggested new talks no later than the third week in March.

Contra leader Adolfo Calero said earlier Tuesday that the U.S.-supported rebels would not attend the meeting scheduled by the leftist Sandinistas.

Kidnappers free 2 in Lebanon

SIDON, Lebanon — The Abu Nidal Palestinian terrorist group freed a British relief agency official and his Syrian aide Tuesday, five days after seizing them in this southern port city, a Sunni Moslem leader reported.

Peter Coleridge, 44, Middle East coordinator of the British relief agency Oxfam, and Omar Traboulsi, 31, appeared physically fit when members of Abu Nidal's Fatah-Revolutionary Council drove them to the Sidon apartment of Mustafa Saad, the Sunni leader.

Abu Nidal's guerrillas seized them Thursday while Coleridge was taking pictures of the Ein el-Hilweh Palestinian refugee camp.

Sanctions expected on Panama

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, seeking to aggravate an already acute cash shortage in Panama, is expected impose new economic sanctions against that country later this week, U.S. officials said Tuesday night.

One official said a "whole panoply" of measures is being considered, including the withholding of a $6.5 million payment due to Panama's military dominated government next week for operations related to the Panama canal.

Final decisions are expected at an inter-agency meeting scheduled Thursday, said the officials, who insisted on anonymity. A formal announcement is likely either Thursday or Friday, they added.

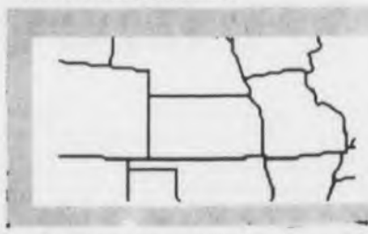
Another sanction being considered is the withdrawal of Panamanian participation in a system of trade preferences accorded to most Third World countries, according to the officials. This would make Panamanian products more expensive in U.S. markets.

Man files suit over spider bite

EVANSVILLE, Ind. — A man who claims he was bitten by a black widow spider during a church bingo game has sued the church.

Kevin W. Leonard is suing Holy Spirit Catholic Church for $1,004.91 in medical bills, $67 in lost wages and an unspecified amount for physical pain and mental anguish.

Leonard said he was bitten on the lower leg as he sat at a bingo table last June. A doctor later diagnosed the bite as having come from a black widow spider, according to Matt Parmenter, Leonard's attorney.



The spider's venom can affect the central nervous system, although it is generally not fatal to adults.

Pay increase small for officials

WASHINGTON — The average college administrator got a 3.3 percent pay increase this year, down from 5.3 percent a year ago, the College and University Personnel Association said Tuesday.

The 3.3 percent increase for 1987-88 was less than the 3.7 percent increase in consumer prices during the same period, and the first time since 1982-83 that the college salaries trailed the rise in the Consumer Price Index.

The association derived the figures from its 11th annual survey of how much colleges pay their presidents, deans and other administrators.

2 boys suspected in shooting

LEAVENWORTH — Federal authorities are investigating the death of a prison guard who was found shot to death at his home on the grounds of the U.S. Penitentiary Monday night.

Two juvenile boys are in federal custody in connection with the investigation of the death of Lt. Phillip Shoats, 38. Leavenworth Police Capt. Richard Campbell said one of the boys is 15, the other 14, and that police arrested them after stopping them in a car.

Shoats was a supervisor of the correctional staff at the prison. Jeff Duncan, executive assistant to the warden, said his body was found at 6:45 p.m. Monday.

Duncan said that Shoats began working for the Bureau of Prisons at Leavenworth in 1975. He later transferred to other federal prisons at Raybrook, N.Y., and La Tuna, Texas, returning to Leavenworth last June.

Drug arrests made in Topeka

TOPEKA — Police sought 15 suspects on drug charges Tuesday after an eight-month undercover operation funded through Gov. Mike Hayden's program against drugs in the state.

An undercover investigator worked in neighborhood clubs and bars, buying and selling cocaine, methamphetamine and marijuana with the $60,000 grant, said Lt. K.C. Blodget.

Police had arrested five people by 10 p.m. Tuesday, and expected to have the rest in custody by early today, Blodgett said.

Appeals board draws criticism

By Mary Strafuss
Collegian Reporter

Although an appeals board is in existence for those students, faculty or staff members who receive tickets on campus, at least one faculty member believes the system isn't working.

Keith C. Behnke, associate professor of grain science and industry, said he appealed a parking ticket, then waited four months to be told his appeal had been denied.

"I'm sure it's a thankless job," Behnke said.

He said he received a ticket after his parking permit had blown off his rear-view mirror.

"I parked legally and did everything K-State asked me to do, (and) I think it's flat wrong," he said. Behnke also said he had two witnesses who said they saw the permit in "plain sight."

Behnke's main complaint is there is no recourse if an appeal is denied.

"I pay $44 for the privilege of working here," he said. "If I don't get here before 8 in the morning, I have to walk a fourth of a mile." He also said he hates to leave campus for fear of not finding a place to park upon his return.

Burney Mendenhall, assistant professor of modern languages and chairwoman of the faculty/staff appeals board, refused to comment on the issue.

The process of appealing a ticket is similar for both faculty/staff and students. However, each has its own committee.

Those who wish to file an appeal must get a form from K-State Police. On the form, individuals appealing the ticket must state what factors led to the ticket and why they think the ticket is unjust.

The only difference between faculty and student appeals is that students must provide a self-addressed stamped envelope with their appeal, said Charles Beckom, chief of campus police. Beckom said that measure saves a considerable amount of money due to the high volume of student appeals.

The appeals system has come a long way, Beckom said. There was a time when the appeals board would come to a meeting unprepared. Now, he said, each member is given copies of the appeals and is asked to look over them before the meeting.

There was also a time when people had an open hearing that would allow them to speak for themselves, Beckom said.

"We ended up not hearing appeals but (hearing) people vent their opinions on board members," he said, adding that people would monopolize the floor trying to intimidate and threaten board members.

The appeals boards "do not make notices" when they plan to meet, Beckom said. Those who would like to attend can listen but not speak.

The student appeals board is made up of volunteers. Students believe they can be the ones to make the system work better and resolve problems, Beckom said. It is a complex system and soon students realize there is no quick-fix solution.

The student appeals board has the largest volume of appeals, Beckom said, adding that some members can be intimidated and subjected to peer pressure.

Beckom said the student appeals board is often flooded and that the "system is ... taken advantage of." And, he said, the faculty board involves a "bogging down of the system."

Sometimes individuals won't have the money to pay the fine, so they will put in an appeal to delay paying the fine, he said.

Both the student and faculty chairperson are responsible for setting up meeting times. There is no minimum or maximum number of times the boards must meet, but both attempt to meet once a month.

The student appeals board has met 13 times since the beginning of the school year, and the faculty board has met three times.

At each meeting, Beckom will attend as an adviser to answer questions. If he cannot attend, he will appoint an officer to take his place.

So far this year, the faculty board has had 149 appeals, with 21 being approved. The student board has had 1,045 appeals, and 337 tickets have been voided.

FAA to inspect smaller aircraft

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Commuter airlines which carried nearly 30 million people last year are being targeted for stepped-up inspections by the Federal Aviation Administration after having fatal accidents and 56 deaths since November.

The agency announced the special inspections of the commuters, which normally fly aircraft of 30 or fewer seats, at a news conference Tuesday. It said about 20 percent of the 173 commuter carriers are expected to be singled out for particuarly close scrutiny.

None of the airlines were identified and FAA officials could not say immediately how the airlines would be selected for special attention.

FAA Administrator Allan McArtor told the news confernce that the agency is concerned because of the rash of commuter accidents in late 1987 and early this year, after the industry had its safest year in 1986.

The seven accidents over a four-month period so far appear to have nothing in common in terms of cause, said McArtor.

The worst of the accidents, involving the Ryan Air Service, killed 18 people last Nov. 23 near Homer, Alaska, while the latest was the crash of an Avair commuter during a takeoff Feb. 19 near Morrisville, N.C. that killed 12 people. Between these two accidents there have been fatal commuter crashes in Nebraska, Alaska, Hawaii, Illinois and Colorado.

McArtor cited the rapid growth of the commuter industry and said measures must be taken to more closely monitor these airlines, which operate under different federal regulations than the large jet air carriers.

Homeless man dies alone in wigwam; children find body

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — The death of Bill Britt, whose body was found in his woods shelter alone and partially devoured by animals, symbolized the fate of society's homeless and eccentric people, a housing court official said Tuesday.

Autopsy results Tuesday showed that Britt, 52, died of hypothermia and was dead two weeks before he was discovered Monday by two of his three children in his makeshift wigwam in Brookline, according to the Suffolk County medical examiner's report.

"Homeless people, people like Britt who say they want to be alone, should be protected in this weather," said Stanton Kessler, a senior pathologist in the medical examiner's office. "He had no food in him. He had no sleeping bag. This type of thing should be prevented."

Kessler said Britt was clothed and wrapped in blankets when he died. Identification was "presumptive," he said, because rodents had eaten most of his face, hands and fingers. His feet were intact because they had been dug into the ground and covered with dirt, for warmth, Kessler said.

Britt died in the woods near the Chestnut Hill Reservoir, near the affluent community of the same name where he was born and grew up. He had lived in the woods since 1969 and did not attract much attention until 1985, when officials began trying to move him into public or subsidized housing.

Britt's continual resistance to being moved brought him national attention and his nickname, "the hermit of Chestnut Hill." At one point, actor Mickey Rooney planned to buy the rights to his story. Last May he appeared on "Late Night with David Letterman."

Chief Housing Court Justice E. George Daher tried to arrange housing and medical aid for Britt despite his repeated lack of cooperation.

"He represents in a microcosm what happens to the homeless, the unfortunates, the eccentrics in this cold society," Daher said Tuesday. "No one seemed to care about him. He should have been monitored. Someone should have checked in on him, rather than have him die a lonely tragic death like this."

There are more than 3,400 homeless people in the Boston area, according to the city Emergency Shelter Commission director, Anne Maguire.

Telefund aids students with financial support

Once a Wildcat, always a Wildcat.

Nothing shows the truth of this statement more than the recent success of the KSU Foundation Telefund. K-State alumni contributed $503,354 to support K-State students. Pledges increased 10 percent over the previous year.

These alumni are true 'Cats fans, willing to support their school by doing more than just attending the games or wearing purple.

But the alumni are not the only heroes in the Telefund story. More than 1,200 faculty and students donated their time to contact alumni for pledges. These are pledges benefitting everyone — not just the volunteers. The donations help students receive scholarships and other educational benefits.

The organizers and directors of the KSU Foundation Telefund should also be recognized. Because of their organizing efforts, the money reaches the University each year.

The Telefund is an excellent example of students, professors, deans and department heads all working together for the same goal. The cooperation and commitment shown by those involved should encourage more to participate in the future.

Media must be allowed to report in West Bank

Israel's decision to close the West Bank to journalists leaves many people angry and nervous.

The world is angry because the decision closes the door to the events taking place in the region. If people cannot see what is happening, they cannot learn about the situation that is causing the death of so many.

The media are particulaly angry. Their job is to bring viewers and readers an accurate account of what is happening. If they cannot go into the places where the disputes are, their ability to do their job is diminished.

The Isreali government said the action was necessary because the Palestinians played on the coverage by increasing violence when the media were around. The government said everyone will be safer if the media stay out.

However, the Arabs probably don't think they are much safer. The decision came after American viewers watched four Israeli soldiers beat two Arab captives. The decision is bound to make Arabs more nervous. Without the world watching every step the Israelis take, the violence could get worse.

Israel said it was standard policy for commanders to close their area when violence erupted. The decision does not mark a change in policy.

Change or not, the area should remain open to journalists — for everyone's sake.

2 months after censorship ruling, long-term implications unclear

Commentary

BECKY LUCAS
Collegian Columnist

I always thought the number 13 was bad news, and ever since Jan. 13, I've found my suspicions verified beyond my wildest beliefs.

On Jan. 13, the U.S. Supreme Court handed down a decision in favor of the Hazelwood School District in St. Louis which will forever change the attitudes of students and journalism advisers across the country.

When the ruling for Hazelwood vs. Kuhlmeier was first released, I vehemently disagreed with the idea but realized I would have to wait and see what implications the ruling would have on high school journalism programs and educators.

At the school at which I am student teaching, I have viewed no changes. In fact, in early February the students ran a center-spread article on acquired immune deficiency syndrome. The article told the story of a young woman in Kansas City who had contracted the disease. A sidebar to the story gave facts about the disease and how AIDS is contracted.

In the same issue of the newspaper, the students ran a story about the Hazelwood ruling. The story gave the facts, that the U.S. Supreme Court had ruled 5-3 in favor of the school district. This ruling, the article explained, gave school administrators the right to "not tolerate student speech that is inconsistent with its basic educational mission even though the government could not censor similar speech outside school." In other words, the court gave the right of censorship to high school principals.

The article also included interviews with the principal and an administrator at the district level. Both officials said they did not foresee any changes in the current policy, which basically left the journalism adviser and the students on their own.

The students were worried when they were writing this article because they were afraid to bring the ruling to the attention of the principal, since some administrators might balk at seeing stories about AIDS distributed in their schools.

However, these students had nothing to fear, and their stories ran as planned. A few weeks after this, I was lucky enough to listen to a group of high school journalism advisers discuss the situation and assess the damage done to their publications.

As the advisers sat in a circle, the dreaded question was posed: "Have any of you seen any changes since the ruling went into effect?"

Silence.

They anxiously looked around the room, almost as if in dread, because they knew once the disease of censorship started, its malignancy would surely grow and spread to other areas that are currently safe.

They shook their heads. "No, no changes."

Then one adviser said, "Yes, my principal has already asked to see proofs of the paper before we go to press."

Oppressive silence permeated the room. Advisers who had looked nonchalant about the subject now sat up and paid attention. If the disease is out there, it's going to spread. That idea was obvious.

Other advisers began talking about what their administrators had said. Some principals had said, "Well I guess I'll have to start looking at your paper now," almost as if another task had been assigned to them.

Some advisers said their administrators had said things in passing, almost in a joking manner. But to this group of dedicated individuals, the idea of censorship in the high school was not funny.

The advisers were looking for rules to play by and finding out that they would have to wait and see what was happening. They wanted to know if they should go talk to the principal about a possibly touchy story, or if they should go ahead and run it, avoiding the possibility of censorship.

But they also knew their jobs could be on the line if they rocked the boat too much.

As the advisers sat in the circle, one idea became evident — some of the smaller schools would have to worry more than the larger schools. One adviser said that if she created too many problems, the local board of education would probably just discontinue the program.

Another adviser who also works with the forensics program reminded the group that the ruling also had the potential to affect any speech program in school, including drama. She said if her principal ever bothered to see some of the material used in forensics, the material would probably be banned. She also explained that the material used by a few of the talented students at competitions would never be material used by the students for a play, but that the material was more mature and better suited for competitions.

The advisers from the larger districts seemed less concerned about the ruling, most of them saying they did not foresee any changes in the future except that they would worry more about potentially problematic articles.

After the advisers had shared their stories about how the ruling had affected their publications, they seemed as confused as ever. The ruling had said administrators had the right to come in and censor articles, but it gave no guidelines beyond the idea of curriculum. But what curriculum — the curriculum for the entire school or just for the journalism class?

So to these dedicated professional educators, few answers had been given and more questions created. But they did know one thing, the malignancy was there, ready to spread to other areas that believed themselves safe.

KU's forum racist

Editor,

KU's decision to allow their organization (the Slightly Older Americans for Freedom) to sponsor a panel of KKK members to speak on state property is based on the upholding of the First Amendment, which guarantees the freedom of expression. Schiappa debates Kingsley by stating that the suppression of the right to speak leads to "mind control" — which, he adds, is precisely what the "Constitution forbids."

According to our most recent Landon Lecture speaker, Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, the framers of the Constitution were purposefully vague. By this, Justice O'Connor meant that the tenets of the Constitution, and by implication the amendments, are difficult and complex to apply to actual situations.

We have recently observed one such difficult and complex application, where school administrators — who Schiappa refers to as "governmental actors" — now have the authority to censor student publications. This "application" of the First Amendment (or perhaps violation, which probably occurred because some unwritten higher principle took precedence over the First Amendment) leaves the door open for other applications, such as the suppression of the KKK's right to express their views on the KU campus.

It appears imperative to Schiappa, Wilbur (who had no thoughts of his own to offer) and the people at KU who are responsible for the KKK panel discussion to uphold the rights, albeit vague, of the First Amendment. This imperative has been echoed by a number of people on the KSU campus as well, with vehemence and conviction. And this frightens me.

I am afraid that the KKK's message to the students, faculty and staff of KU will support and reinforce the racial prejudices which many of them grew up with in their homes and neighborhoods. I am afraid, too, that those who insist with vehemence that such events must occur are supporters of white supremacy. I am afraid, therefore, that what is occurring at KU, in the service of ensuring freedom of expression, is actually a celebration and breeding of racial prejudice — reflecting gross insensitivity and marked disrespect for the feelings of both blacks and Jews.

The presence of the KKK evokes powerful feelings of fear, oppression and rage from many members of these two (and other) groups. How, I wonder, are these feelings going to be expressed on the KU campus? How far, I wonder, are we going to go to ensure that inalienable rights are guaranteed?

It is time to awaken from dogmatic slumber. The groups that are being exterminated by the KKK are no longer feeling protected on the KU and the KSU campuses. Minorities are, by law, supposed to be "protected." When these groups no longer experience themselves as protected, something is seriously wrong. I am fearful of where this wrongdoing is leading, and I question the motivations of those who insist on interpreting the First Amendment according to what, I hypothesize, stems from their own hidden agendas.

Magazine not negligent in running ad

Commentary

WALLY BROCKHOFF
Collegian Columnist

FOR HIRE — U.S. Marine and Vietnam veterans. Weapons specialists with jungle expertise for high-risk assignments in the United States or overseas. Call XXX-XXXX.

I am sure that most of you who are reading this had never seen this classified advertisement that ran in Soldier of Fortune magazine, until recently, when it was the subject of a lawsuit. I am sure that you have never seen it because most Rambo-types who would hold a subscription to a magazine like Soldier of Fortune or Gung-Ho are probably not interested in the rational debate of public issues that an editorial page at least implies.

Instead, they would rather peruse Soldier of Fortune magazine, getting excited when there is an offer for an "authentic" Rambo knife for "only" $4.95.

I am referring, of course, to the recent federal court case which found Soldier of Fortune magazine negligent for running the above classified ad that led to the death of a Texas woman. In the case, Robert Black hired a former Marine, whom he contacted through the ad, to murder his wife Sandra. There was no dispute as to the fact that the ad was responsible for bringing the two parties together. However, based on negligence, i.e. the magazine should have known the intent of the ad, a jury awarded damages of $9.4 million to the relatives of Black. I feel this damage award was made in error.

Now don't get me wrong. I certainly cannot condone the cold act of murder, nor the advertisement of assassination services in any publication, much less one the nature of Soldier of Fortune. The victim and her family have my sympathy, and I can understand the sentiment that "someone" should pay for such an outrage. However, responsibility in this case rests with the victim's husband and his hired assassin, who are serving life terms and/or death sentences, and not with the magazine itself.

The magazine has been held liable on the basis of negligence. Negligence is usually based on some test of "reasonableness," or what precautions a reasonable person would deem necessary to prevent injury. In this particular case, the question is whether a reasonable person would infer that the "high-risk assignments" mentioned by the ad would include murder for hire.

You are a reasonable person and the ad was printed at the beginning of the column; you be the judge. I consider myself to be a "reasonable" person and, if you strip away the emotional plea by the victim's survivors, I cannot see the correlation of "high-risk assignments" to murder, at least not a $9.4 million correlation.

A Supreme Court case, Hamling vs. United States, gives a precedent on which to make the negligence standard. Hamling dealt with a distributor's knowledge of the content of obscene sexual materials he handled, and determined that the distributor could in fact be prosecuted if "he knew the character and nature of the materials." As applied to the Soldier of Fortune case, the magazine would had to have known that the intent of the ad was to offer assassination services.

The magazine's attorney argued that the ads were run to provide employment for veterans who were interested in security guard duty or mercenary fighting overseas. Without any other knowledge, this certainly seems to be a reasonable conclusion as to the nature of the ad. Therefore, as much as I hate to revoke a damage judgment that might put such a trashy magazine out of business, Soldier of Fortune seems to be right in this instance.

Summer financial aid deadline approaches

By Greg Vogel
Collegian Reporter

The deadline for receiving financial aid during the summer session at K-State is rapidly approaching.

The priority deadline to turn in summer financial aid applications is April 8. These applications are available and can be picked up in Fairchild 104.

Several forms of aid will be available this summer: College Work-Study, Supplemental Grants, Perkins Loans, Guaranteed Student Loans and possibly Pell Grant funds if a sudent hasn't used up all the eligibility during the regular academic year, said Larry Moeder, associate director of student financial assistance.

"What we are hoping to do this summer is assist students with Work-Study, Supplemental Grants and the low-interest Perkins Loans and, if possible, avoid the higher interest Guaranteed Sudent Loans," Moeder said.

The process for receiving aid is slightly different in the summer.

Students had to submit a family financial statement for this year, and if applying for aid next year they also had to submit another statement. During the summer, either the current year's statement or the next year's application can be used to determine the amount of aid a student can receive. In addition to the statement, a one-page summer application form must be filled out, Moeder said.

Moeder has found that students always have doubts as to whether financial aid is available in the summer.

"Students are never sure if they can receive funds and further assistance, but this summer looks good for us in the dollars available," Moeder said. "We do have the money available this summer."

One possible reason for the increase in the amount of dollars available for aid is that the Work-Study acceptance rate throughout the year has not been as high, leaving more dollars, Moeder said.

Students even remotely thinking about attending summer school should apply now, Moeder said. This allows them to be in the first round of consideration.

Many students apply late for aid during the summer session, possibly because they decide to attend the summer session at the last minute, Moeder said.

"It is more difficult to help these students because a lot of the dollars may be gone by this time," he said. "So students need to start thinking about it now."

The anticipated date for mailing summer financial aid award letters is April 21, and students have a two-week period in which to accept or reject the award, Moeder said.

One major change this summer deals with Work-Study.

To be employed on campus under the Work-Study program during the summer, a student is not required to be enrolled in any hours during the summer session. The only prerequisite is that the student attended at least seven hours the previous semester, Moeder said.

Landfill controversy addressed; county official presents options

By Shelly Tierney
Collegian Reporter

The state has denied a proposal to extend the closure date of the Riley County Landfill, said Monty Wedel, Riley County director of planning and zoning.

Wedel discussed Manhattan urban area land use planning Tuesday at an open forum sponsored by the League of Women Voters.

"If we don't have any options, (the state) is not going to close it and leave us out in the cold," Wedel said. "We're trying to leave all the options wide open right now."

One possible alternative to a landfill is an energy recovery facility which could incinerate or generate steam from waste products. While this idea is not being rejected, it would require support from several counties to make it economically feasible, Wedel said.

An alternative landfill will probably be in existence upon the closure of the present one in 1990, he said.

The landfill, which was opened in the 1960s, was not professionally engineered, he said. The county took over the sight in 1976. In the first several years of operation, no agency existed to regulate the area.

"It was not an ideal place for a landfill," Wedel said. A lot of development and mobile home parks were permitted to be built adjacent to the landfill — downstream of it, he said.

"If you're going to have a landfill, you try to keep things away from it, and you certainly don't put things downstream of it," Wedel said.

Five counties in this region are implementing the recycling of used oil in an effort to cut down on the amount of waste put into the streams and water supply.

"The more we get out of the stream, the better off we're all going to be," Wedel said.

Wedel's office is also sponsoring a program called "Cash or Trash." The program is designed to encourage people to save used products such as aluminum cans, glass and paper and trade them in for money. The used products will be recycled to save energy and conserve natural resources.

The initial order to close the landfill was delivered July 17, 1987, by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment after water tests from two private wells east of the landfill revealed contamination by cancer-causing compounds.

Retailers choose apparel with students in mind

By Victoria Ohmacht
Collegian Reporter

Wearing a T-shirt that displays a cat about to eat a bird may not be everyone's idea of showing school spirit, but the public spent more than $300,000 on such clothing items at the K-State Union Bookstore in 1987, according to a Union Bookstore official.

The "Cat Food" apparel with a University of Kansas Jayhawk as the intended meal of Willie the Wildcat was one of the most popular items, said Cynthia Dunham, assistant supply department manager. Dunham decides what clothing merchandise is ordered for the Union Bookstore.

To maintain sales, Dunham said she orders generic imprints like "Wildcats" or "Kansas State University" that will have a broad appeal to customers. Ordering more specific imprints can result in unsold merchandise, she said.

"I run into situations where people will want me to carry something, but it's not necessarily the best thing I could do for the store," she said.

Dunham said she considers the public's reaction to certain items as well. One sweatshirt resulted in good sales and negative feedback.

The shirt featured a family wearing football helmets and the words, "Football — fun for the entire family."

"The family (on the sweatshirt) looked really bored, and people loved it and they were coming in to buy it," Dunham said.

However, she pulled the item after complaints from football supporters convinced her it was a mistake.

"To make up for that, I brought in an item that had 'football — No. 1,'" she said. "It didn't sell, and I ended up marking it down."

Dunham said the most difficult part in purchasing is "trying to get a feel for what the students want."

"I'm constantly trying to figure out what is new and different, and what will attract people," she said, adding that more feedback from the University population would influence her decisions.

Like the Union Bookstore, Varney's Book Store in Aggieville "tries to keep in tune with what the students want," said Julie Grant, general supply manager.

Varney's occasionally orders items for specific events, but unsold merchandise creates a storage problem in addition to decreased sales, Grant said.

"It doesn't make good business sense, sometimes, to get something more specialized that might not sell," she said. "Most of (the items) say 'Kansas State University.' If it's for basketball, it will just say 'basketball.' That way it can be bought for both the women's and the men's teams."

Campus's bills increase

By Steven Zadina
Collegian Reporter

Students' may think their apartments' utility bills are high, but K-State faced a $5,970,429 bill for electricity, natural gas, water and sewer during the 1987 fiscal year.

Of those utilities, the campus's water bill has increased the most, said Jack Watson, director of facilities maintenance.

"The water bill is what is eating us up alive," he said.

Last year, K-State paid $236,092 in water bills and $173,442 in sewer bills. The campus' water is supplied by the city of Manhattan.

The campus's electricity rates, Watson said, are calculated by KPL Gas Service on a large power rate. This rate varies according to fuel costs, demand and load.

Rates are estimated to be about 5.04 cents per kilowatt hour this year. Last year's electric bill was $3,454,417.

K-State's natural gas is also supplied by KPL. Bills for last year's natural gas amounted to $2,106,478.

However, this cost is decreasing due to decreasing fuel costs Watson said.

In addition to KPL's service, K-State also generates some of it's own electricity at the power plant on campus.

Lee McQueen, director of facilities engineering, said about 15 percent of the electricity used on campus is generated at the plant.

The plant enables the University to keep the electric bills down by supplying additional electricity and keeping demand down during peak periods so the KPL rate is lower, he said.

Steam created in the plant runs the plant's generators and is used in some buildings for heating.

Each department is responsible for paying their department's phone bills out of their operating budget. The remaining utility costs are covered by the University's funding from the state.

The Kansas Board of Regents sets each University's utility budget based on utility rates in their area and cost per square foot of building space for those utilities.

K-State's estimated cost per square foot is $1.21 per square foot.

Money that is budgeted for utilities, but is not used, is returned to the states' general fund.

Since 1982, K-State has spent about $1 million on energy conservation measures. These measures include insulating buildings and installing storm windows.

Lab upgrade will benefit physicists

By Brad Fanshier
Collegian Reporter

By May 1989, the ions will be flying in the basement of Cardwell Hall — at 20,000 miles per second.

All the excitement in the James R. Macdonald laboratory will be the result of the completion of the $5.1 million upgrade funded by the U.S. Department of Energy. The upgrade includes the addition of a linear accelerator to the existing tandem accelerator, a cryogenic ion source and a copper vapor laser.

"Right now we feel we're right on schedule," said Pat Richard, director of the lab and professor of physics.

Richard said that testing of many of the components has already begun in the lab.

When completed, K-State's accelerator facility will be the only one in the nation dedicated entirely to atomic physics. Richard said researchers at existing facilities must share time with nuclear research.

As part of the agreement with the DOE, the laboratory will be designated a national user facility, which will allow atomic physicists from around the world to apply for atomic particle "beam time." Richard said the work conducted by visiting scientists should not take research time away from K-State faculty and students.

"We will probably be able to accommodate most of the users in the beginning," Richard said. "If the number gets as large as 40 percent of the beam time, we'll have to set up a formal scheduling committee."

Richard said the department will put out a call to the scientific community for users when beam time begins.

The new linear accelerator, when used together with the existing tandem Van de Graaff accelerator, will produce ions — electrically charged sub-atomic particles — moving at speeds of about one tenth the speed of light. Richard said this is four to five times faster than the velocities possible with the tandem accelerator alone.

The new accelerator will allow researchers to study the results of high-speed particle collisions. The addition of a copper vapor laser will allow physicists to excite target atoms to a higher energy state before collision with the ion beam.

Richard said information from the experiments will help researchers get a better understanding of the behavior of atomic particles and explain such natural phenomenon as ionic activity in the sun.

Another important research tool being added to the Macdonald laboratory is the cryogenic ion source, known as CRYEBIS.

One of only seven in the world, the CRYEBIS uses a powerful magnetic field to strip atoms of some or all of their electrons, producing highly charged ions at low velocities.

Richard said testing is in progress on the recently installed CRYEBIS generator, and it should be fully operational before the May 1989 target date.

The laboratory will also house a microcomputer work station that will allow researchers to model their experiments before they begin. The $150,000 computer facility was made possible by a grant from Martin-Marietta Energy Systems Inc., and is divided into two sections.

Richard said K-State is fortunate to receive funding for the upgrade.

Answers on AIDS

Q. What happens when a person becomes infected with the AIDS virus?

A. Not everyone who becomes infected with the virus will actually develop AIDS. Some infected people will develop antibodies to the virus (serving as a marker that the virus had been there at some point), and some may remain healthy and display none of the symptoms of AIDS, though they probably can transmit the virus to others. The long-term effects of infection for this group are unknown.

Others infected with the AIDS virus will develop what is called an AIDS-related condition (ARC), characterized by mild to severe illness.

Finally, others will develop AIDS, indicated by specific life-threatening diseases, such as Pneumocystis pneumonia or Kaposi's sarcoma. It can take anywhere from a few months to several years or more after infection for diseases to develop.

Even for those individuals who develop ARC or AIDS, it is difficult to generalize how serious the disease will be at any point. Some people with AIDS or ARC can have long periods of good health, alternating with periods of illness. Some die very quickly; others may remain generally healthy and very active for extensive periods. Each case is quite different.

Q. How long after infection with HIV does a person develop AIDS?

A. The time between infection with the HIV and the onset of symptoms (the incubation period) seems to range from about six months to five years or more. Infection with the virus may not always lead to AIDS. Symptoms of illness appear in approximately 30 percent of individuals within five years of infection.

Q. If it is as you say, that the medical evidence is so definite and this disease isn't a danger to us, why is AIDS still such a big deal? Parents are picketing schools, people with AIDS are being fired, the military is testing everyone, etc.

A. AIDS raises a lot of fundamental, serious and very sensitive questions and issues that have nothing whatsoever to do with disease or medicine — questions and issues about which many people have extremely strong and very vocal opinion.

AIDS also has lots of elements that make it a sensational topic for the press — sex, blood, homosexuality, drugs and death.

Much of the hullabaloo about AIDS doesn't really relate to the disease itself, or to the AIDS virus itself. It relates to strongly held beliefs and opinions about the behaviors that can transmit the virus, and strongly held beliefs and opinions about the kind of people who most often get AIDS.

The disease is often a political football. Gay rights activists try to use AIDS as a lever to get equality for homosexuals. Fundamentalist religionists use AIDS as support for the argument they have always made — that sex, drugs and homosexuality are immoral, will bring on the wrath of God and should be outlawed. Politicians can be guaranteed a front-page story by proposing some law that will supposedly protect the public from AIDS, even if they have no real intentions of ever pushing the bill to passage, or even where they can't get medical support for the legislation.

And AIDS is a relatively new disease for most people. Since there is no cure, it's scary. We are all afraid of something we are not used to and that we don't fully understand.

And, of course, parents are even more concerned about a new disease where their young children are concerned. They are often not willing to listen to the evidence unless someone will give them an iron-clad guarantee that there is absolutely no possible risk under any aspect of their child's safety and well-being away from the home. Neither can the parents themselves absolutely guarantee the safety and well-being of the child even when the child is at home.

This column is a joint effort between the Collegian and Lafene Student Health Center to inform people about AIDS. Questions may be asked by writing to the University health educator at Lafene or by calling 532-7755.

HAM IT UP!

From swine farm to sack lunch, versatile meat simple to prepare

Being "on your own" is what many students consider to be the main fringe benefit of college life.

Unfortunately, survival isn't always as easy as we think it is going to be. Paying the bills and keeping up with studies often makes it difficult to eat even one good meal a day.

Students often turn to a quick snack (candy bar, chips, etc.) and wind up regretting it later.

Ham is one of the most versatile meats available to the college student. It's inexpensive, easy to work with and good for you.

From snacks to hors d'oeuvres to main dishes, from breakfast to lunch to dinner, ham dishes are easy to create in the oven, crockpot or microwave.

Hams evolved out of the desire to preserve meats for long periods of time. It is thought that the smoking of meat may have originated with the smudge fires that were used to keep insects, birds and animals away from salted meat laid out to dry. The old-fashioned curing and smoking resulted in a dry, hard product, and eventually water was added to the ham to make it juicier.

A piece of fresh pork transforms into a ham through a process which begins with curing. In this step a dry salt may be rubbed over the outside of the ham and then stacked in a cool place until the salt has been absorbed by the liquids in the meat.

If a brine is used, the meat is completely immersed in it or it is injected into the meat. The curing process is to destroy any organisms that would cause the meat to spoil. Sugar and other spices can also be added in this process. Hams are also prepared cured and not smoked.

Some assume that all hams are alike. Not true. There are different types of hams differentiated by the way they are cured and if they are uncooked or precooked. Hams are also labeled by the area of the animal they come from.

There is the country ham or aged ham. It is cured and smoked in the slow, traditional curing processes. Virginia, Smithfield and Kentucky hams are aged hams.

Most hams produced today are what are called mild-cure. These can be bought either uncooked or fully cooked (precooked). Usually there are directions on the packages of these hams that explain how to store and cook them.

There are also canned hams which are thoroughly cooked and need only to be heated. These hams are perishable and should be stored in the refrigerator even while they are in the can. Directions should be followed carefully in the storing and preparation of canned hams.

Hams can be purchased in various sizes from different parts of the animal. Smoked hams — skinned or unskinned, bony or boneless, come from the leg and shoulder of the pig, in weights of up to 16 lbs. Other pork products such as jowls, ribs, and hocks are smoked and cured as ham is. Ham is also sold in steak form, thinly sliced or in chunk form in cans.

Many of the dishes that follow can be made in large quantities that may be saved over long periods of time and reheated. So ham it up!

Deviled Ham Balls

1 4½ -ounce can deviled ham
1 8-ounce package cream cheese

Mix ingredients together. Chill and form into small balls. Roll in grated pecans, or spread on toasted bread and freeze. To serve, put under broiler until bubbly.

Split Pea Soup

1 pound dried split peas, rinsed
1½ pounds smoked ham hocks
1 cup chopped onion
½ cup sliced celery
2 teaspoons salt
6 whole peppercorns
1 bay leaf
1½ quarts water

Put all ingredients into an electric cooker. Cover and cook on low for 8 to 10 hours. Remove ham hocks and dice meat; reserve ham. Discard bay leaf and peppercorns.

Pour soup, about one-fourth at a time, into an electric blender and blend until smooth. Return soup to cooker, mix in ham and keep hot until serving time.

Makes 6-8 servings.

Glazed Roast Ham

10-pound whole smoked ham
Whole cloves

Place ham on a rack in a shallow roasting pan. Roast at 300 to 325 degrees about 2 hours; remove from oven. Cut off rind (if any) and score fat. Insert a whole clove in the center of each diamond.

Spread with one of the ham glazes listed below, and continue roasting about 1 hour or until the internal temperature of the ham reaches 160 degrees.

Makes about 20 servings.

Apricot Glaze (using apricot jam): Combine ¾ cup apricot jam, ¾ cup honey and 2 tablespoons lemon juice or cider vinegar. Spread glaze over ham.

Brown Sugar Glaze: Heat together in a saucepan 1 cup packed brown sugar and ⅓ cup light corn syrup, stirring until sugar is dissolved. If desired, ⅓ cup spiced fruit juice or ginger ale may be substituted for the corn syrup.

He-Man Casserole

½ cup chopped green onion
½ cup chopped green pepper
½ cup chopped celery
6 tablespoons butter or margarine
6 tablespoons flour
Dash of pepper
1 cup chicken broth
1½ cups milk
4 cups cubed, cooked ham
1 package (10 ounces) frozen peas, thawed
4 cups hot, cooked mashed potatoes (stiff)
1 egg, beaten
1 cup (4 ounces) shredded cheddar cheese

Saute onion, green pepper and celery in butter in a saucepan. Stir in flour and pepper. Gradually add broth and milk, stirring until thickened and smooth.

Mix with ham and peas. Put into a 3-quart casserole.

Combine potatoes, egg and cheese. Spoon around edge of casserole mixture.

Bake uncovered at 375 degrees for 45 minutes or until mixture is bubbly.

Makes 8 servings.

Ham Steak Barbecue

1 smoked ham slice, 1½ inches thick
1 teaspoon grated grapefruit peel
1 cup grapefruit juice
¼ cup soy sauce
2 tablespoons salad oil
2 tablespoons sugar
1 teaspoon oregano
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
¼ cup chopped green onion

Place ham slice in a shallow dish. Mix remaining ingredients and pour over ham. Cover and refrigerate 2 hours.

Remove ham from marinade sauce and place on grill over hot coals. Grill 25 minutes on one side, basting with marinade; turn and grill 20 minutes longer, basting occasionally.

Remove from grill and serve.

Makes about 6 servings.

Ham and Cheese Omelet

6 eggs
6 tablespoons milk or water
¼ cup grated cheddar or Swiss cheese
¾ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
3 tablespoons butter or margarine
½ cup diced ham
¼ cup chopped green pepper
¼ cup chopped onions (if desired)

Set out an 8-inch to 10-inch skillet. Beat together eggs, milk or water, cheese, salt and pepper until well-blended but not foamy.

Heat skillet until just hot enough to sizzle a drop of water. Melt butter or margarine in skillet.

Pour egg mixture into skillet and reduce heat. As edges of omelet begin to thicken, with a spoon or fork draw cooked portions toward the center to allow uncooked mixture to flow to the bottom of skillet. Shake and tilt skillet as necessary to aid flow of uncooked mixture. Do not stir.

When mixture no longer flows but surface is still moist, the heat should be increased to brown the bottom of the omelet quickly.

Sprinkle ham, green pepper and onion evenly across top of omelet. Loosen edges carefully, and fold in half. Slide omelet onto a warm serving platter.

Makes 4-6 servings.

After you've bought that ham and tried out some recipes, you may still find you have some leftover meat. There are many different delicious possibilities that can be conjured from ham remnants.

It can be added to sauces or soups to add flavor. And the sandwich possibilities are endless. One recipe for baked sandwiches is to arrange ham sandwiches, fixed how you like them, in a shallow baking dish, and cover with a cheese sauce. Bake until the cheese is bubbly. Serve with a pancake turner, to be eaten with a knife and fork.

Ham can be slivered and cubed and added to salads, scrambled eggs, rice, vegetables and made into stuffings. Ham can be used to stuff hard-cooked eggs or baked potatoes. It can also be made into sandwich spreads and ham loaves. Don't throw that ham out! Make it work for you.

Refund policies vary on returned books

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

Buying and reselling textbooks before the semester ends is a ritual that can either leave students smiling or leave them with a much-reduced bank balance and new additions for the bookshelf.

There is yet another aspect to the process that affects students who drop a class for which a book has already been purchased.

Refunds on returned books can vary significantly, depending upon when and where the book was purchased.

"Books purchased in the (K-State) Union Bookstore can be refunded for up to six weeks after the start of classes," said Judy Lundberg, acting book department manager for the Union Bookstore.

Refund rates are based on the purchase price of the books, and a receipt is necessary any time a refund is sought, she said.

The longer students wait to return the book, the lower the refund percentage rate. Refund percentage rates for the Union Bookstore are:

- 100 percent during the first two weeks after classes begin.
- 80 percent during the third week.
- 70 percent during the fourth week.
- 60 percent during the fifth week.
- 50 percent during the sixth week.

After six weeks, books cannot be returned for refund unless they were purchased within the previous three working days. Then they can still be refunded for 100 percent of purchase price, which is applicable throughout the entire semester, she said.

"There is some latitude to the policy in the event of family emergencies and sometimes exchanges for other merchandise can be made in those situations the student doesn't have a receipt," she said.

"If you buy a new book and write in it, or highlight in it, and try to refund the book, the rate will be reduced to that of a used book, because that is the way we will have to resell it," she said.

People should scrutinize their books thoroughly during the first two weeks of class to ensure all the pages are there and that there are no manufacturer's defects, she said.

"It's important to keep the receipts for the books until the semester is over," she said. "It's not that we're trying to make it difficult, but we are a retailer, and you have to have a receipt to get a refund."

Dan Walter, book department manager of Varney's Book Store, said Varney's has a liberal policy on book returns.

"There's a price to that. We get burned sometimes," he said. "A very few individuals try to manipulate the policy for their financial gain, and unfortunately we have to be on the defensive with our return policies.

"The official policy is that with a receipt, a book can be refunded for 100 percent of purchase price for the first two weeks after the start of classes, for the next four weeks after that, books can still be refunded for 100 percent, providing they are returned within one week of purchase and are in the same condition in which they were sold," he said.

After six weeks, Varney's doesn't allow any returns. By that time people should know what books they will need, he said.

"The danger of not setting some cutoff is that you turn into Varney's Library. People check books out for exams and then check them back in, and we are not a library," Walter said.

"As the manager, I reserve the right to make exceptions in what I consider extraordinary circumstances," he said. "Our goal is to treat people right in all situations."

Walter said the two things people would benefit most from knowing is the value of keeping receipts — because what changes will occur are never known — and to return a book as soon as possible after it has been decided to drop a class.

"If it were my son or daughter and they bombed out on the first exam, what would I want the book store to do for them?" he posed hypothetically. "The golden rule seems to work pretty well."

If students wait to drop a class until the last possible day before receiving an incomplete, the date to receive a refund of any kind will have long passed.

Gunile DeVault, associate registrar, said the last date to drop a class without receiving an incomplete is the end of the 10th week of each semester.

Commission sets water use policy

By The Collegian Staff

Manhattan City Commissioners in a special meeting Tuesday established a water conservation policy, setting guidelines for water use during a drought.

In a drought, Manhattan would use Tuttle Creek Reservoir as a water source. Since Tuttle is a federal reservoir, the city had to design a water conservation policy to comply with federal regulations, said City Manager Mike Conduff.

"The regulations curtail water use for watering lawns, washing cars and recreation in case of a drought," Conduff said.

The plan will be submitted to the Kansas Water Resource Board for approval, then sent back to the city.

"Then the city must adopt it as an ordinance," Conduff said.

"I'm glad to see this happen. We've been lucky in past summers not to be short on water," Commissioner Dave Fiser said.

The commission also proclaimed March 20-26 as "K-State Pageant Week," in honor of the Miss Manhattan-K-State Scholarship Pageant to be held that week. The winner of the pageant will compete in the Miss Kansas Pageant in July in Pratt. The Manhattan pageant is in its 32nd year and is the longest-running preliminary pageant in the state.

Commissioners also declared March 25 as Arbor Day in Manhattan. Assistant director of Parks and Recreation, Ron Fehr, accepted the proclamation. A ceremony will be held at Roosevelt Elementary School at 10 a.m. on Arbor Day to celebrate the occasion.

Quintet to perform in McCain

By The Collegian Staff

Alto saxophonist Phil Woods and his jazz quintet will perform at 8 tonight in McCain Auditorium.

Woods, who majored in clarinet at Juilliard, has been named best alto sax musician by Down Beat magazine 12 of the last 13 years. The Phil Woods Quintet has received Grammy awards for best instrumental jazz performance.

Richard Martin, McCain Auditorium director, described the music the quintet plays as a classic form of jazz. It is also an acoustical form of jazz, in that no amplifiers or microphones will be used. He said the music the quintet plays comes from the era of the 'bee-bop' music.

Appearing with Woods in the concert will be trumpeter-arranger Tom Harrell, pianist Hal Galper, bass violinist Steve Gilmore and drummer Bill Goodwin. This group, with the exception of Harrell, who joined four years ago, has played together for 12 years.

Woods has played in bands with jazz greats Dizzy Gillespie and Benny Goodman. Harrell has also gained experience by recording with Gerry Mulligan, Woody Herman and Lee Konitz. A recent album of the Phil Woods Quintet, "Integrity, The New Phil Woods Quintet Live," won the Italian Gran Prix award for Best Jazz Album. Another album, "Live From the Showboat," was voted by Time magazine as one of the five best pop records of 1977.

The Phil Woods Quintet replaces Art Blakey and the Jazz Messengers. Due to difficulties in negotiating their contract, Art Blakey and the Jazz Messengers were unable to play tonight as originally planned, Martin said. Tickets to the Blakey concert will be honored at the concert tonight.

Concert tickets are on sale at the McCain box office from noon to 5 p.m. Tickets are $15 for the general public, $11 for students and senior citizens on the main floor, $13 and $9 in the lower balcony and $11 and $7 in the upper balcony.

Big Eight foes like Mitch

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Danny Manning of Kansas and Mitch Richmond of K-State top the all-opponent Big Eight Conference basketball team selected by conference players.

The Kansas City Times asked Big Eight players to name the five players from teams other than their own who would make up their all-opponent team. Every active player except a few for Kansas and Missouri participated.

The polling gave Manning, the Big Eight's all-time leading scorer, a total of 88 votes, while Richmond followed with 77 votes.

Others on the first team were Derrick Chievous, Missouri, 71; Jeff Grayer, Iowa State, 69, and Harvey Grant, Oklahoma, 56.

The second team consisted of Stacey King, Oklahoma, 41; Mookie Blaylock, Oklahoma, 19; Scott Wilke, Colorado, 15; Ricky Grace, Oklahoma, 15, and Steve Henson, Kansas State, eight.

Honorable mention: Richard Dumas, Oklahoma State, seven; Lafester Rhodes, Iowa State, four; Henry T. Buchanan, Nebraska, two; Doug Smith, Missouri, two; Lee Coward, Missouri, and John Starks, Oklahoma State, one each.

Players special to coach

K-State Hartman's 'kind of school'

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

This is the fourth installment in a five-part series on the memories of the coaches who coached in Ahearn Field House as told to those in attendance at K-State's alumni basketball reunion Nov. 20, 1987.

Jack Hartman.

The name — by itself — is synonymous with Ahearn Field House. Hartman retired from coaching and K-State after the 1985-86 season, leaving his mark on the University. He coached longer — 16 years — and won more games — 295 — than any Wildcat mentor before him.

In 10 of those 16 years, Hartman guided the Wildcats into post-season play. He's also carved a spot for himself nationally. In the NCAA Basketball Tournament's history, only 38 coaches have 10 or more wins in tournament play — two of them are former K-State coaches, Jack Gardner and Hartman.

Hartman credits his knowledge of the game to one man of legendary status in the Big Eight Conference — Henry Iba of Oklahoma State, who was his college coach.

"In high school I played for one of the nicest guys," Hartman said. "I went to college and played for one of the meanest guys. But I say that with great respect."

Hartman was also a standout football player at OSU — enough of a standout to earn All-American honors.

As for basketball, however, he was more of a bench warmer than a scoring threat.

Coach Iba's influence was the catalyst that guided Hartman into the coaching profession, a profession he never regrets getting into.

"I've never had a real job," Hartman said. "I've either played or coached. It's been fun and I don't regret the choice one bit."

Hartman admitted that his choice to get into coaching was probably not the wisest one he has ever made.

"My high school coach influenced me, and coach Iba influenced me immensely," he said. "I never gave much thought to being anything else except a coach. My dad was mad as hell. He wanted me to be a dentist. I wished I had. I would have made more money."

Ernie Barrett, a former K-State basketball player from 1948-51 and athletic director from 1969-75, made it possible for Hartman to become coach of the Wildcats in 1970.

"I was well aware of the great coaches, (Jack) Gardner, Tex (Winter), Cotton (Fitzsimmons). ...This was my kind of school and my kind of town. Everything appealed to me."

—Jack Hartman

"Ernie was the athletic director at the time and he notified me that Cotton (Fitzsimmons) was leaving," he said. "While I was at Southern Illinois University, we played here twice and got beaten twice. But what I saw impressed me.

"I was well aware of the great coaches, (Jack) Gardner, Tex (Winter), Cotton (Fitzsimmons). ...I also had great respect for Ernie. This was my kind of school and my kind of town. Everything appealed to me."

To Hartman's tribute, he was the only person contacted and brought in for an interview for the position.

"Ernie and I had a great visit about the job the first day I was in," Hartman said. "He asked me the next day if I would like to have the job and I said, 'yes.'"

Hartman said the challenge of coaching at K-State was a welcome one — one in which he had to live up to high expectations from a coaching standpoint as well as from the fans' standpoint.

"Ernie knew it was going to be a tremendous challenge for me," Hartman said. "The coaches before made it a great basketball school, and I knew I had to follow in their footsteps ... That's not easy."

He made it look easy, however, winning three conference championships and finishing runner-up in 10 of his 16 years.

Hartman still resides in Manhattan, and is retired. He still keeps tabs on the 'Cats, who are in the hands of Lon Kruger, one of his former players. Hartman is not a big advocate of moving out of Ahearn and into Bramlage Coliseum.

"I don't like it," he said. "A person cannot go into that place (Ahearn) and not be impressed with what they see. It's got the best damn crowd in the nation and everything else that goes on inside.

"Time marches on though," he added. "It's been awfully good to me, and I know that the new place (Bramlage) will be awfully good to Lon."

But what does Hartman remember the most about Ahearn Field House?

"The players," he said. "The kids whom I had the opportunity to coach and to be with during their college years.

"We've had great people and great quality come through here," he added. "I think the players also realized what the fans meant, and that inspired them to play just a little bit harder and with more determination."

Hartman also remembered the people who frequented Ahearn.

"It was one of the most beautiful buildings when it had people in it," he said. "And one of the ugliest when it was empty. Without any people in it, it's just another building, but it's the people that have made Ahearn Field House."

Snell works in worlds of academia, athletics

By Jim Vader
Collegian Reporter

The National Collegiate Athletic Association plays a major role in men's and women's athletics. This entity of college sports has the final say on rulings and interpretations in any type of question or dispute.

The NCAA is composed of a countless number of committees, and no one knows it better than Bob Snell, head of the civil engineering department. Snell is K-State's representative to the Big Eight Conference, which automatically puts him in the position of the University's representative to the NCAA. He has held this position for the past 12 years.

Snell is also the Big Eight's representative to the NCAA Council, which comprises about 40 members.

"This council acts between general meetings to interpret rules and to act as a board of appeals," Snell said.

He is serving his third year in a four-year term as the Big Eight's representative.

The NCAA is a complex organization, and is divided into three divisions — Division 1, Division II and Division III. Division 1 is further divided into Division 1A, Division 1AA and Division 1AAA.

Snell said the difference between being classified as Division IA, IAA or IAAA depends on the caliber of a school's football program.

Division 1A schools have major college basketball and football programs, while the other divisions place less emphasis on football programs. Examples of Division IA schools are K-State, Notre Dame and UCLA. Division IAA schools include Alcorn State, Eastern Illinois and Furman University. La Salle and American University are Division IAAA schools.

The representatives from these divisions discuss and vote on rules and regulations which go into the NCAA manual, the bible of collegiate athletics. Snell said these rules, however, can be less restrictive than those of a particular conference. He added this is true of the Big Eight Conference.

"(The Big Eight's) rules are a little bit more restrictive than those of the NCAA. (For example), not only will a player in this conference sit out a year when changing schools, but he will also lose a year of eligibility," he said.

Snell said last year, there were more than 160 new proposals to the NCAA manual. Each proposal must be debated on before being voted on.

"In the past, all three divisions would discuss them in one big room. Now, we have started 'federating.' The divisions split up and discuss those proposals that deal strictly with them and vote. Then we get back together and discuss those that deal with all of us," Snell said.

Snell is not just a member of NCAA council. He serves on other committees in the NCAA hierarchy as well.

He is a member of a subcommittee which reviews recruiting procedures and policies. He is also on an appeals committee which hears appeals on the spending of money by a team for use other than that directly related to their sport.

Snell said case the appeals committee dealt with concerned members of a team wanting to use athletic funds to travel to the funeral of a teammate.

"For example, last year a team member died and the team wanted be at the funeral," Snell said. "They could not, because they could not spend the money on a bus."

Snell is also the chairman of the Subcommittee to Stimulate Membership's Compliance and Enforcement Efforts. This committee researches ways so schools know the rules correctly and realize when something is illegal.

"There are so many rules that it is difficult to know all of them and their regulations," Snell said.

The NCAA has been at the brunt of much criticism in recent years over its policies, but Snell thinks the organization is improving.

"I believe that the NCAA has taken steps to improve, especially on hearing appeals to certain rules, because there are exceptions," Snell said.

Triple-A recruit surprise as power hitter for A's

By The Associated Press

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Mark McGwire was all but unnoticed one year ago in the Oakland Athletics' spring training camp.

"I'm sort of glad that happened. I was supposed to go to Triple-A last year, and I was the last one to make the team," McGwire said.

He was able to go about his business quietly, the style he prefers. His business is hitting, and McGwire set a major league record for rookies by hitting 49 home runs.

He came to spring training in 1987 with only a half season of Class AAA ball behind him and several strikes against him. At third base, the position he was still learning, he committed 41 errors as a minor leaguer in 1986.

McGwire agreed to play winter league ball following that season, but he changed his mind and went home early, causing displeasure in the A's front office.

"I had to earn a spot and I didn't know where they'd play me. But I've always believed if you can swing the bat, they'll find a spot for you," he said Tuesday.

"In the offseason, I sat back and realized what I did. I really couldn't believe what had happened to me," McGwire said.

"I might never hit 49 home runs again."

His goal this year: "To win."

"I just want to do what I'm capable of doing. I'll go out there and be an everyday ballplayer, he said.

Detroit error gives Toronto 7-6 victory

By The Associated Press

Rob Ducey scored on an error by Detroit third baseman Luis Salazar in the 10th inning Tuesday, giving Toronto a 7-6 exhibition victory over the Tigers.

Ducey, trying to become the Toronto Blue Jays' center fielder, is also bidding to be the first top Canadian on a Canadian team.

Braves 6, Mets 3

Damaso Garcia sparked the Braves with a bases-loaded double in the eighth inning.

Garcia's line drive to right off loser Tom McCarthy cleared the bases and gave the Braves a 5-2 lead.

Pirates 1, Cardinals 0

Bobby Bonilla drove in the only run with a first inning single and five Pittsburgh pitchers combined on a five-hitter.

Yankees 5, White Sox 3

Lee Guetterman, acquired from Seattle in an off-season trade, pitched three more shutout innings for the Yankees.

Jack Clark's RBI single in the fifth off former Yankees' farmhand Ken Patterson broke a 2-2 tie.

Dodgers 3, Orioles 1

Mike Marshall hit a two-run homer and Steve Sax added a solo blast as the Dodgers improved their spring record to 5-0. Both home runs came off loser Mark Thurmond in the sixth inning.

Cubs 4, Indians 3

Luis Quinones' sacrifice fly off Bill Caudill in the ninth inning drove in Rollando Roomes with the winning run.

Rangers 5, Phillies 4

Pete O'Brien had three hits and Mike Stanley drove in two runs to lead the Rangers.

Royals 4, Red Sox 3

Steve Balboni and Kevin Seitzer hit solo home runs in the sixth inning, powering the Royals over the Red Sox.

Athletics 6, Brewers 1

Mark McGwire, who homered in his last at-bat on Monday, did the same in his first at-bat against Milwaukee. McGwire drove in two runs in Oakland's three-run first inning.

Angels 5, Giants 3

Chili Davis' two-run double was the key hit in a five-run fourth inning that lifted California over San Francisco.

Mariners 6, Padres 5

Nelson Simmons singled home Ken Griffey Jr. in the bottom of the ninth inning to lift Seattle over San Diego.

'Ironweed' fails to stimulate moviegoers

By Gary Leffler
Collegian Reviewer

Whenever two respected and talented actors come together to make a film, magic can happen. There is always the possibility that the combination of talent and chemistry will create a blockbuster film that will make everyone in Hollywood smile. However, most of the time this combination creates a fizzle of a movie — destined only to be an answer to a trivia question.

Oddly enough, the film "Ironweed" falls somewhere between these two extremes. While the performances of Jack Nicholson and Meryl Streep are outstanding, the movie as a whole is stagnant and an effort to watch.

"Ironweed" is a story about bums, set in Albany, N.Y., in 1938. The characters in the film are, by and large, the homeless, penniless and hopeless. The script is based upon William Kennedy's Pulitzer prize-winning novel of the same title.

Movie Review

Unfortunately, Kennedy — who also wrote the screenplay — proves to be a better novelist than a scriptwriter.

The story in "Ironweed" drags along at an excruciatingly slow pace. The film becomes more of a character study than anything else, with the central characters wandering aimlessly around a loosely structured line of action.

The most interesting aspect of the plotline involves a series of flashbacks into the life of Francis, played by Nicholson. In his flashbacks (as well as other hallucinations) Francis sees a group of ghost-like men, all of whom he has supposedly killed. One by one, the cause of death is revealed to the audience. That's about as exciting as it gets.

Streep's character, Helen, is a former singer. During one sequence at a local tavern, she is allowed to take the stage once again. She sings with all the feeling she can muster, imagining the adulation of the patrons who surround her. But as she warbles the last note, we see the patrons as they truly are — sitting in their chairs, annoyed at the interruption.

Slowly, over a two and a half hour period, we learn that Francis is an ex-baseball player and that his family — whom he has abandoned — still lives in Albany. His unexpected visit to them is apparently the climax of the film, determined more by the location in the script than by the intensity of the scenes. From here the film saunters to the end.

The most impressive aspects of "Ironweed" are undoubtedly the performances by Nicholson and Streep. Both have received Oscar nominations for their work, and watching them made it apparent that the nominations were in no way a political move by those holding the ballots. Their portrayals show the desperation, sensitivity, hopelessness and resolve of the characters — attributes that when working against each other make for interesting characters, but not-so-interesting story lines.

Tom Waits turns in a surprisingly pleasant portrayal of Rudy, a fellow bum who is dying of cancer. His offbeat humor and determination to live it up until the end add some desperately needed spice to the story.

Director of photography Lauro Escorel captures the near perfect recreation of upstate New York in 1938 with style and precision. His use of subtle lighting provides an appropriately somber world for us to view.

However, to keep the audience awake — and the ticket sales climbing — the life of a bum must be more interesting than the sights that surround him. If it were not for the performances of Nicholson, Streep and Waits, "Ironweed" would rate far less than a "B-".

Providing you are a die-hard Nicholson or Streep fan, "Ironweed" is well worth a matinee admission price. However, if you wish to experience an exciting story, along with a set of interesting characters, then I would suggest spending the two and a half hours reading instead.

Boulevard expands
Arterial helps business

By Audra Dietz
Collegian Reporter

The southern arterial has opened the east-west traffic flow across Manhattan, and local business owners say it has given them a new stream of customers. The arterial opened on Oct. 10, 1987, and expanded Fort Riley Boulevard east from the corner of 17th Street to Third Street, allowing motorists to travel straight through Manhattan.

Kershaw Ready-Mix, originally located east of the Union Pacific Depot, was forced to relocate so the arterial could be built. Dan Kershaw, president of the company, said moving his business was an advantage.

"We're better off since we moved," Kershaw said. "We now have better access to the north and west, and that's where most of our customers are."

Sonny Ballard said he wouldn't have opened his warehouse, Ballard's Outlet, on Fort Riley Boulevard, if it weren't for the arterial.

"It was a definite factor. We wouldn't have opened the warehouse permanently if the road didn't open," Ballard said.

Traffic on the arterial directly affects business, he said.

"We waited for the road to open before we had our grand opening," Ballard said.

The arterial has helped some businesses in the Old Town Mall at the corner of 17th Street and Fort Riley Boulevard, while other businesses have not been affected.

"There haven't been any accidents yet, but it's my concern there will be."
—Doyle Barnes

"Opening the arterial has definitely increased my business," said Walt Gatsche, owner of The Doug Out, a restaurant and private club. Gatsche has operated his business in the Old Town Mall since 1984.

Don Hodges, manager of Klepper's Korner service station, said he did not know if the number of his customers has increased since the arterial opened.

"In our business it takes about a year to tell any difference. I can't tell right now," said Hodges.

Jan Taylor, owner of Kirby Sales and Service, said her business hasn't improved since the arterial opened.

"I haven't seen much of a change," she said.

Fort Riley Boulevard may not have greatly improved retail business, but it has given the trucking industry a boost. Gerry Kells, terminal manager for Sutterlin Trucking, said the arterial has unclogged the traffic loop surrounding Manhattan, making east-west truck transportation much easier.

"The road has been a great help to our industry. It's made for a simpler operation, and we don't hit those traffic snarls anymore," he said.

There is one problem, however. Heavy traffic on the arterial has made it dangerous for children to cross when going to school. Doyle Barnes, principal of Roosevelt Elementary, said it's not safe for children to cross.

"There haven't been any accidents yet, but it's my concern there will be," Barnes said.

Barnes said he wants the City Commission and the Kansas Department of Transportation to work out a plan so children can cross the arterial safely. "The traffic is just too fast," he said.

Faculty Senate changes policy

By The Collegian Staff

Faculty Senators adopted proposed changes in the General Faculty Grievance Board policy at Tuesday's meeting.

James Koelliker, chairman of the Faculty Affairs Committee and professor of civil engineering, presented the changes to senators.

The most significant change in the current policy creates an ombudsperson position on the grievance board. The ombudsperson would be a past chairperson of the board and would be responsible for providing information about the grievance proposal and leading a person filing a complaint with the board through the initial steps of the grievance process.

The Ombudsperson is new to K-State, Koelliker said. "It just seems like the information is not clear between the grievant or faculty member and the administration in the procedure.

"We need someone to help people understand what's involved in the process. Communication needs to be clear, because sometimes there's a lack of communication between the parties," Koelliker said.

Faculty members who serve as ombudspersons would receive credit toward the faculty service requirements in their contracts, according to the change.

"We recognize the position takes time, inquiry and effort. It's important to have someone look at grievances. Their service is needed because they are effective for all of us," Koelliker said.

He said changes in the grievance procedure would improve the procedure, making it easier to understand.

"We cleared up the procedure so people know what they're doing in more detail," he said.

Bush routed Dole, Robertson and Jack Kemp in state after state by margins of 2-1 or 3-1, and exulted in a "a unique political happening."

He figured to wind up the night with roughly 700 delegates to the GOP nominating convention, out of 1,139 needed to clinch the prize. That meant he had only to win about a third of the delegates to be picked in states that vote later in the year.

Aside from Washington, Robertson's best states were in Texas and Louisiana, where he challenged Dole for second place. But the former TV evangelist was running third in his home state of Virginia and was nowhere near the 200 or so delegates he said he needed to take home for the night.

Kemp was in fourth place in most of the states, and was a candidate for withdrawal from the race.

"You've given me and Barbara a tremendous lift," Bush said in Houston.

And indeed the voters had.

The vice president led for over 550 of the 712 Republican delegates at stake. Campaign manager Lee Atwater predicted the vice president's total for the night would exceed 600.

Bush romped to victory in Texas, Florida, Georgia, Virginia, Kentucky, Mississippi, Alabama Maryland, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Louisiana, Arkansas and Massachusetts. Oklahoma and North Carolina were closer calls — but landed in Bush's column anyway.

Dole's best state was Missouri, where his lead was paper-thin.

Dole congratulated the vice president on an "extremely good day," adding, "He'll probably sleep better than I will." But the Kansas senator tried to turn the talk to next week's Illinois primary, saying, "Tomorrow we will be on the road to recovery."

Dukakis was running second in Arkansas and Kentucky to go with his victories, and called Super Tuesday "a very, very special day for us.... I feel good about the South."

He also took a look at the returns — his and Gore's — and immediately took a shot at his rival from Tennessee. "You can't win the Democratic nomination with a Southern strategy," he said.

Gore said he was the man to lead the Democrats to victory in the fall, and fired right back at his New England rival. "I think Mike Dukakis is going to represent for many voters the same old formula that led to the loss of 49 out of 50 states twice in the last five elections," Gore said.

He promised a "long, hard-fought contest" for the nomination. Next stop for Gore: a weekend duel with Jackson and Gephardt in South Carolina.

Jackson won in Virginia, Georgia, Mississippi and Louisiana. He was running second in Florida, Missouri, Tennessee, Massachusetts, Maryland and Rhode Island as he parlayed his black political base into a mass of delegates. He lost a close race to Gore in North Carolina — all and all a large improvement over 1984 when Jackson won only Louisiana among the 20 Super Tuesday states.

"We've gone from a narrow mainstream to a broad-based river," Jackson said. Network polling-place interviews with the voters showed him gaining nearly 10 percent of the white vote, roughly double his showing of four years ago.

South and around the country because he appeals to certain groups (of voters)," said Linda Morse, Riley County Democratic chairwoman.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, who was predicted to finish especially well in the South, lived up to those expectations. Although he did not finish ahead of Dukakis as some had predicted, he did demonstrate the ability of his organization to secure large numbers of delegates in key contests.

"He (Jackson) is in it to make a point and to gain concessions on the Democratic platform," Rosenberg said.

Placing third behind Dukakis and Jackson was Sen. Albert Gore of Tennessee, who has made his entire candidacy revolve around finishing well in the South — his home region. Having declined previous races in order to concentrate on Super Tuesday states, he received the response he was depending on.

"He (Gore) knew where his support was, and I think he has been justified in going after it. Now he has a record of support to build on," Morse said.

Rep. Richard Gephardt also finished as predicted, with a sole win in his home state of Missouri.

Although the immediate results of Super Tuesday are known, its effects on future presidential primaries is not.

"The mechanics of Super Tuesday — to encourage a Southern candidate — has not worked if Dukakis, a liberal Northerner, can fair as well as anyone else," said Charles Griffin, assistant professor of speech, who teaches a course on presidential rhetoric.

Panama

But a spokeswoman for the Southern Command, speaking on condition of anonymity, denied any hostile intent in the 5-week-long maneuvers, saying they were regularly scheduled annual exercises. They involve about 680 soldiers from U.S. military installations in Panama and U.S. National Guard members.

Abadia said Panama "cannot interpret ... (the maneuvers) as anything but the prelude to an armed invasion of Panama and if we are mistaken, let them demonstrate that we're mistaken."

Dennis McAuliffe, administrator of the Panama Canal Commission, reported that the canal is operating normally, though U.S.-Panamanian tension has caused strain on canal workers.

"No slowdown, no work stoppage, no troubles, no problems pertaining to payment," he said.

The government set up dozens of mobile banks and special cashing posts Tuesday for retired people, who took to the streets Monday when they could not cash pension checks.

The government said the payment centers would stay open until all 60,000 pensioners cashed their checks for the first two weeks of March.

Admissions proposal struck down in House

By Janelle Larson
Collegian Reporter

Qualified admissions has been discussed and debated on college campuses and in the Kansas Board of Regents' board rooms since last spring. It finally reached the Kansas House, where it was defeated Monday.

On Wednesday, the House struck the bill from its debate calendar, ending all possibility that it might be considered by the Legislature during this session.

The bill, which would have required that students seeking admissions to a regents university take a pre-college curriculum while in high school, was sponsored by Rep. Denise Apt, R-Iola.

"I knew it would have a rough going once it got to the House," said Apt, chairwoman of the House Education Committee. Apt said there was "no chance of a compromise."

The No. 1 complaint with the bill, Apt said, was that people believed it challenged the philosophy that higher education is available for everyone.

"There was also concern that the required curriculum would take time away from other high school activities," Apt said.

Sen. Joe Harder, R-Moundridge, chairman of the Senate Education Committee, said that while he is in favor of the concept of qualified admissions, he had some problems with the bill.

"I have doubts as to whether some small schools could handle offering the pre-college curriculum," Harder said. "We need to set up a system to take care of this before we pass a bill."

Recently, Kansas requirements for high school graduation in several areas have been increased by the State Board of Education, resulting in a defacto increase in the admissions requirements at the state universities.

Kansas high school graduation requires four credits in English, two credits in math, two credits in natural science and three credits in social science. The curriculum proposed by the Board of Regents added one credit of math, one credit of natural science and two years of a foreign language.

Regents Chairman Donald Slawson is still optimistic about the eventual passage of a similar bill.

"It's a national trend," he said. "Qualified admissions would raise the level of quality of education across the state. Students would be better prepared, learn more and have better study habits."

The bill had trouble in the Legislature, he said, because it was misunderstood. Slawson and the other Regents spoke on behalf of the bill to legislators, Gov. Mike Hayden and community groups.

As proposed by the Regents, Kansas residents who have graduated from an accredited Kansas high school seeking admission to a regents university would have to meet at least one of the following criteria: have completed the pre-college curriculum with a grade point average of 2.00; have an ACT composite score of 23 or higher; or rank in the top one-third of their graduating class.

Admission to all regents universities would be granted to Kansas residents under the age of 21 who have earned a GED with an overall score of 54 and to residents over the age of 21 who have graduated from an accredited high school or earned a GED with an overall score of 50.

Kansas residents with 24 hours of transferrable course work with a GPA of 2.00 from an accredited college or university would also be admitted.

The bill included only the pre-college curriculum requirement. This is the third bill Apt has presented to set admissions requirements to Kansas universities.

Had the bill passed, it would have taken effect July 1, 1992, and the foreign language requirement would have taken effect in 1994.

The Student Advisory Committee to the Board of Regents, composed of the student body presidents from regents institutions, did not support the regents' proposal entirely, said Troy Lubbers, student body president.

Lubbers did say that if Apt's bill was the only proposal modifying admissions standards, it would have been acceptable to the committee.

Because nearly one-fourth of the freshman class does not return to K-State after the first semester, Lubbers said, something needs to be done.

"This process will move the screening one semester earlier — saving resources and providing for a more even enrollment," Lubbers said.

Associated Students of Kansas, the lobbying group for students at regents universities, studied the possible effects qualified admissions would have and submitted a report to the regents in September.

According to a 1986 report sponsored by higher education associations including the American College Testing Program, the College Board and the National Association of College Admissions Counselors, only 15 percent of four-year public institutions have open admissions.

Among four-year public institutions, 94 percent require a high school diploma for admissions. Of that group, 60 percent have additional college preparatory requirements.

The survey reported an increase in both the percent of institutions requiring certain high school courses and in the number of credits required as a condition for admission.

Meese asked to step down

Senate committee continues probe

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Eleven Democrats on the House Judiciary Committee asked Attorney General Edwin Meese III on Wednesday to step down temporarily until independent counsel investigations into his conduct are completed.

Meese spokesman Terry Eastland said the attorney general would not comply because, "No one should be urged to step down from a government position simply because that person is under investigation."

The lawmakers made their request in a letter to Meese, and five of them held a news conference to elaborate on their remarks.

Rep. Barney Frank of Massachusetts, one of the signers, denied that the signers had a political motive, saying, "Ed Meese is the best thing to happen to the Democratic Party."

Another signer, Rep. Bruce Morrison of Connecticut, said the standard Meese is setting for ethical conduct is "not in the slammer."

Meese has been under criminal investigation by independent counsel James McKay since last May 11. McKay has been examining Meese's involvement with scandal-plagued Wedtech Corp., and with a $1 billion Iraqi oil pipeline project.

McKay also has been examining the attorney general's involvement with the regional Bell telephone companies at a time when he owned $14,000 in phone stock.

In addition Independent Counsel Lawrence E. Walsh, investigating the Iran-Contra arms and money affair, has called Meese before a grand jury numerous times.

"We strongly believe that your increasing inability to spend time on the day-to-day demands of your job, the deteriorating morale at the Department of Justice and the continuing cloud over your office are undermining your ability to act effectively as the nation's chief law enforcement officer," the Democrats said in the letter.

The letter said the pending investigations "detract from the time required to properly administer the Department of Justice.

"The pervasive perception that you have allowed personal considerations to encroach on your constitutional responsibilities threatens to breed contempt for your office, your administration and the rule of law itself," the lawmakers said.

Eastland responded, "This is an old idea, a politically partisan idea and a thoroughly bad idea."

He said Meese "has every intention of serving to the end of this term. He has spent some time with his lawyers on the investigation, but there has been no serious subtraction of his time or effort from leadership of the Department of Justice."

Sponsors withdraw fee referendum proposal

By Erwin Seba
Government Editor

Sponsors of a bill calling a for a referendum on a student fee to aid the deficit-plagued KSU Childcare Cooperative have withdrawn the bill from Thursday's Student Senate agenda.

The bill was taken off the agenda because fee supporters believed they would not have had enough time to inform students about the co-op's need for additonal financing, said Student Senator Brenda Halinski, senior in elementary education.

"We wouldn't have had enough time to get all of the information out to the students, so everyone would have adequate information to make a responsible vote," Halinski said.

If senators had passed the bill, the referendum would have been held March 22, the day after classes resume following spring break.

Halinski said the referendum would have to have been held on March 22 because all fee increases for next year must be submitted to the Board of Regents for approval by that date.

Halinski said no efforts were made to seek a waiver from the regents' deadline so a referendum on the fee could be held at a later date.

Sponsors also said they were concerned the lack of information about the co-op's financial situation would have caused a poor turnout for the referendum, leading to its defeat and effectively killing any possibility for Senate to create a co-op support fee next fall semester.

Halinski said failure of the referendum "would have killed all chances of coming back at a later time."

Referendum questions may only be adopted if one-half of one-third of the student body votes for its passage or if a two-thirds majority of those voting in the referendum vote for the question's passage.

"I don't think we would have gotten a third of them out there for it," said Stu Duncan, graduate in agronomy.

"We just got caught in a time warp."

Both Halinski and Duncan said a co-op support fee may be considered by Senate in the fall.

But, Duncan said co-op officials need to develop a plan for reducing their debt before they make another request from Senate for a fee.

"They need to show possible implementation (of a plan) to get themselves on a solid footing," he said.

Last Thursday, Student Senate rejected a proposal to create a co-op support fee by a vote of 27 against, 22 in favor of the proposal. That bill would have created a $1 per semester fee for full-time students. Part-time students would have been required to pay 50 cents per semester and students enrolled in six hours or less would have paid 10 cents for each hour in which they are enrolled.

In December 1986, the Department of Housing took over the financial and management responsibilities from the co-op when it was discovered that the child care facility was running a $30,000 deficit.

Survey: Students support co-op

By The Collegian Staff

Although K-State students probably won't get the opportunity to vote on it, an overwhelming majority of students polled by the Collegian this week said they would support an increase in student fees to help fund the KSU Childcare Cooperative.

Of the 400 students polled, 314 — or 80 percent — said they would vote for an increase in fees. Seventy-four students opposed the measure, and 12 were undecided or had no comment.

Respondents were chosen from this year's student directory using a random selection method, and the scientifically conducted poll has a margin of error of 5 percentage points, with 95 percent confidence. For example, an answer showing 20 percent for a question could range from 15 percent to 25 percent for the entire student body.

Collegian survey

Respondents, who were polled Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, were asked if they would approve raising student fees $1 per semester for full-time students and 50 cents per semester for part-time students.

Of the students polled, 51 percent were female and 89 percent were undergraduates. The remaining 49 percent were male and 11 percent were graduate students. Nine percent of the respondents have children.

A Student Senate bill that would have passed the co-op decision to the students was withdrawn Wednesday from tonight's Senate meeting agenda. The bill's sponsors said they didn't think there would have been enough time to educate students on the needs of the debt-plagued co-op before students had to vote on it.

6 killed in Soviet hijacking

MOSCOW — Armed hijackers seized an Aeroflot jet in an attempt to flee the country, but they were foiled in a shootout with authorities that killed three passengers, a stewardess and two of the hijackers, Tass said Wednesday.

The official news agency reported the incident on Tuesday and called it a "terrorist act."

Tass said others aboard the plane were injured, but did not say how many or indicate the severity of their wounds.

The Tupolev-154 was to have flown from the Siberian city of Irkutsk to Leningrad, with a stop in the Ural Mountains city of Kurgan. Tass did not make clear where the plane was when the hijack attempt occurred.

Tass said it had been informed by the Soviet Civil Aviation Ministry that "armed criminals" had seized the Tu-154 with the aim of flying it out of the country.

"Measures were taken to render the criminals harmless," Tass said, indicating a shootout ensued.

Hart may withdraw from race

DENVER — Former Sen. Gary Hart, his campaign battered by a string of weak showings, has put travel plans on hold and scheduled a news conference, and a broadcast report said he was ready to call it quits in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

KUSA-TV said Hart told campaign workers at his Denver headquarters on Wednesday that he would withdraw from the race. He said he would try to continue to get his message to the country, but will choose other forums for doing it, the television station said.

The report followed a Federal Election Commission announcement Wednesday that Hart had not received enough support to continue to be eligible for federal campaign funds.

China to accept Peace Corps

WASHINGTON — China has agreed in principle to accept Peace Corps volunteers, Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian said Wednesday.

In a speech at the National Press Club, Wu said details of the program are still to be worked out, but that "China has adopted a positive attitude on this matter."

He called it "an agreement in principle."

An agency official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the corps had "been interested for some time in seeing this. China could benefit from our programs."

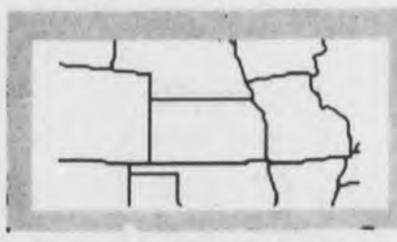
Wu's announcement came during a question-answer session after a speech at the National Press Club. He also welcomed a Reagan administration decision to lift sanctions on sales of new high technology to China because it is satisfied that country is not selling Silkworm anti-ship missiles to Iran.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz informed Wu during a meeting Tuesday afternoon that the restrictions would no longer apply.

Panama hero's nephew defects

WASHINGTON — A nephew of Omar Torrijos, a national hero in Panama for his role in negotiating the Panama Canal treaties, has broken with his country's military-dominated government and flown to an undisclosed location in Washington, diplomatic sources said Wednesday.

Santiago Torrijos, about 40 years old, left his post Monday as chief of Panama's consulate in Los Angeles and is joining forces loyal to ousted President Eric Arturo Delvalle, the sources said.



Telephone calls to the consulate Wednesday afternoon were not answered.

Torrijos is the son of a brother of Omar Torrijos, the former head of the Panamanian National Guard, now known as the Panamanian Defense Forces.

Students cook giant burrito

PORTLAND, Ore. — High school students cooked up what they hope was the world's largest burrito to feed some of the city's needy and maybe earn a spot in the Guinness Book of World Records.

Creating the 1,492-foot Mexican specialty consumed 1,200 tortillas, 461 pounds of meat, 3,400 olives, 32 pounds of tomatoes, 14 pounds of onions, and 71 pounds each of salsa, sour cream and lettuce, said Betty Swan, cafeteria manager at Lincoln High School.

Around The Region

4 indicted in loan fraud at WSU

WICHITA — Four people were indicted by a federal grand jury Wednesday in connection with fraudulent student loans made at Wichita State University.

The charges are the first since the university uncovered problems in 1986. Officials estimate as many as 300 people may have defrauded the federal government of up to $600,000 in student loan monies.

Spring O. Collins, 30, and Linda M. Lewis, 31, both of Wichita, were charged with making a false writing and providing Social Security numbers they knew were incorrect. Hershel L. Presley, 33, and Kevin K. Beasley, 25, both of Wichita, each were charged with one count of making a false writing.

Each of the counts carries a possible maximum penalty of a $10,000 fine and five years in prison.

U.S. Attorney Ben Burgess said other cases still were under investigation. He said a grand jury could return indictments in the remaining cases next month. Burgess refused to say specifically how many more defendants there might be.

Explaining why it has taken more than 18 months to bring charges in the cases, he said the investigation was time consuming and involved a lot of paperwork.

Brother pleads guilty in death

LEAVENWORTH, Kan. — A Junction City man accused of accidentally running over his brother with a pickup truck at the Kansas Turnpike service area near Lawrence in January pleaded guilty Wednesday to aggravated vehicular homicide.

Damon Helmig, 26, of Junction City, faces sentencing April 8 in the death of his brother Darren, 23. County Attorney Frank Kohl said counsel for both sides would not oppose probation if survivors requested it.

Leavenworth County District Court Judge Frederick N. Stewart dismissed charges of drunken driving and failure to report a fatal accident.

Legislators pass AIDS bill

Physicians may have to report victims

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Physicians would be required to report the names of all patients with AIDS to the Department of Health and Environment under a bill passed Wednesday by the Senate.

The Senate passed the measure, 36-4, after a 2 and one-half hour debate during which several amendments calling for more aggressive measures to combat spread of the disease were rejected.

The bill, along with 12 others debated and passed by the Senate, now goes to the House.

The debate was punctuated with warnings about the catastrophic potential AIDS has for the nation. Sen. Edward Reilly, R-Leavenworth, called it "the bubonic plague of this century."

Sen. Dick Bond, R-Overland Park, called the bill a "measured approach, a careful approach, a reasonable approach to a very difficult and ominous problem."

He said 117 Kansans have been diagnosed with AIDS since the disease was discovered in 1981, 70 percent of whom have died.

In addition to the reporting requirement for doctors, the bill would direct the secretary of health and environment to adopt whatever rules are necessary to prevent and control the disease.

"It gives the secretary broad authority to meet unknown and catastrophic problems presented by the disease," Bond said.

Information about AIDS patients would be confidential under the bill. Divulging such information would be a misdemeanor punishable by up to a year in jail.

The bill also would allow victims of sexual assaults to request that a judge order an AIDS test for the convicted assailant. It would also allow Kansans to take AIDS tests anonymously at one of 42 testing centers across the state. Those tests currently are confidential.

Army helicopters collide, crash; 17 soldiers killed in catastrophe

By The Associated Press

FORT CAMPBELL, Ky. — Army crews Wednesday retrieved the last eight bodies of 17 soldiers killed when two helicopters on a night training mission collided, then plunged 250 feet to the ground and caught fire.

The UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters from Fort Campbell spewed wreckage for hundreds of yards and charred the partially wooded, gently rolling site six miles from the choppers' air field Tuesday night.

"One aircraft is located in the trees. One aircraft is right on the edge of a clearing," said Maj. Randy Schoel, Fort Campbell spokesman.

It was the worst Army aviation disaster since 248 soldiers based at Fort Campbell were killed in 1985 in the crash of a chartered plane in Gander, Newfoundland, Schoel said.

The Blackhawk, one of the newer helicopters used by the Army, Air Force and Marine Corps, has been grounded four times in three years. Last summer officials said about 40 people had been killed in crashes of the helicopter since 1978.

Four bodies were taken from the wreckage of each helicopter Wednesday, Schoel said.

The Meaning of History
Nicolas Berdyaev

"The path of freedom is difficult and tragic, more beset than any other with heroic responsibility and martyrdom. The paths of necessity and compulsion are easier, less tragic and less heroic. That is why the historical process shows so many derogations from the path of freedom to that of compulsion. This is true of the religious as well as of the secular experience. The temptation is superbly expounded by Dostoievsky in his Legend of the Grand Inquisitor. The Grand Inquisitor wishes to relieve men of the burden of freedom, so that they may all be happy. Mankind yielded to this temptation in the Inquisition and does so again in our own time in the religion of Communism, which is simply the doctrine of the Grand Inquisitor based on the fall from the path of freedom to that of compulsion, so that mankind may be delivered from the burden of its tragic destiny . . . The Christian philosophy of history is essentially apocalyptic."

Pat Robertson's actions raise serious questions

A federal judge's dismissal Monday of a libel suit brought by Republican presidential candidate Pat Robertson against former Rep. Paul McCloskey Jr. of California raises serious questions about the former television evangelist's character.

Questions which are especially troubling given Robertson's campaign emphasis on morality, anti-communism and a strong national defense.

Robertson filed the suit after McCloskey charged that Robertson had used his father's influence to avoid combat duty in the Korean War. Robertson had claimed in campaign literature that combat service in Korea was proof he was tough enough to be president.

McCloskey, who served in the same Marine Corps unit as Robertson, said their unit was sailing from the United States to Korea when it stopped over in Japan. While in Japan, Robertson called his father, Sen. A. Willis Robertson, and asked him to arrange for Robertson to be assigned to a non-combat unit. McCloskey further stated that when his unit sailed from Japan, Robertson remained behind.

When McCloskey publicly made his allegations, Robertson filed a $35 million libel suit against the California politician and dropped all references to combat service in Korea from his campaign information. McCloskey welcomed the suit, saying there was no better place to discover the truth than in a courtroom.

As more members of the Marine unit both men had served in came forward to corroborate McCloskey's assertions, Robertson said less and less about vindication in the courtroom.

When the case was scheduled to begin March 8, the same day as the Super Tuesday primaries, and was expected to run for at least three months during which time primaries in Illinois, New York and California are scheduled, Robertson apparently decided avoiding bad publicity was more important than vindication and asked U.S District Judge Joyce Hens Green to dismiss his suit.

Green granted Robertson's request with something extra thrown in. Green dismissed the case "with prejudice," finding McCloskey had committed no libel and making him the winner of the case and denying Robertson's right to sue McCloskey over the charges in the future.

Robertson's reaction? He said the judge gave him "a real victory. ...And I have the privilege of suing him once the primary is over."

Given the above statement and other inaccurate statements Robertson continues to utter, it seems apparent that Robertson has no respect or concern for truth in his campaign. He will say or do anything to become president.

Robertson's methods are the tricks of tent-show evangelists who are more concerned with the size of their draw than such moral values as integrity. Perhaps the former Rev. Robertson should be reminded of a question he should be well-familiar with: "For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

U.S. reacts peacefully to Panamanian crisis

A Central American country's democratically elected president is ousted from office by a right-wing, military strongman. How does the United States respond?

If history is any guide, it responds by either A) sending strongly worded messages of disapproval about the overthrow; B) threatening military retaliation unless the government is restored; C) embracing the strongman as a constant fighter of communism in the region; or D) cooperating with the opposition to the strongman and putting pressure on the country's already weak economy by freezing its assets in the United States and supporting non-payment of taxes and fees by outside countries.

With the recent developments in Panama of military leader Gen. Manuel Noriega being indicted in the United States on drug charges and then his subsequent ouster of President Eric Arturo Delvalle, U.S. policy makers have had a chance to try a different approach to the situation there. It is refreshing to see a right-wing dictator being shunned by the United States rather than embraced under the guise of a commie fighter.

What makes the U.S. action even more remarkable is that it has been effective so far in disrupting Noriega's control of the country. Effective, non-military action against undesirable elements in the world has been something at which the United States has not been very successful lately.

The economic pressure of freezing all Panamanian assets in U.S. banks — plus pressure the United States and other countries have applied by refusing to pay canal fees, taxes and registration fees to the Noriega government — has proven very successful. It has shown that the United States can deal effectively with illegal, undemocratic governments without resorting to saber rattling.

It is hoped this is all that will be needed to remove Noriega from the power he does not deserve and put the democratically elected president back where he belongs, without any military or covert operations. If the Panamanian situation does deteriorate, however, the United States will have taken the opportunity to use peaceful measures as the first resort and not the last.

Jesse Jackson's accomplishments show he's worth a second glance

"Education is not a dispensable social program. It is a defense act. Any nation that spends 55 cents of every federal tax dollar for the military and only 2 cents for education has to reorder its priorities."

—Jesse Jackson

Commentary

MICHAEL NICHOLS
Collegian Columnist

Maybe I am not the only one in this country bored with the ongoing process of determining the official candidates for the November presidential elections. I hope I am also not the only one who has determined the reason for this increasing apathy — namely, a lack of issues.

In preparation for Super Tuesday, we did not witness any fresh or bold idea come from most candidates. Other than Kansas' own Sen. Bob Dole's inane remarks concerning possible military intervention in Panama, the average American heard or saw little of interest from the majority of presidential hopefuls on countless television newscasts. Republicans became a tad more conservative, while the Democrats circumvented liberal topics to avoid antagonizing hard-line Southern conservatives.

And so, once more, all the smiling contestants — in the monumental beauty pageant some refer to as the electoral process — failed to address the issues for which they supposedly stand.

All, that is, but one.

Of all the so-called liberals and progressives in the Democratic Party, only Jesse Jackson has remained consistent with the platform ideals he started out with. Furthermore, Jackson is perhaps the only candidate fit to be termed a progressive — with an impressive list of issues apparently ignored by other candidates.

None of the other candidates can claim to have gone to jail dozens of times for protesting the lack of civil rights in the United States. Neither have any of the other candidates gone to South Africa, nor have they come up with a comprehensive plan to end apartheid with minimal violence and promote just, economic development for the region. And though practically all candidates — whether Democrat or Republican — posthumously glorify Martin Luther King Jr., the only candidate to march with him in dozens of Southern cities was Jesse Jackson.

But these facts alone seem to qualify no one for the presidency.

Perhaps those who criticize Jackson for lack of administrative experience forget the fact that he is one of the nation's most prominent political activists. In his lifetime, Jackson has brought forth more issues, be they controversial or not, than most candidates will even care to discuss. Jackson has obviously never held public office, but would a term or two in the Senate or the House better prepare him to run the country?

And why this apparent disbelief of Jackson as a potential president by so many people? Could it be that he is black? That he has never held office? No, it runs deeper than that.

Jackson is a nuisance to many people because he is the only candidate who poses a threat to the establishment. Any candidate who talks about free choice relative to abortions, inequality as the main cause of crime, the urgent need to phase out nuclear weapons and nuclear power plants, and education as a top priority in America will be considered a threat by those who are comfortably apathetic in the status quo. And these are only a few of the issues he not only mentions in speeches but, more often than not, expands upon at great length, proposing viable alternatives to alter the situations.

At this stage in the presidential race, the most damaging perception of Jackson is undoubtedly that he is a candidate who cannot win. While many people may agree with his principles, they will not support him for fear he has no real chance of winning. However, few fail to realize that Jackson will have achieved great success, regardless of whether he takes the Democratic nomination.

Every time Jackson gets at least 15 percent of the vote in any congressional district, he gets a share of the delegates. And even in those primary states where Jackson lost on Tuesday, he may be able to meet the 15 percent threshold and thus acquire more delegates.

So what?

The Democratic Party has no clear front-runner who can make an uncontested bid for the nomination. If most of the Democrats stay in the race, choosing a candidate at the convention later this year will prove difficult and will certainly involve some negotiating on the part of all candidates. The way things are going, Jackson may well have 700 or so delegates with which to bargain at the convention — which provides him with a very strong say in who the next U.S. president might be. At a minimum, Jackson will greatly influence the selection of the vice president, the platform and a variety of other positions in the party leadership.

Jesse Jackson has broken down a veritable wall of institutional barriers by being the first non-white male to prove a serious candidate for the presidency. He is accountable for at least 2 million new, black voters in 1984 and maybe as many in this election, according to the Feb. 23 issue of In These Times. Jackson is not only making history, but he is also providing America with an alternative to the monotonous redundancy of the other candidates. Perhaps people should think twice before they count Jesse Jackson as a nobody for the 1988 presidential elections.

Voters deserve facts, not just images

Campaign politics. This is how dreams are made, leaders are built and lives are ruined. Don't believe me? Just ask Gary Hart.

The campaigns of those running for offices in our country have become an important part of our society. In every medium there is someone trying to get your vote. The amount of political noise is incredible; there is so much of it that many people begin to tune out these messages before the political race is over.

Hey, it's great for the candidates to have the opportunity to make their views heard. It's important for the voters to become conscious of the candidates, their strategies, their plans and the issues at stake before they make any serious decision about voting.

That is why we need to look at our system of campaigning. A lot of money is being wasted on advertisements and promotions that are not only lacking in substance but which also fall on deaf ears.

For example, there have been a lot of advertisements for the presidential candidates this spring. These advertisements are an advertising copywriter's dream. They consist of lots of blank space, a catchy slogan, the name of the candidate and lots of adjectives. Lots and lots of adjectives. It's like eating watered-down soup; it's still colorful and has lots of volume, but there's no meat.

What don't you see in these advertisements? You don't see verbs. To use verbs would imply action. If the politician takes action on something, that means he must take a stand on an issue — which is the meat of the soup. However, taking a stand means being controversial.

Thus, the best campaign endorsements avoid issues altogether. This leaves the voters trying to choose between politicians who all sound the same. It's sort of like sucking broth when you want beef-and-noodle soup.

Commentary

CATHERINE DOUD
Collegian Columnist

This brings up the whole idea of image. That is the point of the campaign slogans now: to create an image that will appeal to the public. One of the best means of pushing an image is the TV set. If you look good and have excellent presence on television — whether it be in an ad or in a debate — it doesn't really matter what you say, as long as you look presidential while you are saying it.

A good example of this is when the Kennedy-Nixon debates were televised. Nixon looked horrible during the debate, while Kennedy looked young and vibrant. People who watched the program said that Kennedy obviously won the debate. However, those who had only listened to the debate via radio thought that Nixon had won. In our society, looks matter more than the issues.

There comes a time in every campaign, though, when the campaign messages become a little spicier. This has happened already, as the politicians battled it out before Super Tuesday. How could the public tell who was ahead in the polls and who was behind? Simple. In the midst of the normal, boring, optimistic advertising that deluges the public, there were a few ads that were different.

Instead of being boring broth, these ads had meat. Unfortunately, the meat — like the candidates — was chicken. The candidates who realized they were behind had panicked. They began running ads that attacked the front-runners, to try to convince the public that the front-runners were horrible people and didn't deserve a vote.

This is an interesting phenomenon in the campaign world. Everyone is nice until someone gets ahead and time starts running out. Then, for some unknown reason, the losing candidate thinks he or she can ruin the carefully built image of the competitor by throwing mud.

Unfortunately, this rarely works. All that usually happens is that it irritates the voters and makes the losing candidate look like a jerk. It is enough to make some voters decide not to vote at all, since they reason all the candidates must be crummy anyway.

Politicians need to become more responsible for their advertisements. As the time for voting nears, voters find themselves torn between a vicious mudslinger on one hand and a bland-but-cool operator on the other.

It's time that politicians become less greedy and quit trying to get everyone's votes by offending no one. It may be an easy way to win, but it's not fair to the voters — who find themselves voting for a face without knowing what it stands for.

Jeff Mann, a guest at the shelter, inspects the newspaper daily for jobs and apartments.

Life can be tough when there's no place to call... HOME

Dwayne Gentry, a Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc. guest, stretches and enjoys a cigarette on the porch. Because of a new policy, smokers must now do so outside.

Tina Frye was one month away from taking the Arkansas state examination for emergency medical technicians when an elderly resident of the nursing home where she was working threw her across the room.

Frye was seriously injured, permanently restricting her ability to stand for long periods.

After a marital breakup, Frye, a graduate of Manhattan High School and a trained and certified nurse's aide in Arkansas, returned to Manhattan and lived with friends for a while. She then lived in her car, until the car "died."

Then she heard of Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc.

"I fought coming to the shelter for a long time, but it turned out to be my best resource," she said. "It's hard to face up to the fact you can't support your family."

The number of homeless people is a deepening gouge in the American dream. Almost daily, the news projects images of derelict men and bag ladies into the homes of millions of Americans.

The stereotype of the metropolitan homeless may seem foreign to the citizens of Manhattan, but the reality of the homeless is as close as the streets.

"When you have to enter the shelter, you think there is no hope," said Frye, 29, and mother of a 10-year-old girl. "But the staff gets you back up; they let you know there is light at the end of the tunnel."

"Many people in the community assume we just house transients moving through the area and Manhattan doesn't have a homeless problem, which is very far from the truth," said Kathy Rankin, executive director of the Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc.

In 1984, a diverse group of concerned people including a K-State social work intern, a librarian in Farrell Library, a nun and a construction worker met for the first time and embarked on an endeavor that would create a shelter for the homeless in Manhattan.

Since the Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc. opened its doors in January 1985, more than 1,500 people, including 439 families, have found shelter and hope, Rankin said.

Her daughter was also opposed to going to the shelter, Frye said.

"She was angry and upset because we had to come here, but I think now she realizes there are people here who are going to help us," she said.

The bureaucracy in getting financial aid for the homeless is the greatest point of frustration for the homeless and the shelter staff, Rankin said.

Unemployment is difficult enough for the families in the shelter without the delays they must face when applying for assistance from the SRS, she said.

The shelter has helped Frye obtain assistance from the Social Rehabilitation Services in getting entered into a job training program.

"I actually got the information about a job training program only after I came to the shelter," Frye said. "It took eight weeks from when I applied for financial assistance from SRS until they had me approved."

Frye said she feels fortunate that she has found an affordable apartment and will soon begin training in new job skills.

"With what we will be getting from SRS we will only have enough to pay the rent and utilities, and we'll have some food stamps, but we'll make it somehow," she said.

The people the shelter houses are primarily between having a place to call home and what one would classify as a true street person, Rankin said.

"They are to a point where, if the shelter wasn't here, they would wind up on the streets," she said. "The majority of our guests are employed and have a place to call home when they leave the shelter."

Food for the shelter guests comes primarily from two sources — the Flint Hills Bread Basket (about 4,000 pounds in 1987) and casseroles brought in each evening by groups or individuals, Rankin said.

"I knew we had to find ways to stretch our very limited budget, so I visited with the many groups in town letting them know how they could help and the 'Casserole Network' was born," she said.

There is strong concern about the impact on the children living in a shelter, Rankin said.

School-age children of families in the shelter are required to be enrolled in school within 48 hours, she said.

"We don't want the children to become so accustomed to living in a shelter that when they are older they say, 'It's OK to live in a shelter. Mom and Dad did,'" Rankin said.

The shelter not only offers a place where people can eat and sleep, but also a chance for people to regain their independence.

"In metropolitan-area shelters, you can go in and crash for the night, but you have to be out by 6 a.m. or 8 a.m. the next morning, so your entire day is oriented at existing," Rankin said. The concern becomes fighting for existence instead of looking for work.

"Most lower- to middle-income families live paycheck-to-paycheck and if they lose that paycheck for one or two months, that's all it takes to devastate them financially," she said.

Most of the men who enter the shelter are semi-skilled to skilled laborers.

"We've even housed a college professor who had some bad luck and ended up out on the road," Rankin said.

Paul Rowley, 22, a native Kansan and a high school graduate, said he returned to the Manhattan area after serving in the Navy and after his marriage broke up.

"If the shelter wasn't here I'd be dead right now, with the cold weather we've had," Rowley said.

After he lost his job and car, a dispute with his family left him with no place to go, he said.

"I really didn't wind up on the street; instead I wound up living in the woods," Rowley said. "An old man saw my fire the day after this winter's first big snow and came and told me about a cabin that was nearby, where I could stay.

"I stayed in it until it burned down while I was away, and then I had no place to go," he said. "To me the people here in the shelter are my family, since mine has more or less disowned me."

Robbin Waldner, a K-State graduate, local social worker and member of the board of directors of the Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc., could well be considered the mother of the shelter.

Waldner and another former K-State student, Mark Rothfuss, wrote a grant proposal for an emergency shelter in Manhattan during their internship in social work.

"Our original intent was to write the proposal so we could graduate from K-State, but it soon became more than just wanting to graduate," Waldner said.

Other people in the community who were interested in forming a shelter in Manhattan met with Waldner and Rothfuss for the first time in 1984, she said. From that initial meeting evolved a small group who ultimately made the shelter a reality.

Local ditch burning may violate regulation

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

Burning weeds and brush that clog ditches may be a practical approach to the problem, but it may also be unlawful without an exemption to Kansas regulations.

Bill Smith, Manhattan fire chief, said the request to burn the ditch along Tuttle Creek Boulevard, the frontage road in front of Wal-Mart, had been received from the Manhattan Parks Department.

"A complaint was made and the burning was stopped when it was brought to my attention," he said.

"The only reason we were doing it was because that ditch is the old river channel. It gets clogged with brush and weeds, and equipment is hard to get in there," he said.

The firefighters had specific instructions to halt the burning if visibility was hampered by the smoke, the smoke went into the business district, or complaints were made.

"We thought we were doing it within the parameters of the ordinance, but we may not have been," he said.

Don Schuyler, environmental technician in the Bureau of Air Quality and Radiation Control in the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, said open burning is prohibited in the state of Kansas according to Kansas regulation KR-28-1945.

Kansas regulation KR-28-1947, titled "Exemptions of Open Burning" makes it possible for an exemption to be granted under certain circumstances, on a case-by-case basis, he said.

Exemptions for open burning must be obtained from the KDHE, he said.

Schuyler was asked if the city of Manhattan had obtained an exemption for burning in ditches along Tuttle Creek Boulevard.

"I don't recall the city of Manhattan getting an exemption," he said.

Smith said, "We might still burn the ditch, it's just that we will be going through the proper EPA channels."

"I'm going to go to Topeka personally and speak to the people about our ordinance and the state requirements, and try to get it worked out," he said.

Linda Stielman, executive secretary for the Manhattan City Manager's office, relaying information for Jim Pearson, assistant city manager, said the burning had been directed by the city manager and is authorized by local ordinance.

"The burning was stopped when a complaint was registered by Jason Annis," she said. "The fire department is checking with state authorities to see if there is a regulation that we are not aware of," she said.

Jason Annis, former associate professor at K-State and an engineer who does consultant work on air contamination, said based on previous experience, he felt confident the burning was being done illegally.

"I think it's a bad example for the city to be burning when they have prevented the average citizen from doing so," he said.

"The laws were put in place to improve the quality of the air," he said. "It's well documented that such burning produces carcinogens."

Building to honor worker

By The Collegian Staff

The Department of Housing's maintenance building will be dedicated at 1:30 p.m. today as the Davenport Building in honor of Lloyd W. Davenport, former maintenance employee.

Davenport began working for K-State in 1946 as an employee at the physical plant and joined the Department of Housing in 1948.

During his 36 years of employment, Davenport helped the department design sections of the residence halls and their furniture.

At the time he retired, he was responsible for maintaining Jardine Terrace Apartments and the residence halls. He also supervised a maintenance staff of more than 100.

Davenport was the first person to be presented the Upper Midwest Region of Housing Officers Outstanding Service Award for his work. He also received a plaque from the other Big Eight university housing departments for his dedication and devotion to his work.

Although the building has never had an offical name, Thomas Frith, director of housing, said the building has always been used by housing.

"It has been a housing maintenance building ever since it was built, containing maintenance offices, paint and carpentry shops, a warehouse, storage, metal shops and skilled craft areas," he said.

Shelter

The shelter is leased for $1 a year from the First Presbyterian Church.

Waldner gives much of the credit for successful operation of the shelter to Rankin.

"Kathy Rankin was invited to a board meeting where she was interviewed for the job of executive director and we said, 'Kathy, we would love to have you work with us, but we don't have any money. If you're willing to work without promise of pay, knowing it's your responsibility to raise your own salary, then you're hired for the job,'" Waldner said. Rankin accepted employment on those terms.

Support from the community and the United Way has allowed the shelter to survive and is the only way it can survive, she said.

Eileen Smith, senior in social work, said she has worked at the shelter for two semesters as a part of a 550-hour internship toward her degree.

Her duties include about five hours a day of one-on-one counseling with shelter residents to ascertain their needs, identify problems, and articulate courses of action and alternatives that are available to them, Smith said.

"What I have seen here are people who had bad luck," she said. "It's not like they are lazy — it's that there are no jobs."

Earl Robinson, staff social worker at the shelter and a K-State graduate, is the mastermind behind a series of life-skill classes offered to shelter residents.

Classes are structured as modules that build upon the next one. Subjects presented include nutrition, menu planning, food buying, food preparation and safcty, budgeting, time management, stress management, job readiness, and parenting skills, he said.

The United Nations General Assembly designated 1987 as the International Year of the Homeless. As a part of that observance, the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development honored the Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc. with an award for exemplary service to the homeless.

The shelter was one of only 166 such facilities selected nationwide, and is the only one in Kansas.

Paul is now gone from the shelter, working and living in his own place. Tina is living in her own place with her daughter and will soon begin job training.

Post-modernism lecture topic

By The Collegian Staff

Post-modernism in contemporary fiction will be discussed at 4:45 p.m. today in Union 213 as part of the English Talks Lecture Series.

Wendy Steiner, professor of English at the University of Pennsylvania, will deliver the lecture.

Steiner is an internationally renowned scholar in modern American literature, said Robert Grindell, head of the Department of English.

She received her doctoral degree in literature from Yale University, and she received the Guggenheim Fellowship award in 1982.

Steiner's lecture will be the first of the English Talks lecture series. It is being funded by contributions and donations made within the Department of English.

"We had an anonymous donor donate around $2,000," said Jonathan Holden, professor of English. "We also asked everyone in the department to contribute for the guest speaker fund."

Over the past year, the department has raised more than $5,000, which will go toward funding guest speakers beginning with next year's lectures.

Jones conquers injury

Qualifies for two events in nationals

By Kenny Harrison
Collegian Reporter

Sometimes close is just not close enough. Just ask K-State sprinter Joy Jones.

In 1987, Jones barely missed qualifying for the National Indoor Collegiate Track and Field Championships. Even though she sustained a hamstring injury in high school,she was an All-American track performer at Shaw High East in Cleveland, Ohio.

K-State sprint coach Darryl Anderson said this injury was probably the reason Jones just missed qualifying in the 55-meter dash, which is probably her strongest event, by .06 seconds.

This season, however, Jones has turned things around. She has been running much better than she has in the past— so much better that she is one of four K-State track athletes who will be participating in the national meet Friday and Saturday in Oklahoma City.

Jones, a sophomore, placed first in the 55-meter dash with a school record time of 6.83 seconds last weekend in Boulder, Colo. The mark is also her personal best, and it has vaulted her into being one of the top ten collegiate sprinters in the country.

"The key to Joy running well is she has gotten into the rehab room and has improved on her strength," Anderson said.

Jones had never received the treatment necessary for her to run competitively at the national level. But this season she has been making the effort in order to improve her sprinting skills, Anderson said.

Because Jones has come back with a stronger hamstring, she has also qualified for the national meet in the 200-meter dash as well.

"I'm very excited because you always want to do your best in whatever you do," she said. "Now that I am able to compete in two events it makes me more happy."

Jones said she has been making a few changes in her start technique and mental preparations in order to reach her goals at the national meet.

"My start is better than last year but it's not where it should be or where I would like it to be," Jones said.

In order for Jones to get the maximum effort out of her start, Anderson had her switch legs in the starting blocks in order to get better use out of her stronger hamstring.

File/Rob Squires

Joy Jones placed first in the 55-meter dash, setting a new school record and her personal best last weekend in Boulder, Colo.

With her start improving every day, Jones hopes she will become a collegiate All-American. But that is easier said than done.

In order to gain All-American status, Jones must contend with more than 20 girls who are also trying to become one of six finalists in her races. Those finalists comprise the All-Americans in those events.

"Physically I am ready for the meet but I am nervous because it is my first time," Jones said.

Anderson said a little nervousness won't hurt Jones' chances.

"I think her head is together. ...Once she gets there...she'll run good," Anderson said.

"Getting out of the blocks is the most important thing ... and by getting out, I hope everyone else has to try to catch me," Jones said.

Consistency key to success for Wildcats in tournament

Commentary

TOM PERRIN
Sports Columnist

As good as Oklahoma has looked in running roughshod over league opponents to win the Big Eight title, it doesn't seem like anyone is ready to concede the Big Eight Tournament championship to the No. 4 Sooners.

That reality, as much as anything can, says a lot about the strength of the Big Eight this year. Any of the top five teams — OU, K-State, Kansas, Missouri or Iowa State — is capable of taking the tournament title.

Here's what I think are going to be the keys to each of the five teams' chances of winning with the tournament title and getting the automatic bid to the NCAA tounament.

OKLAHOMA — If the Sooners' can impose a fast pace in each of their games, they should win the tournament hands down. Problem is, anyone who plays Oklahoma will inevitably try to slow things down. And when the pace slows down, Oklahoma gets frustrated. Example: K-State's 66-60 win over the Sooners.

Slowing Oklahoma down is another thing altogether, though. With Ricky Grace and Mookie Blaylock at the guards, and Harvey Grant and Stacey King working inside, the Sooners are almost impossible to stop.

K-STATE — Consistency. That's the one thing K-State has exhibited throughout the conference season and the Cats' biggest asset entering a three-game, single elimination tournament. Three players play the most important roles for K-State.

First, Mitch Richmond must continue his scoring pace and do so with effective shot selection. Defenses are keying on Richmond now, and he can't try to force things. Second, Steve Henson must continue his solid play at point guard. Henson's increased scoring in recent games has opened things up for the rest of the team, particularly Will Scott. Third, Charles Bledsoe must stay out of foul trouble. K-State has a small lineup and without Bledsoe playing at least 30 minutes, the Wildcats lose a lot of rebounds.

KANSAS — One name says it all. Danny Manning. If Manning scores 30-35 points per game in the tournament, the Jayhawks could win the title. But for Manning to have room to work inside against collapsing zone defenses, KU needs to hit some outside shots.

If some of the Jayhawks like Kevin Pritchard, Milt Newton and Jeff Gueldner are able to hit some three-pointers and pull the zones out, Manning is unstoppable. If there is one player who could single-handedly carry his team to the title, it's Manning.

MISSOURI — If only the Tigers played up to their potential. One week they lose to Colorado, then beat Oklahoma the next. If Missouri can hit a run of consistency this weekend, the Tigers can win the title.

Missouri has as much talent as any team in the league, Oklahoma included. Getting them to play together has been the problem. With Derrick Chievous and Doug Smith now both playing well, a return to top form by senior point guard Lynn Hardy would be a big plus. Hardy's leadership could be just the glue the Tigers need.

IOWA STATE — Rather quietly, the Cyclones have won their last three games and may be returning to the early-season form that carried them to wins over Purdue and Iowa. Iowa State also has a win over first-round opponent Missouri and another over Kansas.

The Cyclones' one-two scoring punch of Jeff Grayer and Lafester Rhodes must continue to be just that. Grayer and Rhodes account for around half of Iowa State's point average. If either of them is off, there's trouble.

WINNER — Oklahoma over K-State by eight in the finals. The Sooners must win the tournament to be assured a No. 1 seed in their NCAA tournament regional. That should be all the incentive they need.

Baseball team to play Fort Hays

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's baseball team will open up another busy weekend today when they play Fort Hays State in a double-header at Frank Myers Field starting at 1 p.m.

The Wildcats, 5-3, will look to improve their record as well as their play during what coach Mike Clark said will be a tough contest.

"(Fort Hays) is always a good, competitive ballclub," Clark said. "They have always been one of the better NAIA (National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics) schools in the state and have always given us a good ballgame. Talent-wise, they're a pretty good ballclub."

K-State will be led by its pitching staff, which has already seen three pitchers pitch complete games. Starting on the mound in the two games today will be Zack Kimbell, 1-1, and Darryl Rowley, 1-0.

"We hope that our defense will get a little better, and that all phases of our game will keep improving and be a little better today than we were the last time," Clark said.

This weekend, the Wildcats will travel to New Mexico State for games lasting through Tuesday.

Ohio State assumes spoiler role again, posts upset at home over No. 2 Purdue

By The Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Jerry Francis scored 14 points, including six in an 11-2 spurt that turned the game around in the second half, as Ohio State upset No. 2 Purdue 71-60 in a Big Ten Conference game Wednesday night.

The victory, which moved Ohio State to 16-11 overall and 9-8 in the Big Ten, was the Buckeyes' fourth at home over a ranked conference opponent. Purdue, which clinched the Big Ten title Saturday, fell to 26-3 and 15-2.

Purdue led 47-42 with 12:21 remaining, but was limited to two points in the next seven minutes. The Boilermakers missed five straight free throws in one span as Ohio State took a 53-49 lead.

The Boilermakers pulled within 55-54 with 4:13 left, but John Anderson hit a 15-foot jumper and Jay Burson scored on a driving layup and free throw for a 60-54 Ohio State lead.

The Buckeyes then hit nine of 11 free throws in the final 1:13.

Troy Lewis led the Boilermakers with 20 points.

Independence on probation for recruiting violations

By The Associated Press

INDEPENDENCE, Kan. — The men's basketball and football programs at Independence Community College have been placed on probation for one year for alleged recruiting violations.

Thomas R. Burke, the school's president, said Wednesday he would appeal the probation imposed by the National Junior College Athletic Association on the basketball program.

The school's football program was reprimanded in an unrelated case by the Kansas Jayhawk Community College Conference, but Burke said the conference probation does not involve sanctions.

If the basketball probation is upheld, the Independence men's basketball team would be ineligible for postseason play during the 1988-89 season, including the regional playoffs and NJCAA tournament held each year in Hutchinson.

Independence has qualified for postseason play for 15 consecutive years.

"We are going to appeal the decision. I've instructed Bill Juby (athletic director) to begin the process immediately," Burke said.

The purported violations of NJCAA bylaws stem from an incident in which 10 ICC athletes and four recruits were arrested Feb. 14 for an alleged disturbance at a Coffeyville residence.

In a letter informing Independence of the decision, Wayne Baker, the NJCAA eligibility administrator, cited violations relating to the use of a college vehicle, trips to the campus and bail money paid by a volunteer assistant coach to get the recruits out of jail.

Head Coach Bob Kivisto was suspended for one game by Burke for "allowing unauthorized use of a college van."

The 10 ICC students arrested have pleaded guilty to misdemeanor counts of criminal trespassing and disorderly conduct and were each sentenced to eight hours of community service in Coffeyville and fined $10 court costs.

Similar charges against the four recruits are pending.

League Commissioner Bennie Lee said Independence signed three football recruits from Liberal to letters of intent without receiving permission from the president of Seward County Community College, a violation of conference bylaws. The letters of intent signed by Stacy Johnson, Jason Knudsen and Tommy Johnson to attend the Independence school were voided.

"We had been obtaining releases (from other community college districts) for recruits throughout the state, but these three just slipped by," Burke said.

Burke said the KJCCC bylaw pertains to the recruitment of students in any other community college district even if the community college does not offer a specific sport. Seward County Community College does not have a football team.

"Other than the three letters of intent being void, there are no other sanctions involved," Burke said. "Those students must wait until after May 15 to sign another letter of intent. But at that time, they may sign with any conference school, including Independence."

Derogatory statements start conflict

Mets hold meeting with Strawberry

By The Associated Press

MIAMI — The New York Mets held a closed-door meeting Wednesday and reached an uneasy truce with Darryl Strawberry, a day after he blasted Manager Davey Johnson and some teammates for the club's problems last year.

"I don't think anybody likes to have derogatory things said about them," said Johnson, Strawberry's prime target. "But I don't want to drag this out and make it any bigger than it is."

The storm started Tuesday when an advance copy of Esquire magazine's April issue appeared in the Mets' clubhouse, containing a story about Strawberry.

In the interview, he said Gary Carter and Keith Hernandez "quit" last season and he had some uncomfortable words concerning about teammates Wally Backman and Len Dykstra.

Of Johnson, he said: "I always wonder how many games this team would have won if Whitey was managing," a reference to St. Louis Cardinals Manager Whitey Herzog.

The Mets failed to repeat as World Series champions last year when they were beset by injuries and off-field problems.

This year, the Mets came to camp healthy and seemed anxious to go about the business of regaining their position. They have been made the favorites, and had hoped to avoid the kind of confrontation that Strawberry sparked.

The Mets held a 20-minute meeting at their spring training camp in Port St. Lucie, Fla., to discuss the latest trouble. The team then drove four hours to Miami for an exhibition game against Baltimore.

Strawberry did not talk to reporters in Port St. Lucie and brushed past them before playing against the Orioles.

"It's over," is all Strawberry said. He got mixed boos and cheers when he batted.

Richie Bry, Strawberry's agent, offered a possible solution to avoid future problems.

"As long as players talk to the press they are going to sometimes say things that they regret — and sometimes be quoted out of context — and my answer to that is not to talk to the press at all," Bry said in a telephone interview.

While the Mets wanted to forget this latest off-the-field rumbles, they did not seem ready to forgive Strawberry.

"He's a moody guy," said Carter, who did not attend the morning meeting.

Company will return $90 million

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Bell Helicopter Textron Inc. has agreed to return $90 million to the government to settle allegations it fraudulently overcharged the Army on helicopter spare parts, Pentagon sources said Wednesday night.

The agreement was believed to be the largest settlement of a defense contracting fraud case to date. A Pentagon official speaking on condition of anonymity said it is to be announced Friday by federal prosecutors in Fort Worth, Texas.

The settlement marks the end to a four-year dispute between Bell Helicopter and the Army that grew out of findings by Pentagon auditors of numerous accounting and inventory irregularities at the Fort Worth company.

The Pentagon source said there had never been any evidence of intentional fraud on the part of the company. "This was an accounting problem," he said.

However, during the investigation, there were allegations that Bell Helicopter officials shredded documents, altered computer entries and covered up evidence of deliberate overbillings to the government.

As part of the settlement, prosecutors have agreed to drop any potential criminal or civil charges in the case. Bell Helicopter will not acknowledge any wrongdoing, according to the sources.

"We have a deal, but it's not done quite yet. The Army and Bell Helicopter do expect to sign a settlement on Friday, though," a Pentagon source said. "We've been negotiating for some time."

In Fort Worth, U.S. Attorney Marvin Collins said he could not comment on the case.

"I really cannot comment at all. I'm just unable to count any chickens before they hatch," Collins told The Associated Press when he was telephoned Wednesday night at his home.

Asked about a possible Friday announcement, Collins added, "Not only can I not count unhatched chickens, I can't even admit there are any eggs.'

Officials at the Justice Department in Washington also declined comment.

Reached late Wednesday, Carl Harris, a Bell Helicopter spokesman, read from a prepared statement which acknowledged there had been "settlement discussions."

"We believe a settlement is in the offing. We are hopeful it will be soon. However, we are not able to comment until a final agreement is reached. The terms that are currently under discussion will not have a material effect on Bell Helicopter Textron in 1988," the statement said.

A Pentagon official said that as part of the settlement, Bell Helicopter "will have to hand over a check for $69 million to the U.S. Treasury." The company will also have to turn over approximately $11 milllion worth of spare parts to the Army.

"The settlement will be worth around $90 million, when all is said and done," the source said.

The source said most of the overcharges came as a result of an accounting problem that dealt with the handling of contracts worth billions of dollars prior to 1985.

Meese

Rep. Howard Berman, D-Calif., told the news conference that the pipeline project may have involved an attempt by a U.S. company — with Meese's knowledge — to bribe foreign officials. Such bribes would violate the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act.

"At this moment, some business groups are conducting a major drive to weaken the (act)," Berman said. "In that effort, they have consistently been supported by this administration and by this Justice Department."

The letter was signed by Reps. Dan Glickman, Kansas; Edward Feighan, Ohio; Berman; Frank; Morrison; Lawrence Smith, Florida; Harley Staggers Jr., West Virginia; John Conyers, Michigan; George Crockett Jr., Michigan; Mike Synar, Oklahoma and Patricia Schroeder, Colorado.

K-State Student and Faculty callers obtained 16,479 alumni pledges worth a record

$503,354

During the 1988 KSU Foundation Telefund, more than 1,200 volunteers contacted alumni nationwide on behalf of the eight academic colleges, the Smith Scholarship House and Intercollegiate Athletics. Funds raised during the 23 calling sessions will be used for scholarships, educational materials and student activities.

The KSU Telefund has set new pledge and participation records nine consecutive years. Telefund has helped K-State gain the most supportive alumni body in the Big Eight Conference, based on percent participation. Last year, more than 26 percent of K-State's alumni financially supported the University. Telefund's success depends upon alumni support, enthusiastic student and faculty participation, and a detailed management system which trains the volunteer callers and provides accurate alumni information.

SUPER PRIZE WINNERS

Telefund "Super Prizes" encourage the best student callers to participate in more than one calling session. The results: Top 15 students, as a group, raised $38,887 from 1,405 pledges during 59 calling sessions.

Bob Dole institutes cutbacks

Kemp drops out of race

By The Associated Press

Republican Bob Dole, clobbered by Vice President George Bush in the Super Tuesday contests, cut back staff and television advertising but insisted he was "in this one to win," despite polls putting him far behind in the Illinois primary race. Bush said whatever happened, his campaign would "go about our business, do our job."

Bush, meanwhile, declared himself "personally disturbed at the breaches of ethics" he'd seen in government, and said Thursday he would set up a White House ethics panel if elected president.

Dole pulled television commercials off the air in Illinois and laid off more than half his staff Thursday. And a source said his campaign advisers discussed whether Dole should suspend campaigning before the Illinis primary on Tuesday.

An ABC News-Washington Post poll, published in Friday's editions of the Post, indicated Dole trailed Bush in Illinois, 58 percent to 31 percent.

However, national campaign spokeswoman Dale Tate said Dole intended to remain a candidate. "We're not pulling the plug on the campaign," she said.

Later, Dole aides, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the possibility of dropping out was discussed, but the Kansas senator would keep campaigning at least through Tuesday's Illinois contest.

Dole issued a statment Thursday night denying he would withdraw. "Bob Dole is no dropout," he said. "I'm in this one to win."

The Dole developments came the same day that Bush's Super Tuesday victories claimed another Republican casualty — Jack Kemp. And Democrat Gary Hart was preparing to quit the Democratic race.

Bush's chief of staff, Craig Fuller, told reporters traveling with the vice president that on hearing reports about Dole, Bush's reaction was: "We'll go about our business, do our job."

Democrat Richard Gephardt, who ran a poor fourth among Democrats on Tuesday, said Michigan could decide his fate.

Welding sparks start grass fire Thursday

Morning blaze destroys 150 acres in Manhattan

By Chris Doll
Special Projects Editor

Sparks from a welder's torch — powered by 40 mph winds — burned 150 acres of grassland Thursday morning in northeast Manhattan.

A company was erecting a commerical sign when sparks from a welding machine landed on grass and pasture land north of Kimball Avenue near Hudson Avenue.

The fire came within 30 feet of several houses as it started, and burned 30 acres within 45 minutes.

More than 15 city and county firefighters worked for more than 3 hours before it was extinguished, said Chuck Tannehill, Manhattan Department battalion chief in charge of the fire.

Because precipitation has been less than average, fires have plagued the county, said Del Petty, Riley County preparedness director.

"When you have high winds like this, and it's dry ... sparks carry a long way," he said.

Part of the land affected was leased by K-State from the J.J. Vanier Company of Salina. The University used the land for research. Alvin Abbott, Manhattan resident, owns the other land burned in the blaze.

The fire was difficult to fight because of the rough terrain and gusty winds, Petty said. Small trucks, equipped with 300 gallons of water, were used because they could manuever around the trees and rocks. But they had to be continually refilled by larger trucks that held more water but could not handle the rough terrain.

The fire was brought under control when it moved into a gully, sheltered from the wind. Firefighters were able to extinguish the main portion and watch for rekindling spot fires.

Petty said carelessness combined with the dry conditions have caused a myriad of fires in Riley County.

Regents' tuition, fee board to consider aid proposal

By Erwin Seba
Government Editor

When the Kansas Board of Regents' special committee on tuition and fees meets today in Kansas City, Mo., it will hear a proposal to return approximately 1 percent of the fiscal year 1990 tuition income to the student governments of regents schools.

The money would be earmarked for allocation to "programs that address the needs of students with special academic and financial needs," according to an Associated Students of Kansas staff paper on the proposal.

According to the staff paper, if the proposal were adopted, then K-State would receive $205,454 based on this year's K-State tuition income.

The proposal, called the Educational Opportunity Fund, is part of a package of requests and promises being made by the Student Advisory Committee to the regents. The package includes a 4 percent maintenance increase in student salaries and student support of the tuition increases to fund the second year of the Margin of Excellence program.

To fund MOE in fiscal year 1990, in-state tuition is anticipated to increase by 6 percent, and out-of-state tuition by 12 percent.

If the Educational Opportunity Fund is approved by the tuition and fees committee and the Board of Regents, the proposal will be sent to the 1989 session of the Kansas Legislature, which will begin meeting in January 1989.

Student Body President Troy Lubbers said Board of Regents Executive Director Stanley Z. Koplik had given his agreement to consideration by the tuition and fees committee of the proposal.

"I think with Dr. Koplik giving his OK, that goes a long way to getting it into the budget," Lubbers said.

ASK Legislative Director Mark Tallman said the proposal is based on the premise that "if students are paying more, some of that ought to come back in student aid."

Lubbers said increasing tuition at Kansas universities could prevent less wealthy students from enrolling in the future.

Higher tuition may already be affecting minority student enrollment, Tallman said.

Nineteen rise to top

Vet Med grads become deans

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

Nineteen graduates of K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine have used their education in ways that some of them never originally considered — as deans of schools of veterinary medicine across the nation.

These 19 alumni have all served as deans at one or another of the 13 veterinary medicine schools in the United States. Two have held the post in foreign countries. Three have been deans of K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine. Five of them have also received distinguished service awards from the University.

The deans contacted all expressed a common theme: none began their career with the idea of becoming a dean of a vet school.

"When I was a senior in vet school here, I told my wife, 'One thing I'll never do is teach,'" said James Coffman. In 1984, Coffman, now provost, became the third alumni to become dean.

He said that most graduating students do not include becoming a dean in their career goals.

"Someone graduating in vet school and intending to be a dean probably won't ever make it ... people who seek those positions almost never get them," Coffman said.

Upon graduation, many veterinarians go into a private practice.

Walter Bowie, a 1947 graduate, said he had originally planned to be a practioner, but eventually moved into a teaching position. He is now the dean of the veterinary medicine school at Tuskegee University, Tuskegee, Ala.

Besides Bowie, Ted Williams, a 1935 K-State graduate, also served as dean of Tuskegee University from 1947-1972 and was succeeded by Bowie.

"If someone had told me I would be a dean of a vet school, I would have thought they were off their rocker," said Dick Talbot, a 1958 K-State graduate. He has served as dean of two veterinary medicine schools — the University of Georgia and Virginia Tech.

Each of the three alumni who have served as deans at K-State have had some effect on the school during their tenure.

Coffman's contributions involved the future of the vet school.

Coffman said he feels his overall contributions focused in two areas: the school's renewed agenda and the enhancement of veterinary medicine

Avalanche kills prince's friend

KLOSTERS, Switzerland — An avalanche roared down on Prince Charles's skiing party Thursday, killing a close friend. The future British king was unhurt, but a witness said he trembled and wept as a rescue helicopter arrived.

Swiss officials had warned earlier Thursday of possible avalanches in the area.

The dead skier was identified as Maj. Hugh Lindsay, 34, a former aide to Queen Elizabeth II, the prince's mother. Buckingham Palace said another skiier, Patricia Palmer-Tomkinson, suffered leg injuries.

Airplane crashes in bedroom

WARREN, Mich. — A cargo plane loaded with truck parts nose-dived into a residential neighborhood just after taking off early Thursday and exploded into flames, setting two houses afire and killing the pilot and a sleeping couple.

Neighbors, who had been reading, watching television or sleeping, dashed to rescue the victims' three daughters and the occupant of the second house.

The twin-engine Beechcraft 18 flown by Thomas Bussard of Pontiac had just taken off on a flight from Detroit City Airport to Fort Wayne, Ind., with a shipment of truck suspension parts for a General Motors Corp. plant.

The plane hit a garage belonging to Iris Eady and a van before crashing into the bedroom of Norma and Harold Richardsons and exploding. Firefighters fought for about 45 minutes before bringing the flames, which also damaged Eady's home, under control.

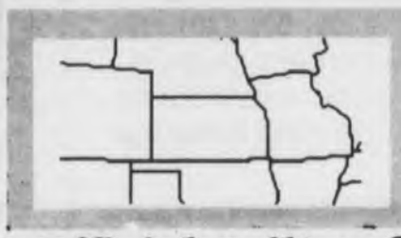
"The plane looked like it dropped from the sky right on top of Iris' garage," said neighbor Don Hunt. "The power lines are still up, so the plane didn't glide in.

Falwell: Scandals aid evangelism

ORLANDO, Fla. — The Rev. Jerry Falwell on Thursday likened the TV evangelism scandals with the Watergate affair and said "the cause of Christ is better off" because of them.

The crisis that ended the Nixon administration "made it much tougher for politicians since then," Falwell told the National Association of Evangelicals.

"In the days ahead, it is going to be tougher for national (ministry) leaders to misbehave," he said. "Not impossible, but tougher."



Fake memo gives restroom rule

ALEXANDRIA, La. — At first, Louisiana's chief financial officer was amused by a phony memo bearing his name that told state employees to limit their restroom time or face some surprising reminders.

In the March 1 memo, a "Restroom Trip Policy" is outlined "to provide a consistent method of accounting for each employee's restroom time and ensuring equal treatment of all state employees."

"All restroom stalls are being equipped with timed paper roll retractors," the memo said. "If the stall is occupied for more than three minutes, an alarm will sound. Thirty seconds after the alarm sounds, the roll of paper in the stall will retract, the toilet will flush and the stall door will open."

But after his initial amusement, Brian Kendrick, the state's commissioner of administration, started thinking about how the memo was being spread, and whether that meant the state could economize on some office machinery.

Official guilty of sexual abuse

OLATHE — A dormitory supervisor at the Kansas School for the Deaf was found guilty Wednesday night of sexually abusing a teen-age student at the school.

A Johnson County jury deliberated seven hours before finding Rodney E. Sexton, 26, guilty of aggravated criminal sodomy and taking indecent liberties with a minor.

Sexton showed little emotion as the verdict was read about 9:30 p.m. His mother held her face in her hand and quietly sobbed while other family members sat quietly.

Sexton was charged in Johnson County District Court last September after the 16-year-old student told Olathe police that he had had sex with Sexton.

The youth testified to numerous sexual encounters with Sexton between October 1984 and last May. He said he had engaged in sexual relations with Sexton at various locations on the school's campus and at Sexton's Olathe home.

Sexton testified Tuesday and Wednesday that he never had sex with the boy or molested him.

Both Sexton and the student are deaf.

KCC to offer half-price hook-up

TOPEKA — Kansas Corporation Commission officials announced Thursday that local telephone companies in Kansas will participate in a program designed to help low-income families obtain telephone service.

The program, called Link Up Kansas, is part of a national program sponsored by the Federal Communications Commission.

Under the program, local companies will charge eligible households only 50 percent of the cost of hooking up a phone, said Keith Henley, KCC chairman.

The new customers would have to pay for the actual phone, monthly telephone bills and any special charges.

Wife: Man may kill with AIDS

TOPEKA — A Topeka woman says in a divorce complaint that her husband has contracted AIDS-related complex and has threatened to infect their three minor children "as he does not want to die alone."

The husband, who is hospitalized, denied the claim in a telephone interview with the Topeka Capital Journal, saying the children are "everything in the world to me."

The divorce complaint, filed March 7 in Shawnee County District Court, also said the husband has threatened to kill the family and others, and that he does not exercise responsible health habits with the children. It said he kisses the youngest child on the lips, and gives the children food from which he has eaten.

Health officials say the AIDS virus can be transmitted only in these ways: by exchange of body fluids in sexual activity, by exchange of dirty needles in drug usage, by a contaminated blood transfusion, or to a baby either before or during birth when the mother is infected.

Mysterious odor causes stink

LIBERAL — A mysterious odor is permeating one of the city's fire stations.

In fact, the odor is so foul, firefighters have been ordered to stop staying overnight at Station 2, said Liberal Fire Chief Milton Rice.

Firefighters complained that their families complained of the smell in their clothing after a shift in the station. Two have even fallen mysteriously ill, possibly from the odor or whatever is causing it.

And the smell, which has plagued the station for the past 10 years, seemed to be getting worse in the past few months.

"To put a name to it, I don't know. It's just a foul odor," Rice said.

The order to vacate at night came three weeks ago, after a firefighter was hospitalized for a serious, unexplained illness that resembled a heart attack.

Grants awarded to 4 colleges

Four colleges received industry grants this week that together total $27,500.

The grants will help support minority education, science, engineering and business programs. They will be applied toward educational and research needs that are not met by other financial resources.

The College of Engineering received grants of $5,000 from the E.I. du Pont Company and $1,500 from the Motorola Foundation for its engineering minority program. It also received from Du Pont grants of $4,000 to the chemical engineering program and $5,000 to the general engineering program.

Du Pont also has awarded grants of $5,000 to the agronomy program in the K-State College of Agriculture, $4,000 to the chemistry program in the College of Arts and Sciences, and $3,000 to the accounting program in the College of Business Administration.

Professor to attend conference

Harold Nichols, head of the speech department, will be spending spring break at an undergraduate honors conference at DePauw University in Greencastle, Ind.

Nichols is one of three guest scholars who will meet with and lead discussion groups at the conference. Undergraduate students will present research papers in the communication arts and sciences.

The research is original and will deal with rhetoric, interpersonal communication, theater, mass communication and organizational communication.

Professors elected to society

Two professors have been elected as a Fellow of the American Physical Society.

Tom Gray and James McGuire, both professors of physics, were elected to the society last week.

The selection board cited Gray's work pioneering the use of heavy-ion beams to probe ion-atom collision processes, including inner-shell ionization, slow recoil ion production, and low and intermediate velocity electron capture.

McGuire has studied the many body effects in atomic collisions in experiments using matter, antimatter and light. He is the author of more than 100 publications in the fields of atomic physics.

Faculty exempt from overdue fines in Farrell

By Vince Huser
Collegian Reporter

Call it a perk of the job.

While it is true that faculty members don't have to pay overdue fines on library materials, they have to follow the same rules as the rest of Farrell Library's patrons.

"The faculty historically haven't had to pay fines," said Virginia Quiring, associate dean of library development. "It's one of the perks of being a faculty member."

However, this is changing at some universities. For instance, the University of Kansas and Wichita State University charge faculty members for overdue library materials.

While K-State has never had an overdue fine policy for its faculty, books are sometimes kept longer than they are allowed.

"It is somewhat of a problem," Quiring said. "They are asked to renew books, and they may keep books if they will renew them," she said.

In addition, faculty must turn in all materials to Farrell if they take a job elsewhere.

"Faculty have to be cleared before they can leave campus if they have taken a position somewhere else, and the library is one of those clearance points. So they are required to return all of their materials to the library," Quiring said.

Many of the faculty are good about returning books on time or when they are recalled, Quiring said, adding that the few who are a problem don't create a significant financial problem.

Many of the materials faculty check out deal with their personal research and are not often books that most undergraduate students need.

If a book is needed by a student, it can be recalled by Farrell.

"If somebody requests a book, then we send out a notice for that individual who has it checked out to return the book, and this is to be done within a two-week period of time," Quiring said.

The recall of books is for all patrons of the library, including faculty and students.

Those who don't return recalled books can have their borrowing privileges suspended. But if they are not finished with the material, they can make a request that it be held for them after the person requesting finishes with it, she said.

Faculty also are responsible for paying for or replacing lost books. Faculty may have their library borrowing privileges suspended if they fail to pay for lost books, fail to return recalled books or fail to return three-day non-renewable periodicals, she said.

If these privileges are continuously abused, a patron's borrowing privileges may temporarily be suspended until the checked out material is returned. If it continues, the library may suspend borrowing privileges permanently.

"Our circulation policies are being strictly enforced," Quiring said. "Our automated circulation system has helped us to be more accurate in the checkout policies and the sending of overdue notices. We're much more efficient than we were when it was done manually."

Kansas legislators study plans for college savings

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

Middle-income parents may have a better chance in the future of ensuring a college education for their children because of two bills under consideration in the Kansas House.

The bills are aimed at providing parents in this income bracket with a system to facilitate the savings process, said Rep. Rick Bowden, D-Goddard.

After examining the programs being offered in other states, Bowden and Elaine Hassler, R-Abilene, determined the formulas for the savings plans.

"We kind of begged, borrowed and stole from what we thought other states were doing that would be politically feasible here in Kansas," he said. "(And) these ideas are unique to Kansas."

The first bill, the Educational Savings plan, is a plan designed much like an IRA, but with no set limit of investment. It is to be conducted completely by independent savings associations, such as banks and credit unions, and will not be related to the state. All advertising and promotion is to be conducted by these institutions, he added.

As incentive to invest the money, a state income tax credit of up to $1,200 will be offered. Interest payments depend on the amount being offered by the institution and are tax exempt.

No specific provisions are being made for the purpose for which the money is spent, Bowden said. However, in final version the bill may require the student to provide in writing what the money is being used for. The forms would then be forwarded to the Department of Revenue and, as with an IRA, it decides if the withdrawal is valid. If the use is determined invalid, the individual is charged a tax of 10 percent of the total amount in the account.

"In designing the bill we tried to make it as attractive as possible. To give flexibility we're using two to three different institutions," Bowden said.

The second bill, to create a new program called the Kansas Educational Savings Trust, is to be a trust fund operated entirely by the state. The bill calls for two different plans under KEST.

Part A is to be a state-run savings account with no set limits for investment or withdrawal. The money can be used for anything the investor desires, Bowden said. It will be invested with interest, both of which are subject to taxation.

Part B of the plan is a savings account designed for specific educational expenses, such as room and board, tuition and books. No investment limits will be set. All money in the account and interest earned is deducted from state tax returns.

No plans have been made yet for monitoring the withdrawal of money from the accounts, but it is envisioned that it will be controlled by the Board of Governors, Bowden said. All recruitment for the bill will be state initiated.

"The state plays the role of promoter. It's for the betterment of the state on the whole," Bowden said.

It has been recommended both bills be sent to the Education Committee for examination and revision, Bowden said. There they will be studied there for the interim and action taken during the next session.

"Normally it takes three to four years for this type of bill to be passed. It takes time to work the bugs out," he said.

Noriega chastised
Reagan plans sanctions

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House on Thursday overwhelmingly demanded the ouster of Panamanian strongman Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, and the opposition ambassador to the United States predicted Noriega's overthrow "within a few days."

At the same time, the Reagan administration was considering the imposition of further sanctions, including the withholding of about $7 million in payments to Panama due by March 15 for canal-related operations. The money would go into an escrow account.

The House voted 367-2 for a non-binding resolution that noted allegations of drug trafficking, murder, money laundering and racketeering against the Panamanian Defense Forces, which Noriega heads. It called on Reagan to "consider seriously" additional economic and political sanctions.

It also called upon Noriega to comply with an order two weeks ago by Panamanian President Eric Arturo Delvalle, dismissing him as commander of the defense forces. Instead, Noriega dismissed Delvalle a few hours later. The United States recognizes Delvalle, who has been forced into hiding in Panama, as the legitimate head of government.

Members on both sides of the political spectrum lashed out at Noriega and gave the administration virtually carte blanche to impose additional sanctions. Rep. Mel Levine, D-Calif., said "the government of Panama is in the hands of a thug, a common criminal."

The House vote was a strong gesture of support for the administration's efforts to pressure Noriega, who has been indicted by two grand juries in Florida on drug trafficking charges, to leave.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz, testifying before a House Appropriations subcommittee, said President Reagan was convening a meeting later in the day to decide on further action against the Panamanian regime.

In addition to the prospect of withholding canal payments, the administration was considering measures to make Panama's exports to the United States less competitive, such as loss of its rights under the Caribbean Basin Initiative, according to officials who spoke on condition of anonymity.

At another hearing before the House Merchant Marine subcommittee on the Panama Canal, Delvalle's emissary to the United States, Juan B. Sosa, said he has increased security at his embassy and will refuse to turn it over to a Noriega replacement. He called for further sanctions from the United States, and predicted Noriega's tenure will be short.

He said steps already taken to freeze Panamanian assets in the United States are "paralyzing the illegal government of General Noriega," and continued pressure will result in "ending up the dictatorial regime in the next few days."

The two House members who voted against the resolution were Rep. George Crockett, D-Mich., and Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas.

At the Panama Canal subcommittee hearing, Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams made it clear that the administration's condemnation of Noriega did not extend to Panama's armed forces.

But Abrams added: "Military leaders must, for their part, take immediate steps to remove their institution from politics, deal with the corrupt few and modernize the PDF to carry out military tasks in defense of the canal."

15-year-old sentenced for life

By The Associated Press

DEDHAM, Mass. — A 15-year-old boy who beat a classmate to death with a baseball bat because he wanted to find out what it was like to kill someone was convicted of second-degree murder Thursday and sentenced to life in prison.

Rod Matthews, who was 14 when he lured Shaun Ouillette into the woods with a promise of fireworks, showed no emotion when the verdict was announced. He had been expressionless throughout the weeklong trial, sitting with his eyes downcast.

Matthews will be eligible for parole in 15 years.

Carrying a portrait of her son and choking back tears, Jeanne Quinn, the victim's mother, said she had hoped Matthews would not be eligible for parole, which would have been the case if he had been convicted of first-degree murder.

"He planned this. I'm sorry. Fifteen years. No, I'm sorry, that's wrong," said Quinn. "Shaun is not coming home in 15 years, is he? He's not ever coming home."

The trial, which began March 2 in this suburb 15 miles south of Boston, was highlighted by graphic descriptions of the slaying and testimony from two young people who described how Matthews plotted the killing and then took them to see the bludgeoned body in the woods in Canton.

Matthews' family, including two sisters and a brother, was escorted out of court by a phalanx of officers shielding them from journalists. Kenneth Matthews, the father, said he felt his son belonged in a treatment facility rather than in prison.

Defense attorney John Philip White had argued that Matthews should be acquitted by reason of insanity. He portrayed him as a mentally unstable child whose pleas for help were ignored by teachers and friends.

Americans governed by strange behavior

Commentary

RIZWAN MITHANI
Collegian Columnist

It is a normal tendency for humans to form impressions about things foreign to them. Thus, it is natural for me to have certain impressions about America and Americans. Most readers might disagree with some of my criticisms and opinions, but this is because I view things as an outsider. It is hoped that this column will be read with a friendly spirit.

In America, all cities look alike. They all have Hardees, McDonald's, K mart, Kentucky Fried Chicken, Dillon's and whatnot. Even all capitol buildings look the same.

All interstates and highways look the same. They have the same kinds of road signs and the same kinds of rest areas. Every third car on the expressway is equipped with a radar detector. If there is any American who has driven at or below the speed limit for one whole year, this person deserves to be awarded a medal.

Pizzas are Italian. Hamburgers are German. Burritos are Mexican. Then what in the world is American food? I believe it is mashed potatoes, turkey, cranberries, corn and green beans. Americans heavily depend on neighboring Mexico for burritos, fajitas, tacos and so forth. Americans "love" chocolates. (That America is probably the only culture where people can express "love" for inanimate objects is yet another matter.)

Americans have four kinds of spices: salt, pepper, salt and salt. It's not uncommon for an American to have midnight cravings for a banana split or an all-American sundae, even if it is snowing outside and the temperature happens to be below zero. Due to their fast pace of life, Americans find microwave foods very popular. Incidentally, my housemate J.R. Harper refers to microwave ovens as "nuke boxes"!

American life is regulated by the three sports seasons: football, basketball and baseball. If they are not in the stadium, Americans are glued to the "idiot box" (more technically known as television) to watch these sports.

Contrary to versions of football elsewhere around the globe, American football does not involve any kicking of the ball. At its best, it is an excuse to maul the members of the opposing team.

Though I do not have any statistics — which, incidentally, are worse than white lies, according to Benjamin Disraeli — I would bet my best hat that more than 81.67 percent of all basketball games ever played here are won by a difference of five or fewer points. In any case, hats off to the excellent standards of the basketball players of this country. Still, it beats my imagination that people actually camp out in tents for weeks to buy basketball tickets. (I would not have believed it if I had not seen it with my own eyes.)

I refuse to comment on baseball on the grounds that it may incriminate me!

Americans are strong proponents of the 40-hour, five-day work week. Weekends are for fun and enjoyment. Most people religiously go to bars every Friday (TGIF) night — beer being the all-American favorite. They get drunk and drive. Is SADD listening?

Many foreign students are fooled into thinking that if they have a high score on the Test of English as a Foreign Language, they will do great in America. They do not realize until too late that it is American that is spoken here. English has not been spoken in this country for the last two centuries.

The American girls are charming and pretty. They have little practical common sense amid a vastness of attractive unreasonableness. I am not qualified to state what foreign girls think about American guys.

The dating game in America is played without any rules. This leads to a lot of intolerable pressure on both parties involved. None of the sides have any idea as to what in the world they are supposed to be doing.

Prostitution is supposed to be illegal here, except in the state of Nevada. Illegal, my foot! One sees prostitutes hanging around all over the country.

America is crudely commercial. The spirit is materialistic. People are generally indifferent to the poetic side of things.

Again, it is a relative society. For the majority, absolutes do not exist. "Right" and "wrong," unlike in many other cultures, are relative terms. The rightness of a deed is judged on the basis of the circumstances involved. I do not propound that this type of outlook is definitely incorrect. However, it can easily extend and has extended to a certain extent to the "value of human life." The Ku Klux Klan is allowed to roam freely on campuses instead of being behind bars.

It is a disposable culture here. Use your paper towel and throw it away. Cups, knives, forks and so on — all are disposable.

As a people, Americans are egotistic. This is reflected in part by the fact that they create their own "wonders." I am referring to the Washington Monument, the Gateway Arch in St. Louis and the like.

One interesting fact is that there are about 10 times more foreigners at Niagara Falls than there are Americans. These foreigners go there to admire water falling down. I suppose Americans would be fascinated if the water did not fall down and stayed up there!

Beam me up, Scotty! No — I am just kidding.

K-State can be proud of its outstanding band

You just don't hear much about the K-State band.

Obviously it exists, because band members play at home football and basketball games. But what else do they do? Should K-State be proud of its band?

A lot and yes, respectively.

For instance, last weekend the K-State chapters of Tau Beta Sigma and Kappa Kappa Psi — two band honoraries, one for women and one for men — were hosts of the annual Midwestern Band Convention on the K-State campus. The outcome of the convention demonstrated the outstanding nature of K-State band members.

Besides the usual business of conventions — talking of budgets and shifting of general rules — the important outcome was the election of new district officers in each of the honoraries.

K-Staters were elected as the president of one and first vice president of the other. It would seem that those students who were hosts for the convention were the same ones who dominated it.

The mission of a land grant university is to lend its facilities and skills to the betterment of the community in which it exists. The actions of band members in providing leadership for the district make K-State a leader in yet another area.

For that, and the many other things it does, the K-State band deserves some praise.

During the excitement that preceeds a home game, when the crowd is yelling and the excitement is building, it is easy to forget the extent to which the band adds to the festivities.

They are not the stars of the contest, but very necessary participants who work virtually unrecognized. Because we don't come to see them specifically, at times we may forget that they are there.

An involved crowd is often a key ingredient in intimidating an opponent or encouraging the home team.

When K-Staters talk proudly about the University's tradition of "rowdy" home crowds, they should remember that without their quality band — full of leaders in their discipline — K-State wouldn't have as much to be proud of.

Meese should continue in job during inquiry

Controversy and bad ethical judgment are no strangers to Edwin Meese III. The nation's attorney general, currently under criminal investigation for illegal activities associated with the scandal-plagued Wedtech Corp., has been an embarrassment to the Reagan administration.

On Wednesday, 11 members of the House Judiciary Committee investigating Meese asked him to step down pending the results of the investigation. The members, all Democrats, say Meese can't effectively do his job considering that he must spend so much time testifying before the committee.

They have a point. However, there is more here than the committee members would care to admit. Although Meese is undoubtedly a blemish to the White House and the nation — for more than whatever he may have to do with Wedtech — he should not be expected to step down.

To do so would be to imply guilt before any conviction is made. And that is simply unacceptable.

It is a safe bet that the Democrats' request is a thinly veiled attempt to bring yet more shame to Meese's Republican party. What they should remember is that Meese can probably handle that duty on his own.

FBI spying

Editor,

It's funny to watch the FBI in action in its surveillance of a Kansas student activist as reported in recent issues of the Collegian. The article is written in such a way as to make it seem absurd that the FBI would waste its time suspecting such an unlikely subject of gun-running, when his laughable little student group, with few members, desperately funded by brownie selling, is such small potatoes. Why it went after him, the article tells us, "is known only to the bureau."

One can read the article quickly without realizing that it is deeply political, although it may seem surprising to say so. One can see that it tries to defuse politics by concentrating on human interest and the absurd. Notice that if we were to read about such activities by the Soviet Union, namely, the massive apparatus of the state turned on anyone who organizes to question it, we would take it as evidence of what is fundamentally wrong with that state, in its attempt to control and stigmatize opposition and its treatment of its own citizens as the enemy.

When our state does this, however, the Collegian invites us all to laugh it off, to get our ideas of politics from Ackroyd and Chase in "Spies Like Us." I claim that this laughter is political, because it implies, for example, that the FBI is just dumb and overzealous in this one case, preventing the reader from worrying that the agency may have become profoundly undemocratic, now treating its own citizens as enemies. (This is also what we should have learned from Iran/Contra.) In short, this is humor that insulates and maintains current policies.

Further, in order to be funny, it must assume the FBI really did suspect this "soft-spoken and idealistic" guy of gun-running for Wichita. I think we might well ask if it is so dumb to have a pretext (such as "terrorism" and "communism") by which one can gain information about and therefore power over anyone whose opposition threatens to make any real difference status quo.

One can gain power over opposition without prosecution; intimidation, stigmatization, a siege atmosphere of patriotic loyalty and disloyalty, are just a few benefits of general surveillance and work all the better if your subjects are indeed unlikely. Perhaps we should assume that the readers of the article don't want to know why the bureau went after him and hundreds of other organizations.

Having said that, I admit that I appreciate the real evidence of government bumbling (flashes that the subject sees from attempted clandestine photos, directly asking suspects if they are sending guns to El Salvador), and enjoy all the humor. But I see how the "balanced" humor directed at small groups of student activists, stigmatizing them and breeding indifference to what they say, helps neutralize some of the most democratic forces we have left — surely more democratic than our current, image-oriented electoral process. If the Soviets open up their society more but still want to control their citizenry, they might start taking lessons from the U.S. about ways of getting the people themselves to contain dissent and to limit the circulation of information, ideas and questions.

Bad speech cure

Editor,

Mr. Kingsley is quite right to chastise the word choice in my letter responding to his column. I agree with him that practices designed to terminate debate are deplorable. I am happy to see my letter did not render him "speechless."

Nonetheless, Kingsley's response still fails to justify government censorship of speech about ideas. If there is a nationwide KKK conspiracy to murder millions, and if every member of the KKK is pledged to commit that atrocity, then every single member can and should be subject to criminal prosecution.

In the meantime, I still fear the government deciding what ideas are worth listening to and what ideas are not. I still protest the notion that unpopular groups could be labeled "terrorist" and thereby deprived of their speech. Kingsley's logic has been used before during the McCarthy era and is in use today against the PLO and groups such as CISPES.

I still maintain that the cure for bad speech is more and better speech, not censorship. As Kingsley's own writing proves, the more we learn about the KKK, the better equipped we are to oppose them.

Kudos to Kippes

Editor,

Kudos to Chris Kippes's commentary in Tuesday's Collegian. I am sure he couldn't have echoed the sentiments any better of not only myself but all the parents at the KSU Childcare Cooperative who wish to give our children the quality care they deserve. Is that so bad? I don't mind that the Senate did not pass the bill to fund the co-op, but it is remarks like those of Juli Kramer's that are unwarranted. Even my 4-year-old shows more self-restraint and class than Ms. Kramer. I suggest that Ms. Kramer spend a day at the co-op with the preschoolers and learn a few things.

KSU THEATER

Students benefit from accreditation

By Melinda Tiemeyer
Collegian Reporter

The K-State theater department is one of only 54 schools in the nation to be accredited with the National Association of Schools of Theater.

It is also the only accredited theater program in Kansas at this time. K-State became accredited five years ago and will reapply in 1989-90 for reaccreditation.

One of the reasons for the low number of schools accredited is that NAST has only been accrediting schools for approximately 10 years, said Harold Nichols, head of the speech and theater department.

"A lot of the institutions have simply not gone through the process," he said. "That should pick up dramatically over the next few years."

In order to become an accredited member of the Association, K-State had to apply for membership, a process which lasted approximately one year.

The process included a detailed study of the theater program by the department and by a visiting NAST committee.

"After our application had been submitted, the committee spent two days talking to students and faculty and observing classes," Nichols said.

The committee then submitted a report indicating whether K-State's program should be accredited, he said.

The report stated that the faculty was well-balanced and well-dispersed in age, sex and experience.

It went on to say that the students and faculty created a healthy, positive and self-critical atmosphere to study theater.

The major need seen by the committee was for an increase in staff and technical theater.

Nichols said he has been working on this suggestion.

"We have been trying to increase our staff in the scene and costume shop but funding sometimes makes that difficult," Nichols said.

At the time of the visit, Nichols Theatre was not yet completed, but the committee observed construction and the plans for the building.

"They thought the new facility was well-conceived and the impact of the theater significant," Nichols said.

The department's budget, library, quality of teaching, available space and distribution of courses were a few of the standards examined by the committee.

"They need to state the standards generally so that different institutions can perceive things in different ways," Nichols said. "When they come on campus, they can look more specifically."

Theater productions also play a role in the committee's final evaluation.

"They prefer to come to campus when performances are happening and look at the quality of the performances," he said.

Nichols said some choice is given to the school as to who they would like to have evaluate them.

The accreditation team consists of members from different universities across the nation. K-State was accredited by a team from Florida State and Brigham Young University.

Nichols, who has been a member of an accreditation team during the last three years, said that it is important to have people who understand and the institution they will be evaluating.

"I look for someone from a school who has similar degrees and types of problems, and someone who will be able to see if we have problems we weren't aware of," he said.

Advantages of attending an accredited school do not necessarily include better career opportunities, he said, but it does assure students that they will be receiving a quality education in a program which meets high standards.

"When our students are looking for graduate schools, the first place I will send them to is the list of accredited schools because you know those are the good programs," he said.

From Manhattan to Hollywood

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

Nancy Sloan lives in a different apartment now than she did last year.

But it's not your normal one-block-up and one-block-over move. Her apartment is nestled at the base of the famous Hollywood hill — quite a change from the midwestern town of Manhattan.

Relocating was essential for Sloan, former K-State student, after she landed a part on the soap opera "The Bold and the Beautiful" a little more than a year ago.

She was competing in the Irene Ryan American College Theatre Festival Competition in Iowa City, Iowa, last January when she was spotted by Victor Perillo, who is now her agent. He was holding a workshop at the competition when he saw Sloan. In the span of two weeks, she flew to Los Angeles, auditioned for the show and won the role of 16-year-old Katie Logan.

"It all happened so suddenly," said Sloan, who celebrated her one-year anniversary on the show on March 5.

Sloan, who called hers a "Cinderella story," said she has received mixed responses from other actors.

"The people on the (soap opera) thought it was great," she said. "But other actors in California who have been out of work for three or four years thought it was kind of a gyp."

Sloan won't let those negative remarks get her down, though, as she said her experience offers a "hopeful, optimistic outlook on Hollywood."

Taping for one segment of the show can sometimes be a tedious task, she said.

"It's harder than I thought it would be, mostly because of technical things," she said. "Sometimes we do take after take."

Because "The Bold and the Beautiful" is only a 30-minute show, the cast's schedule is a lot lighter than for those who work on an hour-long soap opera, she said.

They tape one show a day, Sloan said, adding that she is only required to be there if she is in a scene for that show.

A typical work day finds her at the set by 9 a.m. The morning is spent in rehearsal and the afternoon is devoted to taping, she said, adding that they are usually done for the day around 7 p.m. Bumping into other soap opera stars is not unusual for Sloan.

"'Young and the Restless' is filmed right across the hall," she said.

Contrary to popular belief, the actors are as unknowing as the audience is about their fate on the show.

"We have no idea — it really gets frustrating," she said. "We receive our script one week in advance and tape two weeks in advance, but other than that we guess as much as anyone else."

Sloan was 10 hours short of graduating when she left K-State. Although she is not enrolled in classes now, finishing her degree is a "definite must," she said.

"I want to get my master's (degree) and eventually teach," she said. "It's just been postponed a little."

Sloan is in a four-year contract with CBS. She will soon become eligible to join the Screen Actors Guild, which will allow her to audition for commercials. But as for long-term plans, she said she would prefer to leave them unstructured.

"I kind of like to leave it open," she said. "I don't know where there will be openings."

Leaving K-State was hard, she said, adding that she misses her friends and professors.

While a student at K-State, Sloan had the opportunity to work with associate professor of speech Kate Anderson.

"I miss her more than anyone I can think of," she said.

"I miss (Sloan), too," Anderson said. "Naturally we all respect her talent. We knew that one day she would be in the running."

Anderson had to admit she was surprised at the way Sloan got the part.

"It was a flukey thing — but it happened because she's good and because she was what they were looking for," she said.

Although Anderson said that one success story does not mean K-State's theater department is great, she does believe it reflects on the quality of the graduates.

"We train people to be very competent and professional," she said. "We have graduates working professionally all over the country — and that is because they were trained to think as well as perform."

One success story can make a difference to theater students, however.

"It inspires you a lot," said Beth Sherby, senior in theater. "It makes you think you can go out there and get work."

Sherby believes K-State's theater department deserves some recognition when a student such as Sloan succeeds in the professional world.

"It's an absolutely wonderful reflection of the department," she said. "We have teachers who teach real strong technique — and that is really important."

2 years at K-State prepared graduate for Chicago theater

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

"The Frogs" premieres in Chicago tonight and one of its cast members is a K-State graduate.

Dan Shea, graduate in social sciences, has a part in the aquatic musical comedy, which is to be performed in a swimming pool.

"We have a strong group (at K-State)," he said. "It all goes back to training."
—Dan Shea

"This is only the third wet production (of the play)," he said. Shea is contracted with Pegasus Players, the largest non-equity theater group in Chicago, for the run of the show.

Shea graduated in May 1987 and moved to Chicago in July 1987, arriving too late for summer theater auditions. He had several tidbits of advice for aspiring actors soon to enter the theater world.

"First of all, come up in May (to make theater auditions)," he said. "Also, really concentrate on audition material your last year in school. Push the teachers to push you."

Shea said the two years he spent doing theater at K-State helped prepare him for his experiences in Chicago.

"We have a strong group (at K-State)," he said. "It all goes back to training."

Breaking into the theater world has been quite different for Shea as compared to Nancy Sloan.

"My schedule is pretty hectic," he said, adding that he works part-time at a convenience store to make extra money when he is not working on the play.

Shea said that at first it was hard for him to accept Sloan's sudden rise to stardom.

"I admit I was a little jealous — it was like she didn't pay her dues," he said. "But now I wish her all the luck in the world."

Long-term career plans are unclear for Shea, as he said he is more interested in seeing "The Frogs" develop well. Shea said talent agents have reiterated how important it is for a budding actor to be patient.

"The hardest part is hanging in there until you get a big break," he said. "You just can't get frustrated."

Local business preserves Ahearn memories

By Jim Vader
Collegian Reporter

Thanks for the memories.

Although the final Big Eight basketball game was played in Ahearn Field House last Saturday, don't think that memories of Ahearn will die any time soon. The marketing of T-shirts and other memorabilia will likely keep the Ahearn legend alive for some time.

David Smale, a Manhattan resident who recently opened a new company called Sport-Memories, said the end of Ahearn was an impetus to start his company.

"Everything just fell into place for us," Smale said. "Being in Manhattan, the passing of Ahearn and the idea about the preservation of memories, we thought we could begin here.

"We want to preserve the memories of sport events that happen on college campuses," he said.

To do that, Smale is working on a book — "The K-State Tradition" — that will recount the history of Ahearn.

"We are working with the athletic department, so it plays a role with the gathering of information going into the book," Smale said.

"The department has given me access to information and sources who I interview to get personal insights on Ahearn — stories that make Ahearn special and which I think people will really enjoy reading," he said.

"We have a great coach and the greatest student body I've ever visited."

—Fred Bramlage

Smale said the book will be full of exciting and personal stories that he has researched.

Research is what makes it so interesting. For example, David Hall, who has the record for the most rebounds in a single game (27), had to be taken out of the game because of an asthma attack. The reason for the attack was based on the theory that the crowd was causing such a commotion that the dirt floor surrounding the basketball court was being swirled into the air.

"The K-State Tradition" will not be a picture book but will have facts, statistics and trivia about the building and the people who made the tradition what it is.

With the passing of Ahearn comes the advent of Bramlage Coliseum, the new home of the 'Cats.

"I hope that it's a great success," said Fred Bramlage, the Junction City businessman for whom the coliseum is named. "We have a great coach and the greatest student body I've ever visited."

Bramlage, who has had season tickets since Ahearn was built, thought the last win against the University of Missouri was the best victory he had ever seen.

"I got interested in the coliseum when I learned the students pledged $7 million, which made me get involved," Bramlage said.

"(Ahearn's) time has passed, and I hope the coliseum can be just as, if not more, successful," he said.

Musicians hijack Soviet jet
Mother shot by own family; 9 dead

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — A family of musicians from Siberia who hijacked an Aeroflot jet hid their weapons inside their instruments, then opened fire and set off a bomb when an army assault team stormed the grounded plane, Soviet media said Thursday.

Five of the hijackers, who were led by two brothers and their mother, died in the assault and subsequent fire aboard the jetliner on Tuesday, as did three passengers and a stewardess, Tass said. Two of the sky pirates committed suicide and the matriarch, once honored as a Hero Mother of the Soviet Union, was shot dead by family members, the official news agency said.

Deputy Civil Aviation Minister Ivan Vasin told the government newspaper Izvestia that the hijacking was the most dramatic he could recall in his long career.

Eleven hijackers commandeered the Tupolev-154 jet as it was en route to Leningrad after a fueling stop in the Ural Mountains city of Kurgan, and they told the pilot to fly to London, Tass said. It identified them as the Ovechkins, a family musical group from Irkutsk, the southern Siberian city where the flight originated.

"Eyewitnesses pointed to three leaders among the criminal team — Vasily and Oleg Ovechkin and their mother Ninel Ovechkin, a plump, fashionably dressed woman of over 50," Tass said.

"They had brought the weapons and explosives aboard the plane in their musical instruments," Tass reported. It gave no details of the Ovechkins' background and did not say how they managed to elude airport security.

Pre-flight checks at airports in the Soviet Union are not uniform, and range from screenings by metal detectors, friskings and a meticulous search of carry-on baggage to a perfunctory glance at passengers' tickets.

The airport at Irkutsk, 2,600 miles southeast of Moscow, is a major hub for flights throughout Siberia, and is often jammed with people who sometimes wait for days to make connecting flights.

About 3 p.m. Moscow time, while the Tu-154 with 76 passengers was over the Vologda region east of Leningrad, the hijackers sent a note to the cockpit, Tass said.

Izvestia, in its report on the hijack, quoted the note as saying: "Fly to a capitalist country (London). Don't fly any lower. Otherwise we'll explode a bomb."

The flight crew contacted the ground, and a plan was worked out to dupe the hijackers into thinking they were landing in Finland.

The assault team was waiting when the Tu-154 touched down at a field near Leningrad, Tass said.

The Sovietskaya Rossiya daily said the four-man flight crew, led by Pilot First Class Valentin Kupriyanov, kept their heads when confronted by the hijackers' demands.

"After landing, the crew entered into negotiations with the bandits, asking them to give up their criminal intentions and not to endanger passengers' lives," the newspaper said.

But the hijackers refused to listen, it said.

"With every passing minute, they became more aggressive, and started to behave like hooligans in the cabin. The armed bandits threatened to kill passengers."

"Under those conditions, the only decision that could be taken was to render the criminals harmless," Sovietskaya Rossiya said.

When the assault team stormed aboard, the hijackers opened fire, Tass said.

They set off a bomb in the airliner's tail section, setting the plane on fire, Tass said. "An air hostess and three passengers were killed as a result of this terrorism," it said.

"Five of the 11 criminals were killed," Tass said, without giving details.

Annual conference to aid horsemen

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

A live demonstration of western riding techniques and lectures on horse management will bring horse enthusiasts together Saturday for the Seventh Annual Horseman's Conference.

The conference, sponsored by Kansas Cooperative Extension Service, the Department of Animal Science and Industry and the KSU Horseman's Association, is expected to attract more than 350 people.

"We already have 300 people pre-registered, which is more than total attendance in previous years," said Dennis Sigler, professor in animal science and industry and adviser to KSU Horseman's Association. He expects an additional 50 to 100 participants to register on the day of the conference.

Horse industry experts from Kansas and Oklahoma will lecture on horse management. Saturday afternoon's session in Umberger Hall will be divided into two sections. The first half will center on horse health care. Alberto Broce, Department of Entomology, Mike Clem, College of Veterinary Medicine, and Gerry Posler, Department of Agronomy, are the featured speakers.

The second half of the lecture session will feature Don Topliff, Oklahoma State University horse program, who will speak on feeding for maximum performance. Sigler will address confirmational considerations for performance horse selection.

The highlight of the conference will be Saturday evening's live demonstration of Western riding techniques in Weber Arena. The demonstration will feature Mark Gratny, Leavenworth, owner of a multi-purpose horse facility, who will also answer questions concerning spoiled horses and the retraining of problem horses.

Senate hears Sports Club request

By The Collegian Staff

Sports Club Council made a five-minute presentation to student senators Thursday, asking them to consider additional funding for the organization.

Currently, the Sports Club Council is a separate organization from Recreational Services. It consists of the rodeo, parachute, rugby, sailing and gymnastics clubs and the men's and women's soccer teams.

According to Matt Queen, club chairman and treasurer and senior in chemical science, the council presents an annual budget to Senate for its needs. The approved budget is given to the club as a whole and distributed among the clubs in the council.

Last year, Sports Club received $4,000 to help cover the difference between its costs and the amount of funding the groups could raise on their own. This year, the club has requested more than $10,000 from Senate in financial support.

Queen said the money from Senate goes toward printing, advertising, equipment and referees for some sports. None of the money acquired from Senate pays for food, travel or lodging for the players, he said.

Approximately 500 students, 15 percent of whom are international students, make up the various sports clubs. Each requires dues from its members, generating income for the teams. Other funding comes from clinics and car washes which the clubs sponsor during the season.

Contras agree to open agenda; way cleared for negotiations

By The Associated Press

MIAMI — The Nicaraguan Contras on Thursday dropped a demand that had blocked peace talks with their homeland's Marxist government, agreeing to the open agenda proposed by the Sandinistas.

The rebel group made the announcement at a news conference here where its leaders bitterly criticized the United States for cutting off Contra aid.

"The United States has once again abandoned an ally," said Adolfo Calero, one of six directors of the Nicaraguan Resistance. "But we have been abandoned before. We will continue our efforts."

Calero said the rebels will now accept the proposed open agenda for talks in Sapoa, Nicaragua, and suggested the talks begin March 16.

"We are ready to go to Sapoa," said Calero, who will head the delegation.

He said the Nicaraguan Resistance, as the Contras are formally known, would no longer insist that the agenda include a program hammered out during talks mediated by Nicaraguan Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo in Guatemala last month. That included a 30-day truce, political amnesty, press freedoms, an end to the draft.

Wildcats to face Nebraska in first round

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — R. Crosby Kemper Memorial Arena will be the focus of national attention come April when it's the site of the NCAA Final Four.

K-State coach Lon Kruger isn't so sure the Big Eight Conference Postseason tournament, which begins today in Kemper, will be as widely recognized.

"I think we all remember from last year that this tournament was a tough but enjoyable competition," Kruger said. "This tournament has established itself as one of the toughest in the country."

The reason Kruger made that statement is the parity in the conference. Aside from Oklahoma, which the Wildcat coach said is head and shoulders above the rest of the league, how the other teams do in the opening round is wide open.

With that in mind, number two seed K-State begins its quest for a third postseason championship tonight against Nebraska. Tipoff is at 6:10 p.m.

The Wildcats, 20-7 overall and 11-3 in conference play, have two wins over the Cornhuskers this season. Kruger said anytime a team plays a club for a third time, there is reason for concern.

"We have a lot of respect for Nebraska. We feel like they are one of the hardest playing teams in the league. They compete very well and are very scrappy and enthusiastic," Kruger said.

Nebraska coach Danny Nee said the 'Huskers, 13-17 and 4-10, need consistency to beat K-State.

"Sometimes we hit dry spells," Nee said. "(K-State), on the other hand, is consistent. We'll need to play 40 minutes of good basketball in order to win."

Nebraska is one of only two teams in the Big Eight to surpass its scoring average against the 'Cats. The Cornhuskers standout forward Derrick Vick is one of just five players to reach his scoring standard against K-State.

"Anytime you gain a little experience, you feel better. This ballclub is a year older. We've been through it all together once, and I think there is a little bit of comfort with being familar (with playing in Kemper)."
—Lon Kruger

Vick, who leads the team in scoring and rebounding, knows Nebraska will have to win the tournament in order to qualify for postseason competition. Last season, the 'Huskers made it to the semifinals of the National Invitation Tournament.

"We have to do every thing we can to win the game," Vick said. "We will be up for the game. One loss and you're out, so we don't want it to be our last game."

Mitch Richmond, K-State's leading scorer, averaging 23.1 points a game, said he has noticed a difference about this trip to Kansas City.

"We played Marquette here this year and North Carolina here last year, so I think that makes Kemper like our home court," Richmond said. "We feel pretty comfortable about playing here."

"Anytime you gain a little experience, you feel better," Kruger said. "This ballclub is a year older. We've been through it all together once, and I think there is a little bit of comfort with being familar (with playing in Kemper)."

If K-State wins tonight, it will play at 3:10 p.m. Saturday against the winner of the Kansas — Oklahoma State matchup. Other first round games today put top seed Oklahoma against Colorado and Iowa State against Missouri. The tournament concludes at 3:10 p.m. Sunday with the championship game.

NOTES...K-State leads the overall series with Nebraska 98-73...The 'Cats are 13-1 against the Cornhuskers in Kansas City...The four previous encounters with Nebraska have been all Wildcat wins, but the four games were decided by a mere six points...K-State guard Steve Henson leads the nation in free throw percentage (94.7), connecting on 71 of 75 attempts this season.

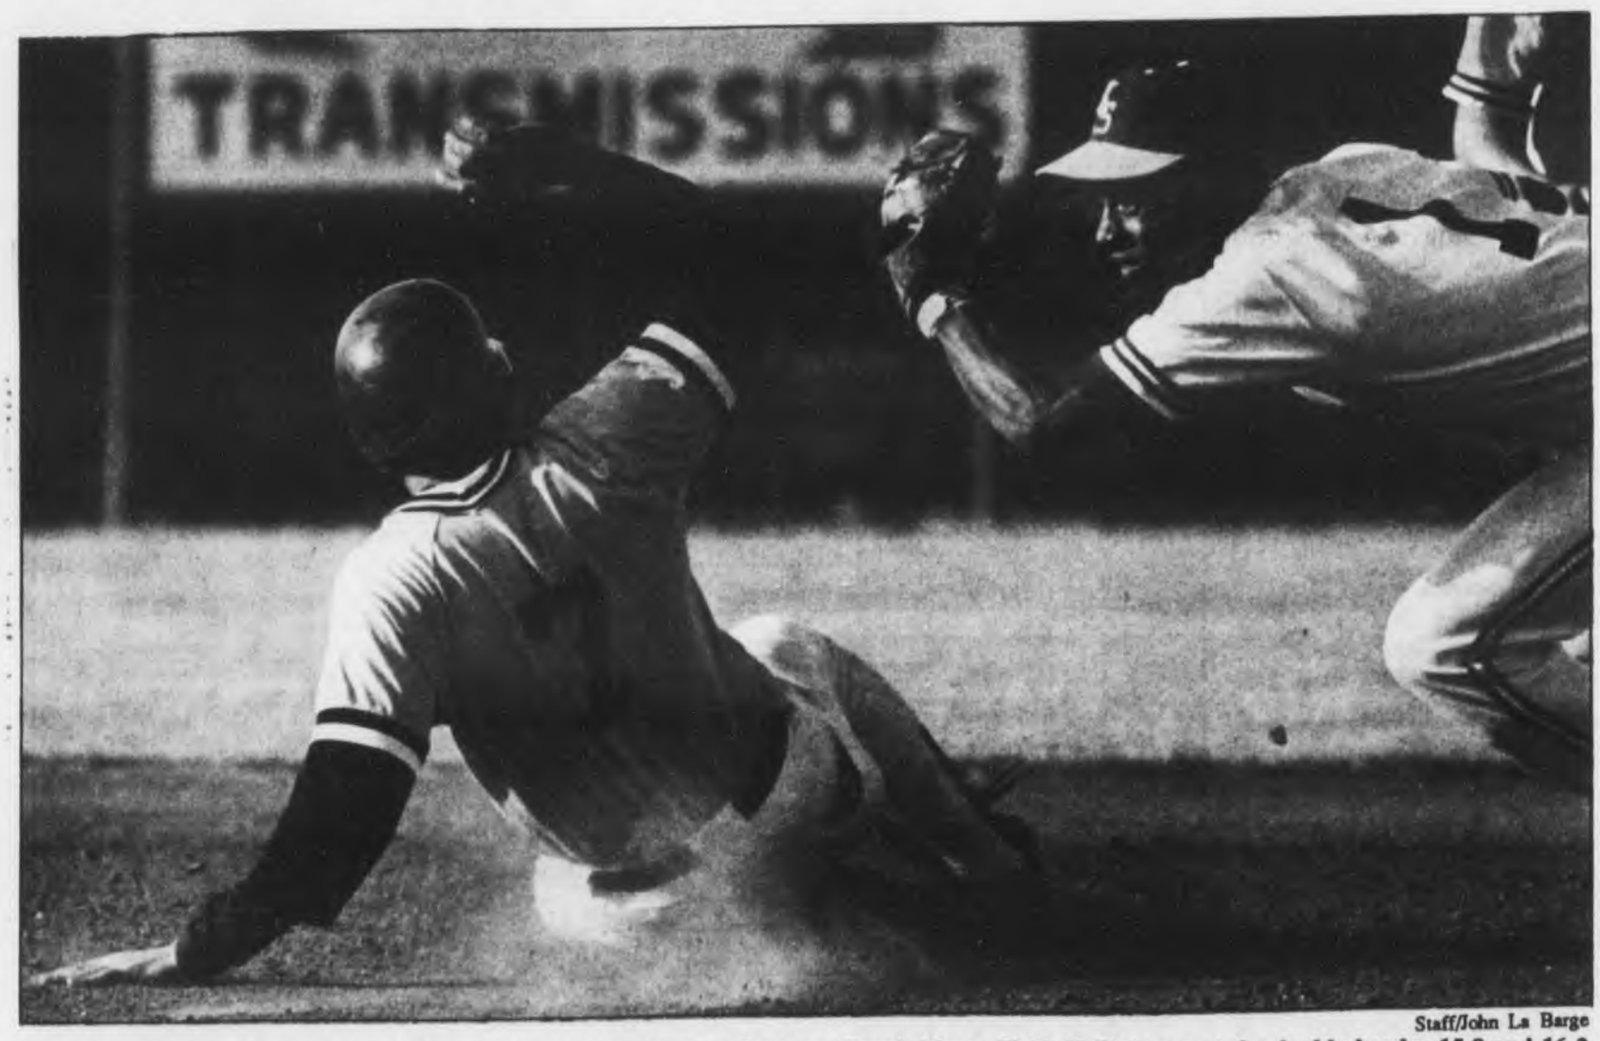
Big Eight Postseason Tournament

Friday Games Saturday Games Sunday Game

Buffs look for upset

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — No. 4 Oklahoma, figuring it has something to lose and very little to gain, takes on eighth-seeded Colorado Friday in a first-round game in the Big Eight postseason tournament that figures to be a laugher.



The Sooners, the top seed and regular season Big Eight champions, whacked last-place Colorado by more than 40 points in their last meeting and a similar rout is expected when they square off at 2 p.m. But nobody is expecting runaway in the first game Friday pitting Missouri, the defending Big Eight champion, against up-and-down Iowa State.

"That will be a great game. It could be the best game of this tournament," said Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs.

In the two evening games Friday, K-State meets Nebraska and Kansas goes against Oklahoma State. The winner of Sunday's finale will get the Big Eight's automatic entry in the NCAA Tourney, but conference officials make no secret of their desire to have at least five NCAA teams when the bracket is announced early Sunday evening.

Three of the seniors making their final appearance in the Big Eight Tournament are their school's career scoring leaders — Jeff Grayer of Iowa State, Derrick Chievous of Missouri and Danny Manning of Kansas, who has become the conference's all-time scoring leader. In addition, K-State's Mitch Richmond, a junior college transfer, has scored more points than any other K-Stater did in two seasons.

"This conference has the best senior class in the country," said K-State Coach Lon Kruger.

Sean Collins, second baseman for K-State, tries to put the tag on a Fort Hays State runner in the second inning of game two Thursday afternoon at Frank Myers Field. K-State swept the double-header 15-8 and 16-2 and improved its record to 7-3.

'Cats claim wins in double-header

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State baseball team ran its record to 7-3 with a double-header sweep of Fort Hays State, 15-8 and 16-2, Thursday afternoon at Frank Myers Field.

David Hierholzer earned his first win of the season, going four-plus innings and allowing only three hits in relief of starter Darryl Rowley.

"We did well," coach Mike Clark said. "Darryl (Rowley) had a rough outing, but David Hierholzer came in and did an excellent job of shutting them down. Our offense came in gear and did real well."

In the opener, K-State fell behind 6-0 thanks to a pair of homers by Larry Lang, one a three-run shot and the other a two-run blast. Both were helped by a strong wind that was blowing out to left field.

The 'Cats fought back with two runs in the third, four in the fourth and five more in the fifth.

Mike Rosenboom and Scott Spangenberg keyed K-State's 15-hit attack with three hits each.

The second contest saw the 'Cats jump off to a 4-0 lead thanks to a three-run homer by David Chadd and a sacrifice fly by Spangenberg.

Chadd added a two-run single in the third to widen the lead after the Tigers had scored in the top of the inning.

On the mound, Zack Kimbell picked up his second win of the season and his second complete game. He allowed only six hits, including four in the final inning.

Action will resume for the 'Cats March 15-16, when they travel to New Mexico State University in Las Cruses to compete in a seven-game invitational.

"It will be a good challenge for us," Clark said. "We're going to try to play the best ball we can, and work on being the best team we can, and build on it."

Bears wait for tournament opponent

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — As one of the first teams to qualify for the 50th NCAA Basketball Tournament, the happy Bears of Southwest Missouri State have three questions:

Who? Where? When?

Somewhere out there awaits a first-round opponent for the rising power from Springfield, Mo. The Bears could meet this foe at one of a dozen sites around the country. Their second consecutive trip to the NCAA Tournament will begin either next Thursday or Friday.

The answers will come all at once on Sunday. For the Bears and their growing band of followers in Springfield and across Missouri, it's like waiting for Chirstmas morning.

"There's a lot of electricity, a lot of excitement around here this week," said assistant coach Randy Stange. "We're very proud, and very excited."

A year ago, the Bears knew their patient and well conceived building plan was about to bear fruit. But after losing four seniors off a 28-6 club that made it to the second round of the NCAA Tourney, a quick return trip comes as a happy and very unexpected surprise.

It's quite a success story which head coach Charlie Spoonhour and his staff have written in Springfield. The school took the plunge into Division I in 1982, By 1986, the Bears were good enough to make the National Invitational Tournament.

Then next year came their first NCAA bid, which ended with a 67-63 loss in the second round to Danny Manning and Kansas.

Now, with a 22-6 mark and a 12-2 record that brought in the Mid-Contintent Conference title, it's NCAA time once again.

It was a December night at K-State when this unlikely collection of newcomers and role players began coalescing into a cohesive unit of winners. Twice leading by 13 points in the second half, the Bears could not stop a K-State rally that tied it 57-57 in regulation.

The underdog visitors from Springfield then proceeded to lose leads of 65-61 in the first overtime, 71-65 in the second and 74-71 in the third. Finally, Holt went five-for-six from the free-throw line in the fourth overtime as the Bears pinned an exhausting 82-80 defeat on a K-State team destined to finish second in the powerful Big Eight.

K-State sends four to compete in meet

By The Collegian Staff

Four members of the K-State track team will take part in the National Indoor Track and Field Championships at Oklahoma City, Okla., today and Saturday, with all having good chances to come home with All-America honors.

"All the athletes that we're taking have a good chance to place in the top six," said K-State track coach John Capriotti. "They're all performing well and they're starting to peak at the right time."

The four that will be participating in the championships are Kenny Harrison — the lone member of the men's team — in the long jump and triple jump, Joy Jones in the 55-meter and the 200-meter dash, Kim Kilpatrick in the 55-meter hurdles, and Dede Henderson in the high jump.

Capriotti felt optimistic about the chances of each of the girls being named All-Americans.

"Joy is going to her first indoor national meet and she should do well," Capriotti said. "But she has some stiff competition and she'll also be a little nervous.

"Kim is so relaxed and ready to go, and she's got her form (for the hurdles) down," he said. "Dede is doing well and she should place in the top six."

And of Kenny Harrison, Capriotti said: "Well, he's been here before and he knows what he's capable of doing. He should come back with a couple of championships."

Sports Briefly

Golf team set to open season

The K-State men's golf team will open its 1988 spring season this Monday and Tuesday when the Wildcats travel to San Antonio, Texas, to take part in the Texas-San Antonio Invitational.

A field of 15 teams is expected to compete in the invitational which will be contested at the par 72 Dominion Country Club. Action will include 18 holes a day.

Five lettermen return from a year ago when K-State posted its best team score in 15 years at the Big Eight Conference Championships.

Lettermen returning this spring include Todd Fowler, Troy Keller, Daran Neuschafer, Jeff Sedorcek and John Shields. From that group, all but Fowler are expected to compete at San Antonio. Senior Chris Gomez will join that foursome of lettermen to comprise the 'Cats' tourney entry.

Tee time for Monday will be 10 a.m. with final round action on Tuesday slated to begin at 8 a.m.

Tennis team to end layoff

After nearly a month since its last competitive action, the K-State women's tennis team is primed to return to the courts this weekend in Jacksonville, Fla., to begin a series of dual matches with area Florida schools.

Head coach Steve Bietau says the trip will be a chance to tie together several aspects of play on which the Wildcats have been working.

"We're rough around the edges with not having had much match play," Bietau said. "However, our conditioning has been heavy these past weeks so, physically, we're in good shape. The women have prepared themselves well for these matches."

K-State opens action at 11 a.m. on Saturday against Temple. On Sunday, the Wildcats take on Jacksonville at 11 a.m. North Florida, ranked No. 1 in the NAIA, will be K-State's opponent on Monday at 2 p.m. Tuesday's action has K-State against Flagler College, ranked No. 2 in the NAIA. The Wildcats end their Florida dual matches on Wednesday at noon against Florida A&M at Tallahassee.

The dual matches should be challenging for the Wildcats who look to improve on their 2-2 season record.

"The level of competition will be excellent in Florida," Bietau said. "We want to challenge ourselves to similar type play as we would expect in the Big Eight Conference. That way when April comes around we will be more experienced."

'Jimmy Reardon' a waste

New movie not worth admission

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reviewer

Occasionally a movie comes along that leaves all of the intelligent members of the audience with a question.

Not "What was the true meaning of that movie?" or "How did they film that particular scene?", but "Why would anyone spend millions of dollars to produce a film this awful?"

"A Night in the Life of Jimmy Reardon" is just such a movie.

Movie Review

As the title implies, the movie is about the life of Reardon (played by River Phoenix), a young man faced with deciding what to do with the rest of his life during the last few days of the summer vacation following his graduation from high school.

His big dilemma concerns money. He was forced to use his college savings account to pay for an acquaintance's abortion, and thus does not have the money to enter the state university in the fall.

His domineering father — the most intriguing character in the show — will give him money if he attends a local business school — his father's alma mater. That thought does not appeal to the younger Reardon.

He tries one colorful plot after another to acquire enough money to attend the state university. No luck.

Then he decides his future is in Hawaii, and turns his attention to getting enough money to buy an airplane ticket. No luck.

The only thing Reardon has success with is having sex with every girl in sight, except his girlfriend.

The problem with this movie, or the main problem (because there are several), is that it tries to make a broad comment about the social class system.

Reardon's father is trying to move the family into the upper classes, but he lacks any of the social graces which are often associated with the wealthy elite.

Due to his quick wit, the younger Reardon is moving there much faster. He becomes so involved with the lives and problems of the wealthy that he sometimes forgets he is not one of them.

At times you think the movie is saying there is no difference between upper and lower class, and then it turns around and does the opposite.

It is an extremely slow-moving show that leaves the audience bored and uninspired. It aims for quick, crude comedy — Eddie Murphy or Howie Mandel style — but fails miserably.

Do not go and see this movie. The advertisements may be cute and the title may sound interesting, but the movie is neither cute nor interesting.

It is not worth the price of a matinee, let alone full price.

I give it a D. Its only redeeming quality is that it is in color.

Singer Andy Gibb dies at 30 after stomach pain complaints

By The Associated Press

LONDON — Andy Gibb, who followed his brothers, the Bee Gees, to pop stardom but saw his career falter after he became heavily involved with drugs, died Thursday at the age of 30.

The Australian-born Gibb died at John Radcliffe Hospital in Oxford, 50 miles northwest of London, at 8:45 a.m., a hospital statement said. The cause of death was not given, according to a spokesman for Island Records Ltd. who asked not to be identified.

Press Association, the domestic British news agency, said Gibb was admitted to the hospital on Monday, discharged, and readmitted Wednesday night after complaining of stomach pains.

Gibb, who at times sang in a falsetto voice, had a string of hits in the late 1970s and early 1980s and was twice nominated for Grammy Awards. His chart-toppers included "I Just Want To Be Your Everything," "Love Is Thicker Than Water," "Shadow Dancing," "Everlasting Love," and "Our Love (Don't Throw It All Away)."

Despite his successful solo career, Gibb never fully emerged from the shadow of his older superstar brothers, Maurice, Robin and Barry, who formed the Bee Gees. Last year, Gibb went into bankruptcy proceedings.

In 1982, Gibb acknowledged he became heavily involved in drugs and dropped his career after the break-up of his highly publicized relationship with television star Victoria Principal.

Three years later, he entered the Betty Ford Rehabilitation Center in Rancho Mirage, Calif., for treatment of a cocaine habit.

"This is really a shock," said his Miami lawyer, John Kozyak. "The last time I saw him, he looked perfectly healthy to me. He was playing tennis."

Gibb had been living in Miami.

Gibb's manager, Robert Stigwood, said in New York he was "very sad and deeply distressed, and sorry. I have been in touch with his parents and brothers. I will miss him."

Dick Ashby, the Bee Gees' representative in Miami, said Gibb's mother, Barbara Gibb, was with him when he died.

The record company spokesman said Gibb signed a contract with Island Records two months ago and was due to work on a new album this spring.

Gibb was divorced from his wife, Kim, in 1978. The couple had one child, a daughter, Peta, 12.

Jews wound 3 Arabs

Riots continue in West Bank

By The Associated Press

HEBRON, Occupied West Bank — Palestinians rioted near Jewish enclaves and Jews drove down Arab streets early Thursday firing at houses and savaging cars, the army and witnesses said. Soldiers wounded three Arabs.

Troops shot and critically wounded two other Arabs in the occupied Gaza Strip, hospital officials said.

In a new leaflet issued Thursday, underground Palestinian strike leaders told residents of the occupied territories to take revenge on Jewish settlers, Palestinians who aid Israel and those who sympathize with Jordan.

Leaflet No. 10, signed by the PLO's United Leadership of the Uprising, also ordered all Arab policemen to resign and told Palestinian merchants to boycott Israeli products and reduce prices charged to Arabs.

Two alleged collaborators have been reported killed since Arab riots began Dec. 8 in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, which Israel captured from Jordan and Egypt in the 1967 Middle East war. At least 87 Palestinians have been killed by Israeli gunfire or beatings, and hundreds have been wounded.

Police detained Moussa and Ali Darwish, who were free pending trial on charges of printing thousands of PLO leaflets in east Jerusalem, Israel radio reported.

Jews in Hebron, a city of 50,000 Arabs with two small Jewish enclaves, said they were awakened shortly before midnight by Arabs shouting "Slaughter the Jews!" and "God is Great!" Some settlers said they rushed into the street and fired warning shots because they feared attacks on their homes.

Rabbi Moshe Levinger told The Associated Press the Arabs "ran down near the synagogue. They wanted to enter Jewish homes. We responded by throwing stones and firing in the air. If we hadn't stopped them ... there would have been a slaughter of Jews, men, women and children."

Noam Arnon, another resident of the 40-family Beit Hadassah complex where Levinger lives, said Arabs did not attack Jewish homes.

"There was no damage to Jewish property," he said, adding that he believed militants from the Kiryat Arba settlement outside Hebron were responsible for damaging Arab property.

The area military commander also disputed Levinger's claim.

"It's important to stress that the riots were directed at the army and at no stage was there an intention or attempt to attack Jewish homes," the commander, who did not give his name, said on Israel radio.

Arab residents of Hebron said they were awakened early Wednesday by carloads of settlers raiding their neighborhoods.

"All the city was sleeping. There was nobody in the streets," said Mustafa Natsche, the former mayor.

His cousin, Abdul-Rahman Natsche, said: "Suddenly there was a sort of battle under the windows of my house — shooting, crying, moaning. The settlers demolished the cars of Arabs and shot at the windows of homes."

An AP reporter saw seven vandalized cars, including a station wagon with all its windows smashed and another gutted by fire. The cars were in four divergent locations, some more than a mile from any Jewish settlement.

The owner of the burned-out car, Khader Kafishei, reported seeing a Jew set it ablaze and pointed to bullet holes in the windows of his home.

Arab residents showed several revolver cartridges they said were collected after the raids and said they turned over hundreds of casings to Israeli authorities as evidence.

Levinger claimed 500 Arabs were rioting and came to within 100 yards of Jewish homes. He said about 50 settlers defended the homes.

An AP reporter saw no apparent damage either to the stone facing of Beit Hadassah, a former hospital, or the other Jewish enclave, Tel Rumayda. Only a few hundred Jews live in Beit Hadassah and Tel Rumayda.

Army spokesmen said 20 to 30 Arabs were involved in each of three disturbances in Hebron, and Jewish settlers set one Arab car ablaze.

FAA recommends fine for Air Midwest

Agency charges improper repairs

By The Associated Press

WICHITA — Federal regulators have proposed fining Air Midwest $160,000 for 15 alleged maintenance violations uncovered during a 1987 inspection of fleet records.

A Feb. 22 letter from the Federal Aviation Administration to the Wichita-based regional commuter airline made public Thursday said each of the alleged violations could have subjected the airline to a civil penalty of as much as $1,000, or a total of more than $1.6 million. More than 1,600 flights were made by airplanes while they had alleged problems. Each of the flights is considered a separate violation, an FAA spokesman said.

"However, after careful consideration of all available information, including the fact your company has taken appropriate steps to correct the problem of maintenance deferrals above indicated, we would be willing to accept $160,000 in settlement of this matter," Kenneth E. Geier, FAA's Kansas City-based regional counsel, wrote in the Feb. 22 letter.

FAA spokesman Robert Raynesford said when an airline cooperates with investigators, as Air Midwest did, that fact is taken into consideration.

"And the Air Midwest stuff, to begin with, was not essential to safety," Raynesford said.

In June, Air Midwest voluntarily grounded 18 planes for repairs after the FAA issued preliminary findings from a one-month intensive records examination by about a dozen FAA experts.

Robert L. Priddy, Air Midwest president, said Thursday he has asked the FAA to schedule an informal conference so his company can review the allegations individually with personnel from the federal agency.

"Not a single airline in this country that has undergone such an inspection has gotten away without some kind of fine," Priddy said. "We have an excellent safety record. It's enviable. No one has ever been killed on an Air Midwest flight in our 22 years of operation."

Priddy said his company still is investigating each allegation and hasn't decided what its stance will be at the FAA conference that has yet to be set.

Most of the 15 alleged violations concern the postponement of maintenance or repairs FAA regulators claim shouldn't have been deferred. In some instances, allegedly improper repairs were made.

The alleged violations range from one plane making 24 flights without a required emergency exit placard to another aircraft that made 291 flights with a broken wing mounting bracket.

Some of the alleged violations involved repairs made in a manner FAA inspectors said weren't permitted under procedures established by the manufacturer of the airplanes involved.

Air Midwest operates 44 planes to 41 cities in nine states under its name and the TWA Express and Eastern Air Midwest designations. About 63,000 passengers rode Air Midwest planes in January.

The FAA implemented a stepped-up maintenance records inspection program in 1985.

Republican Pat Robertson, who finished a distant third to Bush and Sen. Bob Dole in the Super Tuesday contests, said, "Strange things happen in politics, so I have no reason to get out." However, Robertson, campaigning in Chicago, said he planned to buy no television ads in Illinois, which has its primary next Tuesday.

He said he expected to pick up a bit of support from conservatives who had backed Kemp.

Bush flew to Illinois to press his campaign for the 82 GOP delegates at stake in the state's primary. And he quickly took up a new issue, saying he was "tired of being embarrassed" by scandals surrounding public officials, though he named no names.

Democrats Michael Dukakis, Jesse Jackson and Albert Gore Jr. also campaigned in Illinois for a share of the 173 delegates at stake in their party's primary there.

Rep. Gephardt, D-Mo., who is focusing on Michigan, was joining the other hopefuls in Chicago for a dinner and town meeting Thursday night.

Bush, speaking about what he would do if elected president, promised to create the ethics panel and also to set up a deficit summit with congressional leaders on "day one" of his administration.

"When a congressman goes bad or someone in the executive branch violates the public trust, it hurts," Bush told a Governor's Club luncheon at the Chicago Hilton. "I'm tired of being embarrassed. I'm tired of seeing our children seeing things that should embarrass us all. People at all levels of government should come to serve, not to profit."

"Clearly, I have big plans," he told the audience of Republican boosters, who sat silently throughout the speech.

Kemp withdrew from the GOP field after a string of third- and fourth-place finishes in the early primaries and caucuses. But the New York congressman hinted that he would be interested in the No. 2 spot on the ticket.

"Obviously you don't make plans to run for vice president," Kemp said at a Capitol Hill news conference. But he called the idea "a very flattering and awesome thought. ... Would I think about it? The answer to that is yes."

Kemp refused to endorse any of the remaining Republican contenders. "They're all Reagan conservatives," he said.

The embattled Hart, who polled no more than 5 percent of the vote in any of the Super Tuesday primaries and won no convention delegates, planned to announce his withdrawal from the campaign at a news conference on Friday in Denver, said sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The departure would mark the second time the one-time Democratic front-runner had quit the 1988 race. Hart withdrew last May after questions were raised about his relationship with model Donna Rice.

Gephardt, who also fared poorly on Super Tuesday, issued an ultimatum to his own campaign: Michigan or bust.

"If we don't do well here obviously we aren't going to be able to continue in this race," the Missouri congressman said before a rally in Lansing. "Our real thrust, our real force is going to be in Michigan," which has its caucus on March 26.

The Gephardt campaign plans to shore up its forces in Michigan with as many as 70 paid staffers, who are scheduled to arrive by next week. In comparison, the campaign has about 20 paid staffers in Illinois.

Dole, who failed to capture any Super Tuesday states from Bush, focused on the vice president's chances of winning in November against any of the Democratic candidates.

"My view is it's going to be a very tough, tough race for George Bush," Dole said in Chicago. "He does not attract Democrats or independents."

"I would be a much stronger candidate. That's the message we're going to try to make in the next couple of days," he said.

Gore also questioned whether his party's front-runner, Massachusetts Gov. Dukakis, could defeat the Republican nominee in November.

"The people want a president who understands it's necessary to fight for working men and women, not a technocratic manager," Gore said as he greeted commuters at a downtown Chicago mass transit stop. "For those who want another election blowout and see the Democratic party losing 49 of 50 states, vote for Mike Dukakis."

resources.

Funding for 13 faculty and eight technical positions became a reality during Coffman's term, increasing the college's resources. He also aimed his attention at a renewed 20-year agenda, one that included two curricula changes, in order "to retain many of the values the college had."

A variety of factors contribute to K-State's reputation of excellence in veterinary medicine, Coffman said.

"It is tied in part to the school's location, their traditional set of values plus a strong work ethic. As a rule, it has held fundamental values of working hard. Its atmosphere is open," Coffman said.

He completed his term last year when he accepted the position of K-State provost.

Don Trotter spent 13 years as dean of K-State's vet school before he retired.

As dean, "we tried hard to do as much as we could for teaching, service and research," Trotter said.

He added the school's tradition relies on the involvement of the people. "It's the people. We can only give them the basics," Trotter said.

During Trotter's term, there was growth in the school. It was granted federal funding, and due to grant requirements, class size grew to 105.

One building in K-State's vet complex is named after Trotter. He is the author of "Review of 80 Years — College of Veterinary Medicine, Kansas State University."

E.E. Leasure, a 1930 graduate, served as dean from 1948 to 1964.

Prior to serving as dean, he was head of the physiology department. During his tenure, plans for the Veterinary Medicine building were made. Dykstra Hall, now housing university facilities and the post office, was completed in 1955 on a budget of $600,000.

Leasure's administrative duties continued while serving as president of the American Veterinary Medicine Association in 1961.

Talbot started his administrative career at the University of Georgia.

"Georgia was an established school and we accomplished all our objectives in five years," Talbot said.

The situation was different, however, at Virginia Tech.

At the time, there were few veterinary medicine schools on the East Coast, Talbot said. Virginia and Maryland decided to build a vet school involving the two states.

"They asked me to help plan the new school. It was a challenge to help them. Then they asked me to serve as dean," he said.

Talbot agreed, but only to a short term.

"I said I would be dean through the first four classes," Talbot said, who now serves as professor at Virginia Tech. "I considered it a tremendous privilege to create something new."

Soldiers may leave Honduras

By The Associated Press

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — President Jose Azcona said Sunday the 3,200 U.S. soldiers on an emergency mission in Honduras probably won't be needed much longer because Nicaraguan troops are retreating from Honduran territory.

"Things are getting back to normal," Azcona said in an interview Sunday, a day after two Honduran warplanes fired rockets at Sandinista positions in a section of the disputed Bocay region that Honduras considers its territory.

"If there are no more incidents, the Americans will leave," Azcona said.

He declined to give details on the Sandinista pullback or be more specific on when the U.S. troops that arrived last week would depart.

Rep. G.V. Montgomery, D-Miss., a member of a congressional delegation visiting Honduras, said he expects the U.S. military personnel to pull out in about a week.

"I think it'll all be over by then," said Montgomery, a member of the House Armed Services Committee.

American soldiers practiced military maneuvers Sunday at a Honduran airstrip about 20 miles from the Nicaraguan border.

"These guys are not going to get involved in any sort of conflict," said Maj. Gary Hovatter, spokesman for U.S. troops in the Central American nation.

Nicaragua formally protested a Honduran bombing raid on Sandinista positions Saturday as an unwarranted act of aggression. It has denied that its troops crossed the jungle-choked border dividing the nations.

U.S. officials in Washington said the Sandinistas appeared to be drawing back from the Honduran border and predicted that the training exercises involving 3,200 U.S. troops soon would end.

A U.S. House delegation viewed a military exercise involving U.S. infantrymen and Honduran soldiers at Jamastran, a dirt airstrip about 55 miles southeast of here and about 20 miles from the border.

The exercise was held about 80 miles south of the Bocay border region, where Honduran fighters on Saturday dropped bombs on Sandinista positions.

Honduran officials said the raid was carried out because about 600 Sandinistas troops were moving too slowly from the disputed Bocay area, which Honduras considers its territory. Two Honduran jet fighters car-

D.C. representative: policies must change

Black Legislative Caucus hears long-time delegate

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

The future of our nation will be that of living on a vast plantation owned by foreign corporations, investors and people "high as a kite on drugs," unless economic policies are changed, said Rep. Walter Fauntroy, D-District of Columbia.

Fauntroy was the keynote speaker at the 13th Annual Kansas Black Legislative Caucus conducted Saturday at K-State.

Fauntroy has been a representative, a member of the Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee since 1971, and is the chairman of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. He is also the minister of New Bethel Baptist Church in the District of Columbia, which he attended as a child.

The representative from the District of Columbia is a non-voting delegate of Congress.

"The supply-side economic policies of the last eight years have been based on three faulty theses," he said. "They are: the poor have too much money, the rich have too little money, and problems abroad lend themselves to a military solution.

"This resulted in three things: the acceleration and flight of U.S. capital and jobs to cheaper labor markets abroad, the sky-rocketing of our own annual trade deficit to nearly $200 billion a year, and the doubling of our national debt from $900 billion in 1981 to more than $2 trillion today," Fauntroy said.

He said cuts of $280 million in programs like aid to dependent children, health care for the old and the poor, guaranteed student loans, and job training for the unemployed are examples of applying the thesis that the poor have too much money.

The government granted $750 billion in tax reductions to the rich, primarily major corporations, on the thesis that the rich have too little money, Fauntroy said.

A national debt of $2.3 trillion, caused by large defense budgets, is evidence of trying to provide a military solution to problems abroad, he said.

"I can't tell you how much $2.3 trillion is, but if you spent $1 million every day since Jesus was born, you could only spend about one-half of $2.3 trillion," Fauntroy said.

The government has to borrow $200 billion a year and must pay $116 billion a year interest on the entire national debt, he said.

"Our problem is that our economy is increasingly shaped by the linkage of our financial system with a system of global capital markets and international institutions and relationships that seem to maximize profits without regard to national boundaries," he said.

Fauntroy said the net effect of the flow of American capital into cheaper labor markets abroad has resulted in a "triple whammy" on the American people.

The jobs poor people need for upward mobility have migrated overseas, he said.

"We may have all come to America in different ships, but we're all in the same boat now, and it's a boat sinking in a sea of stupid policies."
—Walter Fauntroy

The government is cutting the programs that would give American youth the skills needed for the future, Fauntroy said.

The money exported to cheaper labor markets abroad combined with the money paid to foreign investors as interest on the national debt is coming back to buy America, he said.

Fauntroy cited as evidence the ownership of 46 percent of downtown Los Angeles by the Japanese and significant purchases by West Germans and the French.

Foreign corporations and investors are buying factories, shopping malls, forest land, ski resorts and skyscrapers, and if something is not done to change economic policies, America will be bought out by foreign investors, he said.

"We may have all come to America in different ships, but we're all in the same boat now, and it's a boat sinking in a sea of stupid policies," Fauntroy said.

"It's time for a common sense approach, it's time to change the system," he said.

Two wars are being fought in America, he said. One is in Congress and deals with trying to to make the District of Columbia a state. The other is being waged in 117 Democratic caucuses across the nation to determine who will lead the nation for the next four years, Fauntroy said.

Nearly three-quarters of a million people are residents of the District of Columbia, but have no voice in the U.S. Senate and only one non-voting delegate to the House of Representatives, he said.

He said 70 percent of the residents of the District of Columbia are black and that resistence to making the District of Columbia a state can be attributed to the "four too's."

"The District of Columbia is too urban, it's too liberal, it's too democratic and it's too black," Fauntroy said.

A House resolution has 193 of the required 218 votes to pass, Fauntroy said. He urged the approximately 100 caucus participants to write letters to Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kansas, urging him to lend his support to statehood for the district.

Veryl Switzer, assistant vice president for minority affairs and chairman of the caucus planning committee, said the caucus had demonstrated the need for networking.

"The caucus provided all of us with a broader perspective of state, national and international affairs that impact on our daily lives," he said.

Soviet arrives in U.S. for talks

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze arrived Sunday for three days of talks with Reagan administration officials that are bound to be dominated by the wars in Nicaragua and Afghanistan.

The visit also may produce a date for the next superpower summit — speculation centers on late May in Moscow — and some progress toward a treaty to sharply reduce U.S. and Soviet long-range nuclear weapons.

The treaty is the projected centerpiece for President Reagan's fourth and final meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, but negotiations in Geneva have proceeded slowly.

"It's by no means in the bag," Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Sunday of the accord that would reduce by 30 percent to 50 percent the overall armories of U.S. and Soviet long-range bombers, missiles and submarines.

"It's possible, but we not going to try to have one just for the sake of a treaty," Shultz said on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press." "We'll only be willing to go forward, the president will, if it's something we regard as good."

The wars in Nicaragua and Afghanistan underscored the conflict in U.S. and Soviet interests.

Four partiers stabbed in riot

Two drown inside car

By The Associated Press

PORT ARANSAS, Texas — Hundreds of partying young people rioted on a Gulf Coast beach during the night before police moved in with tear gas and helicopters early Sunday. And a car that sped off a nearby ferry dock was pulled out of the gulf with two bodies inside.

"What you have down there is a tremendous amount of intoxication going on. All it takes sometimes is for someone to bump into someone else. The crowd just turned into a riot," said Jim Kaelin, an officer with the Texas Department of Public Safety.

At least four people were stabbed and two law officers were injured in the midnight beach melee, police said. Eight people were arrested, and one person remained hospitalized Sunday.

"One thing led to another, and it became a riot out there," said Coast Guard spokesman Anthony E. Lloyd in Corpus Christi.

Lloyd said most of the students appeared to be high-school age. About 30,000 students were staying in this island resort for spring break, he said.

The violence began when a motorist hit a 16-year-old girl on the beach at this Gulf Coast vacation spot on Mustang Island, offshore from Corpus Christi, and tried to leave the scene, said DPS Officer A.G. Michniak.

Angry youths attacked the driver and torched the car, said Police Chief Don Perkins. Officers pulled the man away from the crowd before youths set the car on fire, he said.

"They stomped the car, broke all the glass out of it and flipped it over," said Tom Frazier, 22, a student at the University of Texas.

It took more than 100 police officers to break up the mob with the help of tear gas and hovering Coast Guard helicopters with searchlights.

The driver of the car, a 26-year-old San Antonio man, was in the Nueces County Jail in connection with the accident, Perkins said. Charges had not been filed by Sunday evening.

The girl who was struck by the car was treated for abrasions and bruises at AMI Coastal Bend Hospital and released, nursing supervisor Sharon Parrack said Sunday.

A portable toilet also was set ablaze, authorities said.

The first police on the scene tried to arrest two people involved in the alleged hit-and-run accident but found the crowd too much to handle.

"Objects were tossed and thrown at the officers and they called for assistance," said a DPS dispatcher in Corpus Christi who would not give her name.

In an unrelated incident several hours later, a speeding car crashed through a barrier at a ferry landing and sank in water 20 to 25 feet deep, Lloyd said.

The small car sailed about 75 feet in the air before splashing into the water and sinking, said Coast Guard spokesman Bob Fisher.

A ferry captain on deck saw the incident, Lloyd said.

"The car just flew right off the ferry landing," Lloyd said. "It didn't stop, didn't skid or anything, it just went right into the water, and they saw its tail end going down."

Panama Canal still operating

PANAMA CITY, Panama — When strikes shut down the rest of the country, Panama Canal employees went to work. When flaming barricades blocked downtown streets, roads to the canal were clear. The crisis gripping the rest of the country has barely touched the waterway so vital to Panama's economy.

Even at the height of this week's protests, rioters demanding the ouster of strongman Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega avoided the canal zone just outside the capital.

Canal officials said the most serious problem was a transit stoppage that made it impossible for many canal employees to get to work.

After last Wednesday's failed coup attempt and street riots, the joint U.S.-Panamanian commission that has governed the canal since 1979 issued a reassuring statement.

"We expect surface transit to continue without interruption," said the canal's marine director, George Hull.

But not everyone agrees.

Capt. John Maher, president of the 230-member Panama Canal Pilots Association, said continued political instability could sound the waterway's death knell.

Lightning strikes mosque

JERUSALEM — A lightning bolt struck the minaret of a vacant mosque on Sunday and sent it toppling onto the home of the building's caretaker, killing one woman and seriously wounding a child, police said.

An eyewitness told Israel army radio: "At noon fire came out of the sky and struck the minaret of the mosque. At the top of the minaret was a crescent made of copper. The lightning hit the crescent and started a fire."

China reports UFO sighting

BEIJING — Passengers on two flights to Xinjiang, China's northwesternmost province, reported UFO sightings, an official report said Sunday.

The state-run Xinhua News Agency said a passenger on a flight from Beijing to Urumqi, the provincial capital, last Friday sighted the unidentified flying object to the right in front of the plane at 9:35 p.m.

When the flight crew contacted local airports, they were told there was no plane in the area at that time.

The object was described as being about the size of a basketball and sending out a beam like a searchlight. The crew sent a light signal to the object, which was flying opposite the plane, but received no response, Xinhua said.

Three minutes later, the object changed directions and headed north, then split into two, with a smaller ball above a bean-shaped object. They were spinning at high speeds and gave off a ring of green light, the news agency said.

By 9:48 p.m., the objects had disappeared, according to the crew.

Half an hour later, passengers aboard a flight from Canton to Urumqi spotted the UFO over the same area in western Xinjiang, Xinhua said.

Plane crashes at Marine base

QUANTICO, Va. — A small civilian airplane crashed Sunday on Quantico Marine Base as it was trying to fly out of a snowstorm, killing all three people on board, authorities said.

No one on the ground was injured, said Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Fred Farrar.

The single-engine Cessna 210 left Greensboro, N.C., at 8:25 a.m. and was headed for Washington National Airport, he said. Shortly after 10 a.m., the pilot radioed an air traffic control center at Leesburg for directions out of the storm, Farrar said.

"The center was trying to provide that assistance when it lost radio and radar contact with the aircraft at an altitude of 5,000 feet," Farrar said.

Marine base spokesman Randy Gaddo said the plane crashed in a field between a chapel where Sunday morning services were in progress, and Lejeune Hall, the base headquarters.

Justice Dept.: Close mission

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department is planning to file suit in federal court in New York to force the closing of the PLO observer mission at the United Nations, a department spokesman said Sunday.

"We're ready to go ahead and file the papers if they don't close the mission voluntarily," said spokesman Patrick Korten.

The Palestine Liberation Organization served notice last week that it planned to defy any U.S. effort to shut the mission, which is in a New York City townhouse.

Sunday afternoon, Korten indicated that the department would file suit today, but Sunday evening he said that such action might not occur until Tuesday or Wednesday due to possible delays in paperwork.

"The chances are it would be within a day or two if they are not out," Korten said. "We are hoping those who walk into the office (today) to look for them would find them gone. If that's not the case, then we would proceed with legal action."

The Justice Department announced March 11 that it planned to enforce the Anti-Terrorism Act of 1987 by going to court to close the mission. That act takes effect today.

Beefalo roam free on turnpike

MIAMI — A herd of a relative of the buffalo known as the beefalo roamed onto the Florida Turnpike early Sunday, causing five accidents and costing the lives of seven of the huge animals, police said. One motorist was slightly injured.

"About 75 to 100 buffalo broke through a hole in the fence on the Florida Turnpike Extension" in northwest Dade County about 12:30 a.m., said Florida Highway Patrol Sgt. Alvis Chinn.

The animals — part buffalo, part beef cattle — were part of a 400-head herd kept on a ranch near the turnpike extension, which borders the Everglades northwest of Miami.

Five of the beefalo died instantly or nearly so after they collided with vehicles on the highway, Chinn said. "I believe that two other buffalo had to be killed later by the humane society," he said.

The animals caused an estimated $18,000 to $20,000 damage.

Regents meet Thursday

Mission statements discussed

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

TOPEKA — The subject of mission statements — those statements which determine the emphasis and set the course of each state university in Kansas — was the center of discussion Thursday at the Board of Regents meeting.

The regents evaluated each of the institutions on their progress in implementing the role and scope of their mission statements. With the exception of Fort Hays State University, each of the schools was moving toward more incorporation of the statements into their budgeting and prioritizing processes.

Members of the board expressed concern with budget cuts in the colleges of Engineering, Agriculture and Human Ecology at K-State — three areas which they considered among the most central to the University's land-grant mission.

Provost James Coffman explained that those cuts were in response to $350,000 of negative enrollment adjustments.

The financial impact of lower enrollment is felt two years after the actual decline in enrollment due to the regents' procedure for allocating funds. Thus, in fiscal year 1988, K-State had more students yet at the same time had less money.

K-State adjusted the general budget in order to channel more money to the lower division courses that the additional students filled, Coffman said.

K-State expects to have the revenue restored as part of positive enrollment adjustments in 1989. It will be distributed in an effort to restabilize areas that have suffered cuts, Coffman said in a telephone interview.

In subsequent action, the board allowed Fort Hays State to change its mission statement to emphasize the use of advanced technology in instructional programs. The board requested that the university keep prairie grass research as one of the premiere programs listed in its mission statement.

The regents also recommended that the Kansas Legislature allow K-State to sell three Atlas missile sites which have belonged to the University since 1967.

Although the sites were originally acquired for research purposes, they no longer serve that role. The University plans to use proceeds from the sale to purchase research equipment.

The board also approved the preliminary architectural plans for a new parking facility at the University of Kansas.

Additionally, it granted a request made by Wichita State University to form a School of Communications named after alumnus Oliver Elliot, who donated $7.6 million to the project.

The regents began their meeting with a presentation from members of the Cooperative Extension program at K-State.

"(The presentation) was an opportunity to learn more about an area that we know little about," said Regent Chairman Donald Slawson.

Bush, Jackson win Sunday in Puerto Rican primaries

By The Associated Press

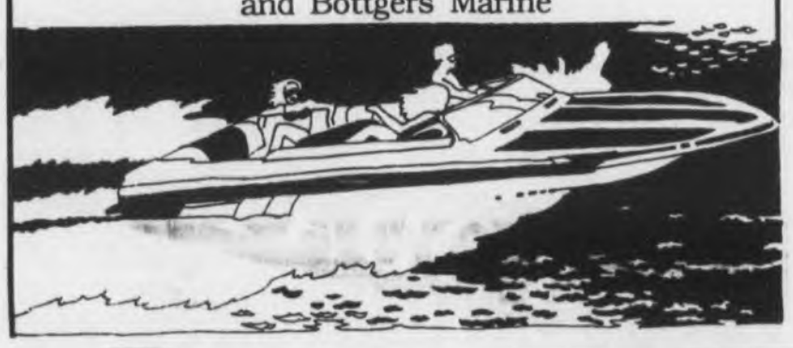
SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — Vice President George Bush won Puerto Rico's Republican primary Sunday and added another 14 national convention delegates to his tally, while Jesse Jackson won the Democrats' non-binding "beauty contest" balloting.

With nearly a third of the precincts reporting, Bush was picking up 97 percent of the vote, while GOP rival Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas was receiving just 3 percent.

Counting was proceeding slowly, but Puerto Rico GOP Chairman Luis Ferre said, "Bush has the 14 delegates."

With results from 28 percent of the precincts, Bush had 1,907 votes, while Dole had 48.

Republican returns were sparse because the vast majority of voters turned out for the Democratic primary.



On the Democratic side, with 31 percent of the precincts reporting, Jackson led with 25,971 votes, or 35 percent, followed by Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis with 17,023 for 23 percent, Illinois Sen. Paul Simon with 14,870 votes for 20 percent, Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore with 13,210 for 18 percent, and Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt with 2,707 for 4 percent.

The Democratic primary had no effect on who won delegates to the national convention. The 51 delegates at stake Sunday were expected to go uncommitted to the convention. In all, Puerto Rico will send 56 delegates to the convention, including the governor and four other party leaders.

The latest AP delegate count gave Dukakis 526.5 delegates to 508.55 for Jackson and 362.8 for Gore. Simon had 171.5, Gephardt had 154 and 292.65 were uncommitted. To nominate, 2,082 delegates are needed.

Wolf Creek officials should accept fines

Wolf Creek nuclear power plant officials are finally being forced to clean up their act.

In the largest fine ever levied against Wolf Creek Nuclear Operating Corp., operators are being fined $100,000 for 10 incidents that included the death of a worker and kept the plant shut down 100 days last fall.

The string of accidents began last September, when the plant automatically shut itself down because of employee errors. On Oct. 10, two workers accidentally sprayed radioactive material on themselves while fixing a clogged hose.

The spill went unreported for three hours. On Oct. 14, a worker was electrocuted while cleaning a transformer at the plant. The transformer was not marked with a warning sign.

About Oct. 15, radioactive trash from the plant was accidentally sent to the Coffey County Landfill twice in one week. Officials called the incident "just a mistake." In mid-November, plant officials discovered that workers repairing pipes were not qualified for the job.

The fine was the sixth to be levied on the plant. And as of yet, no decision has been made by Wolf Creek officials whether they will appeal it. While critics say the fines could affect customers' electric bills, the Kansas Corporation Commission generally does not allow utilities to charge customers for fines resulting from improper management.

The NRC was justified in levying the stiff penalty on the plant. A $100,000 fine is not unreasonable for the number of violations that occurred there.

The inexcusable accidents have gone on long enough. Instead of spending time and money on appeals, Wolf Creek officials should pay the fine, admit that mistakes were made and concentrate their efforts on safety, not only of their employees, but of area residents as well.

Spring break no longer promises peaceful time

"Riot" is a word usually associated with political demonstrations and sporting events — not spring break trips.

However, riot is the word that Texas police officers are using to describe a weekend disturbance during which four people were stabbed and two police officers were injured.

Drinking — heavy drinking — by high-school age students is being blamed for most of the problems.

The melee was started by a motorist who allegedly hit a girl and tried to leave the scene. Overzealous partiers tried to stop the driver's flight.

While the thought of a peaceful, get-away vacation turning into mayhem is frightening enough, the police's implication that it was high school students causing such destruction is worse.

Last year, out-of-control college students were considered the cause of rioting and damage at beach resorts.

Although not all of this year's 30,000 partiers were high school students, police seem to think the majority of them were.

It is said with nearly every other event caused by drinking high schoolers — but it is nonetheless important: How do high schoolers obtain alcohol in such mass quantities?

Unfortunately, most people have given up asking that question and simply accept it as inevitable.

The riot that continued for three hours required 100 police officers, tear gas and helicopters to bring it under control.

But the riot did more than physical damage.

One resident of Port Aransas, Texas, where the disturbance occurred, said he witnessed one of the stabbings, but fled in fear for his own life rather than aid the victim.

Although spring break destruction is becoming an annual problem, little can be done to control it. Last year's rioting and balcony hopping resulted in tougher public drinking laws at Padre Island, but a crowd of 30,000 with a united intention is difficult — at best — to control.

Quiet spring break trips are seemingly a thing of the past — a past that was a lot less violent and destructive.

Letters

Story inaccuracy

Editor,

Several statements need to be corrected in the March 4 Collegian article about the new state headquarters for Kansas Farm Bureau Inc. and its affiliated companies.

■ Kansas Farm Bureau is a farm organization that serves more than 125,000 Kansas families. A person does not buy a membership in the life or mutual insurance companies but, rather, joins through one of the 105 county Farm Bureau associations which are the federation members of Kansas Farm Bureau, the parent company.

■ In the third paragraph, the article implies Kansas Farm Bureau is state funded. KFB is a non-governmental, voluntary organization. KFB and its affiliated companies are financed through dues, insurance premiums, investment income or service fees.

■ In the sixth paragraph, the indirect quote says the northwest site was chosen so the building would be located outside of city and zoning limits. This is an inaccurate quote. The site is located within the city limits and is in compliance with city zoning laws. The site was chosen because it gives KFB and its affiliates an ideal location for its growing organization.

■ The new building will accommodate 500 employees, but it will have a 700-employee capacity before additional space is needed.

Thanks for your help in clarifying this information.

Gordon V. Hibbard
director of communications,
Kansas Farm Bureau Inc.

The truly selfish

Editor,

Commentary such as that provided by Chris Kippes in the March 8 Collegian serves only to exacerbate a fire that has been fueled by a quote attributed to student senator Juli Kramer, which has been regrettably removed from the context in which it was used and intended.

For a journalist to focus on how something was said — and not its intent — is nothing short of irresponsible. Society must demand fairness in journalism so that it can render logical, unemotional reason to debates present before it. Perhaps, however, this is exactly what Mr. Kippes does not want when he decries the "cold, calm, rational" approach of Ms. Kramer.

Senator Kramer did not intend that poor people (or any people) should not want something that exceeds their means or even, as Mr. Kippes insinuated, that people born poor must always remain so. For Mr. Kippes to even propose such an idea is shallow and ludicrous. Rather, Ms. Kramer was merely questioning whether society should be obligated to provide for those wants when they may exceed the consensus view of an acceptable minimum.

The pertinent question in regard to the KSU Childcare Cooperative is not one concerning its merits, for they are generally considered tangible even by those senators who voted against the child care co-op appropriation bill. Rather, the question is: Should students be compelled to assume (partial) responsibility for child care, and if so, to what level should this responsibility extend? Clearly, the answers are debatable, but in the opinion of the majority of student senators, the line of reason and prudence had been crossed.

I suppose it makes little difference to those of Mr. Kippes' persuasion that Student Senate has previously voted large monetary grants to the co-op. But government, at any level, cannot possibly hope to satisfy the wants of all its constituency. Priorities must be established that offer due regard and consideration for minority interests yet which seldom sacrifice the common good in their favor.

With all due respect for the proponents of this bill, who are the truly selfish ones?

Bernard T. Giefer Jr.
graduate student in chemical engineering and graduate student senator

Cutting costs

Editor,

This letter is in response to Juli Kramer's letter in the March 8 Collegian concerning the KSU Childcare Cooperative. To begin with, I accept Juli's apology for her statement suggesting that quality child care is a luxury item like owning a Porsche. I also think it commendable that she plans to forego such statements in the future.

According to her letter, Ms. Kramer feels that the needs of the children enrolled in the co-op would be sufficiently met with untrained personnel — babysitters. Perhaps we should cut costs even further and simply install TVs featuring one cartoon after another.

Ridiculous, of course, but no more ridiculous than entrusting so many young impressionable children to a staff that is not fully knowledgeable of a preschool child's cognitive, social and physical development. Children raised in an environment that encourages learning and non-violent cooperative play, as that of the co-op, will grow into adults who search for the answers and are more understanding of others different from themselves.

I am sorry that even Ms. Kramer's wealthy friends did not receive the same quality, early childhood education that is being offered now by the co-op. Perhaps then this letter would not be necessary. But I'm thankful that just because that's how it was does not mean that's how it must be.

Don't let it die

Editor,

This is in reference to the comment made by a student senator published in the March 5 Collegian. The senator claims she has "a real problem with low-income students looking for high-quality child care. It's like being poor and wanting a Porsche." What a betrayal of ignorance and obscure values.

I am appalled that anyone would compare quality child care with buying cars. Quality child care is not a luxury — it is essential for our times. Children are our future. Any investment in them is an investment in the future. The income of the family has and should have nothing to do with quality child care that every child deserves.

The KSU Childcare Cooperative is one of the finest in the area and serves many K-State students, faculty and staff. By supporting the bill, the students are actually supporting the other students of the University, those who are hired by the co-op and those who use its services. The co-op is essential in the strategy to help many students in their education and career moves. Don't let such a good thing die.

Wages a crime

Editor,

I am writing in response to Student Senate defeating the proposed bill to fund the KSU Childcare Cooperative and to educate uninformed people such as Juli Kramer. I have been working at the co-op for two years, assisting as a preschool teacher. What I have seen happen in these two years is a crime.

Many quality teachers have left because they cannot afford to live on $4.50 an hour. I hope my college career is not going to end so dismally. Senate felt that hiring less-educated people would help. I do not think less-educated people can function any better below the poverty level than the educated ones.

What the co-op offers is the best care for competitive rates. I ask you, Miss Kramer: Is there any child who does not deserve quality care? Our parents cannot afford Porsches, and they most definitely cannot afford to take chances with their children's lives.

Life's necessities

Editor,

I am writing in regard to a comment made by Juli Kramer, junior in accounting, and published by the Collegian. I quote: "I have a real problem with low-income students looking for high-quality care. It's like being poor and wanting a Porsche."

Juli, I fail to understand the comparison between buying a car and finding day care. Quality day care is a necessity — a Porsche is not. Children from low-income families (many of whom are students) are just as deserving of good care as children from high-income families. Children represent our future, and quality care is a must!

Lecturer discusses fiction

Speaker: War made literary era

By Shelly Tierney
Collegian Reporter

The Vietnam War created the most decisive change in literature, helping it change from modernism to a post-modernism era, said Wendy Steiner, professor of English at the University of Pennsylvania.

Steiner, who spoke March 10 at an English Talks lecture, said the transition occurred in the early 1970s during Vietnam and the domestic political disruptions.

"Vietnam was perhaps the most decisive. The war was covered by an army of reporters," she said. "During the Tet Offensive alone, there were between 600 and 700 accredited correspondents in Vietnam."

A large number of public figures, politicians and people of conscience also wrote about the war, Steiner said.

Vietnam made such a difference because of the amount of coverage it received. Propaganda and rhetoric are inevitable components of battle, she said.

"In a very literal sense, Vietnam was an exercise in voyeurism," Steiner said.

Correspondents' coverage of the war allowed people to see the war without being there and feel it as though they were there, she said.

The Vietnam experience has come a long way toward normalizing post-modernist experiments, making it into a pneumatic mode, Steiner said.

"Likewise, it led war novels and memoirs of conservative genres to some very unconventional practices," she said.

Two of these war novelists include Tim O'Brien and Jane Anne Phillips.

Steiner said that traditionalist writers' main concern was the psychology of the ethnic or economic class. Their novels were common, but were underlinked with the same existential art associated with the post-modernists, she said.

"The most obvious difference (modern and post-modern) was that the post-modernists constantly worked on two levels — fictive and the medifictive," Steiner said.

Experimentalist writers such as Truman Capote and Philip Roth strove for stylistic self-consciousness.

Modernism was a movement generated by style, where external reference was simplified in the process. Post-modernism tries to act as a corrective to that, Steiner said.

Steiner received a doctorate in literature from Yale University and received the Guggenheim Fellowship award in 1982.

Speech group sponsors District Three tournament

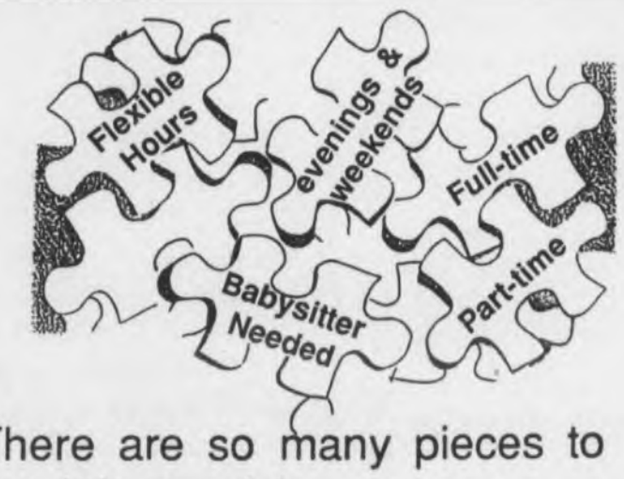
By The Collegian Staff

Despite its recent financial hardships, Speech Unlimited, K-State's competitive speech team, sponsored the District Three speech tournament March 12 and 13.

Of the 39 K-State entries in 11 categories of competition, 13 awards were received by the squad members. Compared to last year's nine awards, the team has done well to win 13 awards one year later at the same tournament, said Lynne Ross, director of Speech Unlimited.

In addition to the individual awards, four team members qualified to compete in the national tournament. K-State will be represented by a squad of eight at the American Forensic Association National Individual Event Tournament in Peoria, Ill., next month.

Ross attributes the team's success to support from the Arts and Sciences Council and to hard work by the squad's members.



"There's a willingness here to do it, and we have the support. We have a large pool of very talented people," she said.

Sometimes, Ross added, it takes more than willingness — it takes money.

"We've totally spent our Arts and Sciences money so we've been traveling by the seat of our pants," Ross said.

By requesting that the six-state tournament be conducted at K-State, the squad was able to compete because there were no travel expenses. The squad had requested additional funding from the Student Governing Association Finance Committee to cover travel expenses for the eight students competing in the national tournament.

"(The district success) gives us a good chance with Student Senate. I think we've got a good chance since we're asking for less money than before when there was the possibility of 11 attending the finals," Ross said.

Child awareness theme of week

Co-op to sponsor rally on children's concerns

By The Collegian Staff

As part of a "constructive response" to Student Senate's rejection nearly three weeks ago of a bill that would have funded the KSU Childcare Cooperative, co-op officials are sponsoring KSU Child Awareness Week today through Friday.

Esther Gray, the co-op's assistant director, said the week was planned with the intent of educating people about the value of child care and the importance of children. The highlight of the week will be a rally Wednesday in front of Anderson Hall.

"The intent of this rally is to show that (the participants) care," Gray said, who added that she was unsure how many people would attend the 11:30 a.m. event, which is open to the public.

Gray said the week's events are designed as more than "save the co-op" efforts. They are intended to raise awareness about the need of on-campus child care and also to influence administrators who are currently considering funding for the co-op.

The co-op has amassed a debt of nearly $50,000 and is expected to generate another $70,000 in debt this year. Gray said administrators are expected to decide this week how much money — if any — they will allocate to the co-op.

It was coincidence, she added, that the awareness week was scheduled at the same time as when the administration is deciding the co-op's fate.

In addition to Wednesday's rally, other events this week include tours of the co-op and other Manhattan day care centers. Gray said those persons interested in a complete schedule of the week's activities may obtain one from the co-op.

British army investigates attack

Two soldiers ignore orders

By The Associated Press

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Two British soldiers killed in a attack by an angry mob had ignored orders to stay away from an Irish Republican Army funeral procession, the British army said Sunday.

Officials reported police fired plastic bullets Sunday at youths who hijacked a bus in Roman Catholic west Belfast. The shots were fired when the youths tried to attack a riot squad, police said.

No injuries were reported.

All soldiers in the British province had been told to stay away from Saturday's funeral, an army spokesman said. He said an army investigation is under way.

"The two corporals should not have been where they were and we are interested in examining how that came about," said the spokesman, speaking on condition of anonymity.

"They would have been briefed about the route of the funeral procession, and the two corporals were not expected to be there and had no requirement to be there."

Corporals Derek Wood, 24, and David Howes, 23, who were wearing civilian clothes, were shot to death in Belfast after people in the funeral procession dragged them from their unmarked car, beat them unconscious and stripped them naked.

The outlawed IRA claimed responsibility for the deaths and the Royal Ulster Constabulary, Northern Ireland's police force, said it was questioning three people. Police said they were studying videotapes of the attack.

Sinn Fein, the IRA's legal political wing, blamed the British government for the violence and praised those who beat the soldiers for their "bravery in protecting the cortege from attack."

There was a bomb scare Sunday morning at a Catholic church near the site where the soldiers were slain.

Although it was a hoax, the minister of St. Agnes church, the Rev. Thomas Toner, said at Mass that "the foul and bloody murders ... committed in our parish" had put his congregation "in the direct firing line" of vengeance-seeking Protestants.

Both soldiers belonged to the Royal Corps of Signals, a regiment often engaged in highly secret monitoring of communications. Wood joined the army in April 1980 and Howes in August 1981.

Dukakis runs ahead in statewide contest

By The Collegian Staff

Jesse Jackson overwhelmingly defeated Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis in the Riley County Democratic Caucus Saturday. Riley County Democratic Party Chairwoman Linda Morse said Jackson won 62 percent of the vote in the caucus.

Statewide, Dukakis won 36 percent of the Democratic vote and Jackson took 31 percent.

Sen. Albert Gore of Tennessee won 16 percent of the statewide vote Saturday.

Morse attributed Jackson's victory in the county to the work done by his campaign to bring new voters into the presidential election process.

Out of the 264 people voting in the final round of the county caucus, 164 votes went to Jackson and 100 votes went to Dukakis.

Jackson won seven delegates from Riley County to the Second Congressional District on April 23. Dukakis won five delegates.

Statewide, Dukakis won 278 delegates and Jackson won 235. Gore won 125 delegates.

'Sweet Sixteen,' here come the 'Cats

La Salle, DePaul fall to patient Wildcats

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Today's $64,000 question is: Has the K-State men's basketball team ever been kissed?

For the first time since the 1981-82 squad advanced to the third round of the NCAA's postseason tournament, the Wildcats have qualified for the "Sweet Sixteen."

Wins over La Salle and DePaul in first- and second-round Midwest Regional games in the Joyce Athletic and Convocation Center at Notre Dame sends K-State to Pontiac, Mich., Friday for a rematch with Purdue in Midwest Regional semifinal action.

No doubt, the 'Cats are considered a "dark horse" entry to the field of 16 — even though the NCAA tournament selection committee seeded them No. 4 in the Midwest.

"People just won't fully believe we're for real," K-State coach Lon Kruger said. "I'm not sure if it's our physical stature, or how we look in a hotel lobby, or what. But we continue to go out and take care of responsibilities."

Those responsibilities have been patience on the offensive end and versatility on defense.

The 'Cats shot better than 50 percent from the field in both games — 51.1 against La Salle and 51.2 against DePaul. Defensively, a grueling man-to-man held La Salle to 36.8 percent shooting from the field. A switch to K-State's 3-2 zone against DePaul limited the Blue Demons to 37.3 percent field goal shooting.

"It's been a group of individuals playing nearly to their potential, and that's what it's all about," Kruger said.

K-State 66, DePaul 58

K-State entered the game against fifth seeded DePaul Saturday as two-point underdogs. But behind the three-point shooting of Will Scott — who hit 7-8 three-point shots and led the 'Cats with 23 points — and controlling the tempo, the Blue Demons made an early exit from the tournament, 66-58.

"We were real concerned about that type of tempo," said DePaul coach Joey Meyer as his squad only got a handful of fast break opportunities. "At times I think we fell into a trap. If we could, we were going to run every time no matter what. We seemd to get lulled into the slow game."

K-State dared DePaul to hit the outside jumper, and it worked. The Blue Demons shot just 22-59 from the field, and made 8-21 from three-point range. But DePaul was hot from outside early on and built a seven-point lead, 28-21, with 3:29 left in the first half. Then K-State went on a 9-1 run which gave it a 30-29 lead at halftime.

Still, Kruger was concerned.

"That nine-point run made it look like we were outplaying DePaul, but I don't think we were," Kruger said.

K-State, though, quickly built its lead to nine points early in the second half behind the three-point shooting of Scott and Steve Henson. DePaul closed to within one and two points with about six minutes left in the game, but the three-point plays enabled K-State to maintain its lead.

Overall, K-State shot 10-13 from three-point range and scored more than half its points (36) from outside the 19-foot, 9-inch line or on three-point plays. The main weapon was Scott, who has broken out of a slump in grand fashion.

Since the Nebraska game March 2 — he entered the game with five straight games in single-digit scoring — Scott has averaged 17.8 points per game. His seven three-pointers against DePaul snapped a school record of six he shared with Mitch Richmond and Steve Henson. Meyer won't be sorry to see the senior guard leave the college ranks.

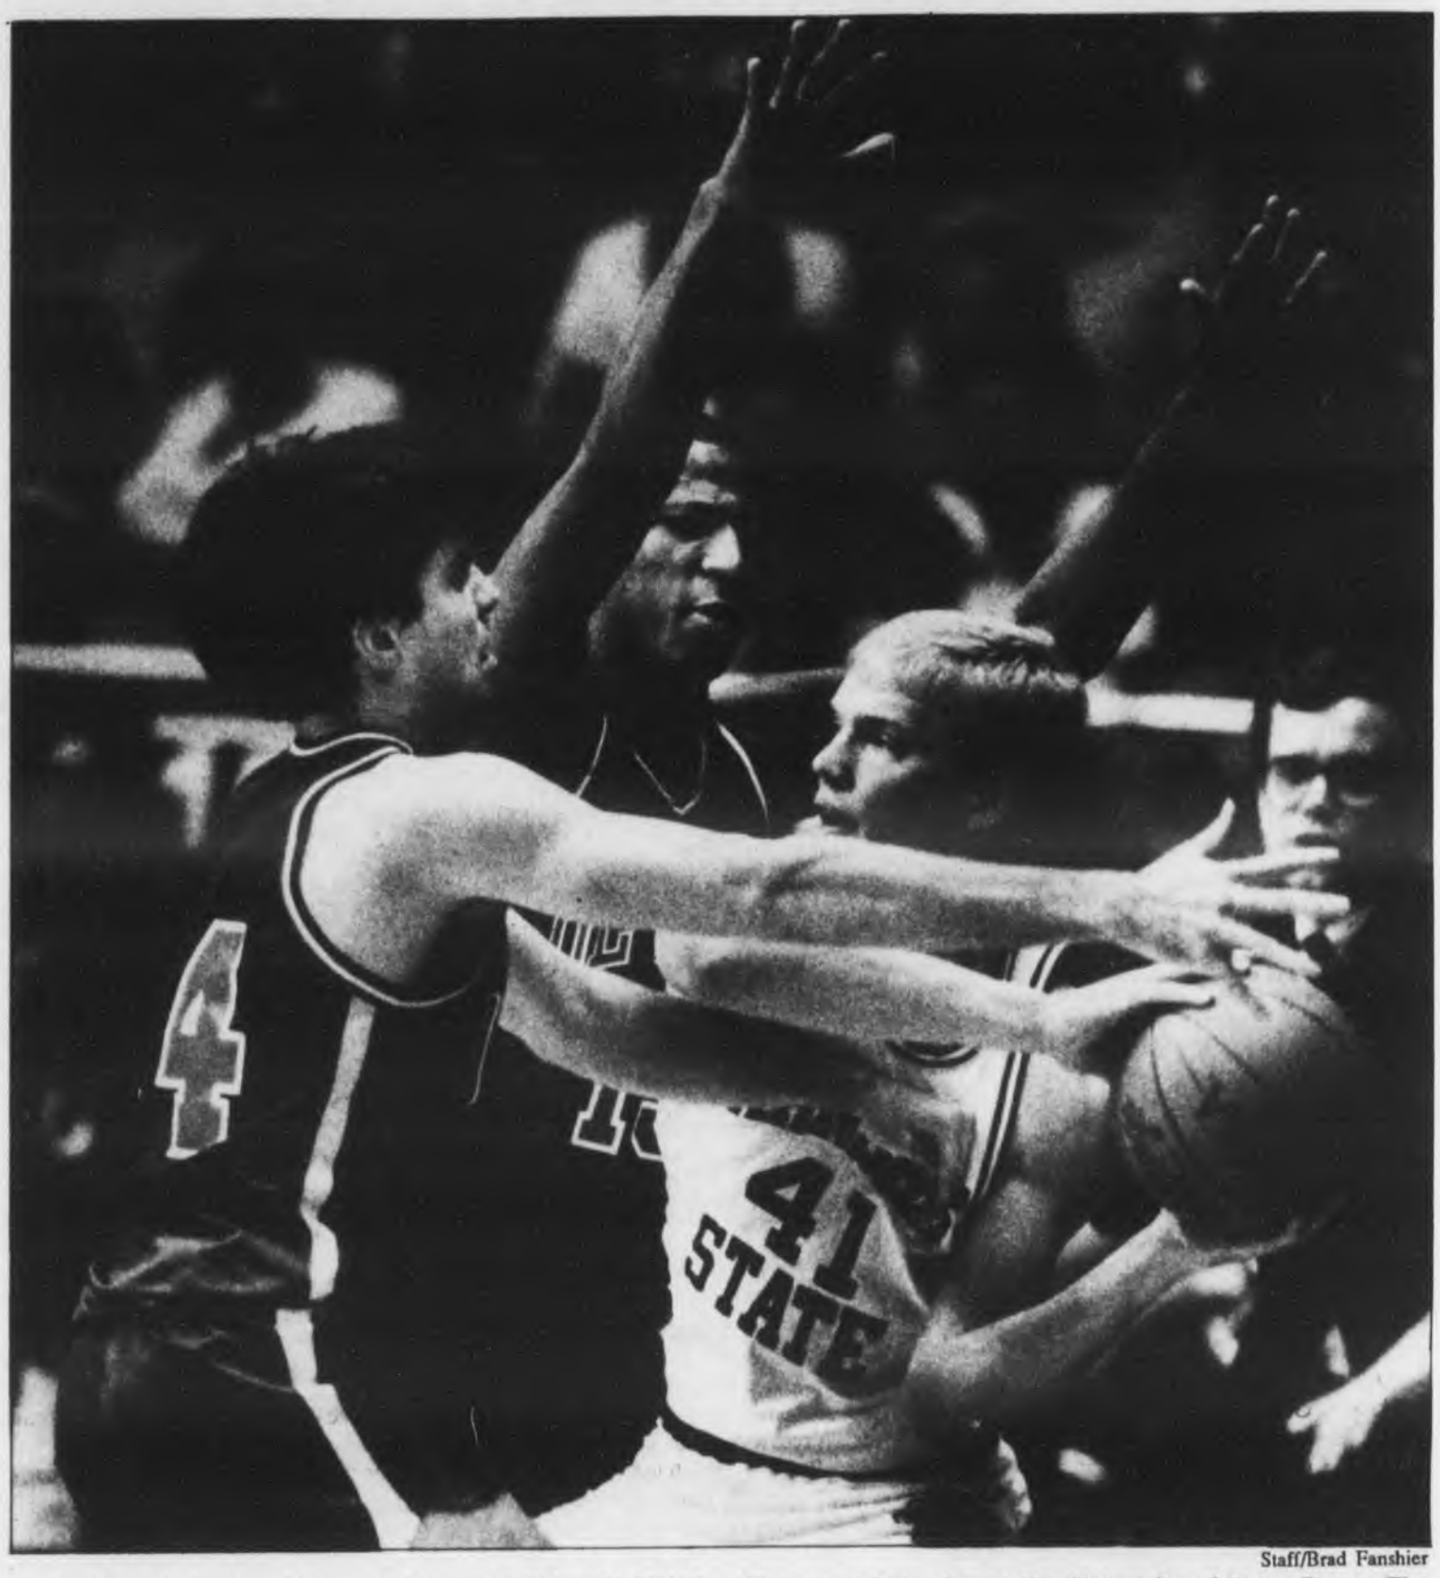
"It was Scott who killed us. Everybody said he was a great shooter ... he knocked the hell out of it," Meyer said.

"It's a hard feeling to explain," Scott said. "You hit your first couple of shots and all of a sudden your confidence goes up, your technique is good, your concentration is up. You feel like you can't do anything wrong."

That last sentence just about describes how the 'Cats earned their trip to Pontiac.

K-State 66, La Salle 53

The Explorers of La Salle were a team on a roll, having won 15 straight games since Jan. 21. But La Salle hit a road block in the form of a tenacious man defense by K-State, and fell to the 'Cats, 66-53, Thursday in a first-round game.



K-State held La Salle to 23-45 shooting from the field. Sophomore Lionell Simmons, the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference's player of the year, was the Explorers' lone bright spot.

"We don't have any excuses. We got beat by a very good basketball team," La Salle coach Bill Morris said. "We've played against a lot of man-to-man teams ... including North Carolina, where we got better shots."

Kruger said he knew it would be difficult to stop Simmons, so the defense concentrated on halting Tim Legler, who averaged 16.9 points per game and Rich Tarr (12.1 ppg). Legler scored 10 points and Tarr three on 1-11 shooting from the floor.

"I thought Steve (Henson) did a heck of job on Tarr and I thought Mitch (Richmond) did a heck of a job on Legler. We didn't want to drop off of those two to help out with (Simmons) inside," Kruger said.

K-State built a 34-23 halftime lead behind Richmond's 13 points. Richmond, who was named to the United Press International second team as an All-American last week, led the 'Cats with 30 points in the game, including a 10-10 performance from the free throw line, and broke Bob Boozer's single season scoring record of 691 points set in 1958-59.

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Spring Break South Bend.

Not exactly Padre Island or even Winter Park for that matter, but my four-day trip to the state where basketball is king was OK by me, thank you very much.

Jet lag and a nauseating Friday aside, my trip to see our 'Cats advance into the NCAA's round of 16 was one of my most enjoyable journeys in recent memory.

Here's my diary, of sorts, from the trip, beginning with my decision early last Tuesday to make the journey in the first place.

Tuesday

After trying unsuccessfully to get my part-time employer, The Kansas City Star and Times, to send me on the trip as a part of its reporting team, I decided that taking in the tournament as a fan might just be more fun. It would be definitely more expensive, but more fun.

Since I was in Wichita and a bit out of touch with everything going on in Manhattan, I called K-State Athletic Director Larry Travis early in the day and had him check into getting me an airplane ticket and hotel reservation for the lowest possible rate.

Travis came through for me, got me hooked up with the band and cheerleaders and I was set to make the flight out Thursday morning.

Wednesday

Left Wichita for Manhattan in the morning to take money out of the bank and pick up airline tickets. After leaving Manhattan, I made a quick stop in Topeka to see my former roommate, who, of course, wasn't home. Got to Kansas City — where we'd be flying out the next morning — by 7 p.m. I was just in time for a great spaghetti dinner at grandmother and granddad's.

An unexpected bonus, right? Wrong. I had the two wisdom teeth on the left side taken out Monday and was forced to eat my garlic bread with half of my mouth. Oh well, at least they're all gone now and I don't have to deal with this again.

Thursday

Got up and granddad took me to KCI for the flight out. It was snowing in Kansas City and very cold. Met up with the band and cheerleaders — my companions for the next few days — and immediately learned I knew absolutely no one.

No one, that is, except professional wrestler Randy "The Macho Man" Savage, who was seated in the terminal preparing for a flight to Oklahoma City with his manager and wife "The Lovely Elizabeth." I got Randy's autograph, and decided Elizabeth was truly as beautiful in person as on television.

Sports Columnist

After sitting by myself on a very, very rough Southwest Airlines flight into Chicago's Midway Airport, we hopped into a bus for a journey to South Bend that seemed like it lasted forever.

I started to get to know people better on the bus trip. Some of them knew me — I guess the little picture that goes with this thing does get you recognized. I wonder what they might have been thinking about me at the time. It's safe to say that most people either like my work or they don't. There's not much middle ground.

After reaching South Bend, we got off the bus at the lovely and spacious Randall's New Century Inn. Several of us reasoned that it got its name because it was new at the turn of the century.

While the team was staying in the $90-plus a night Marriott, we were out in the sticks in a motel with removable floor tiles and rather large, black stains on the mattresses.

The most fun we had Thursday, prior to the game, was when 20 members of the band and myself piled into the "Randall's Courtesy Van" for the ride to the arena for the game between K-State and La Salle.

If you've ever tried to fit 21 people and several instruments into a van meant for nine passengers, you can imagine how much fun we had. My seat was the spare tire.

We got the win against La Salle and assured ourselves of an extended stay, much to our relief. None of us wanted to get back on a bus Friday and go to Chicago and fly home as losers. I had enough travel Wednesday and this day to last me a lifetime.

Friday

Travel and a huge lunch at one of the local restaurants caught up with me after I was finished watching "Days of Our Lives," and I felt like death warmed over.

Often when I feel that bad, I go out and run, attempting to shake whatever I'm feeling out of my body.

It almost worked, but I still wasn't feeling that great prior to dinner. We ate at the same place, and because I'm Catholic and this was a Friday during Lent, I was forced to eat fish for the second straight meal.

I opted instead for a baked potato, applesauce and some ice cream. Five of us went back to the motel, watched "Lethal Weapon" on a VCR we had rented and called it a day.

A partying bunch we weren't, though I'm sure several of our companions have no idea what they did on Friday.

Saturday

Got up in time to eat breakfast and leave with the band and cheerleaders via the team bus for a pep rally at the Marriott. Not much of a rally when you've got fewer than 15 people watching a band and cheerleaders perform.

All that aside, we got to the arena in time to watch Purdue stomp Memphis State in the opening game.

I couldn't help but think as I was watching the first game in a bit of a daze that this arena — the Joyce Athletic and Convocation Center at Notre Dame — wasn't all that hot. Our new coliseum will put that pit to shame.

I got the experience of a lifetime for these two games. No, it wasn't the fact that I was sitting on the second row across from Gov. Mike Hayden.

The big treat was that I was sitting next to K-State's super fan, Robert Lipsom. After listening to Robert go on and on in the opener about having to face Purdue in Pontiac, Mich., in the next game, I told him to shut up until we had beaten DePaul. The man never stops talking, but at least he was positive about us winning.

For someone so positive, Lipsom has the most negative attitude during a game of anyone I've ever been around. He cussed and screamed at our players more than Larry Brown ever does in one of his temper tantrums.

Baseball team wins tournament

From Wire Reports

K-State's baseball team upped its record to 15-4 after winning the KASK Centennial Invitational tournament during spring beak and winning a double-header Saturday in Manhattan.

Saturday, the Wildcats won for the 12th time in 13 outings, sweeping South Dakota State and Southwest Baptist at Frank Myers Field.

David Chadd, a senior first baseman from Wichita, extended his hitting streak to 15 games. He collected five hits in seven trips to the plate in the double-header.

K-State defeated South Dakota State, 10-2, and won the nightcap against Southwest Baptist, 13-2.

Jim Haller earned his first win in the evening contest, going seven innings and allowing five hits while striking out 11. Jeff Hulse homered in both games.

In the opener, Wildcat pitcher Steve Scoville made the most of his first start as he went eight innings in picking up the victory. Scoville struck out 13 South Dakota State hitters while walking only two and giving up four hits.

Chadd picked up three hits and Hulse added a pair of doubles and a three-run homer to the K-State cause.

K-State left immediately after the contest for Tulsa, Okla., and a Sunday date with the Oral Roberts University Titans. Oral Roberts is coached by former K-State mentor Gary Vaught.

In the KASK tournament, which was played in Las Cruces, N.M., the Wildcats were able to run their winning streak to 10 games before dropping their final game of the tournament to New Mexico State, 6-5.

The streak, however, was the longest by K-State since the 1979 team started its season with nine straight victories.

Despite the loss, K-State was still able to capture the tournament title, as well as the Most Valuable Player award, which went to Jim Donohue. He supplied much of K-State's offensive punch in the six-game tournament, hitting four homers and driving in 14 runs.

The Wildcats opened the tournament with wins over host-New Mexico State in extra innings, 6-5, and Colorado State, 7-2. In the opener, Reese Beer's one-out double drove home Scott Spangenberg in the ninth to ensure K-State's win. The Wildcats, breezed in the nightcap behind pitcher David Hierholzer, who went 5.2 innings and did not allow a hit until the fifth inning.

K-State played the same two teams in day two of the tournament, beating Colorado State, 10-3, and NMSU, 7-5.

Against Colorado State, Jim McClellan made his first start of the season and went the distance for K-State, allowing only a three-run homer in the second innning.

Against NMSU, the Wildcats' winning streak was in doubt until Donohue came through in the top of the fifth inning with a grand slam to erase a 4-3 NMSU lead.

"It's nice to get the wins early, but we still have a long way to go," Coach Mike Clark said. "We're finding a way to win and we are doing a few things well. I think the extra-inning win over New Mexico State (6-5 Sunday) was a quality win for us."

K-State concluded the tournament by edging out Colorado State, 7-6, but left its 10-game winning streak on the right field grass as NMSU defeated the Wildcats, 6-5, in extra innings.

"We've had good weather and have been able to play and evaluate kids," Clark said of the tournament.

ORU victim Sunday

From Wire Reports

With the taste of a five-run, seventh-inning Oral Roberts uprising still fresh in their mouths, K-State's baseball team showed its comeback ability with a six-run eighth inning and went on to post a 12-7 win over the Titans Sunday afternoon in Tulsa.

The 'Cats earned the win after suffering through a horrid seventh inning that saw the Titans benefit from four walks and two errors and wipe out a 5-2 K-State lead, replacing it with a 7-5 deficit.

The Titans returned the favor in the eighth as K-State scored six runs on only two hits. One of those hits, however, was a three-run double by Scott Spangenberg to climax the comeback.

The hectic late innings resulted in a win by Bill Schafer, his fourth of the season, and wiped out an excellent starting effort by Zack Kimbell. Kimbell carred the 5-2 lead into the seventh before leaving the game. The Titans had touched the Yates Center native for a pair of runs in the first.

K-State first baseman David Chadd picked up three more hits and extended his steak to 16 games. The senior has now had a base hit in 19 of the 'Cats' 20 games.

With the win, K-State improved to 16-4 and 2-1 against former coach Gary Vaught.

K-State netters 3-2 during break

From Wire Reports

K-State's women's tennis team won three of five dual matches March 12 through Wednesday during spring break on its road trip in Florida.

K-State defeated Temple on March 12, 8-1, and edged out Jacksonville March 13, 5-4, before losing to North Florida, 6-3, Tuesday. North Florida has been ranked No. 2 in the NAIA rankings.

Despite losing their third match of the road trip, Coach Steve Bietau was pleased with his team's improvement since the beginning of the trip.

"We played better than we have, but we were still spotty," he said. "We're still not consistent enough throughout the lineup. Both Annika Emtell and Valerie Rive' had good battles (Monday), and both showed signs of improvement."

In the dual with Temple, K-State's No.1 through No.5 singles players — Marijke Nel, Emtell, Rive', Sigrid Ivarsson, and Miste Bitner — posted wins, as did all of the doubles teams.

Against Jacksonville, Rive', Ivarsson and Thresa Burcham, playing No. 6 singles, were victorious, as were the No. 2 and No. 3 doubles teams of Nel-Ivarsson and Bitner-Burcham.

K-State's only wins in the dual with North Florida were recorded by Emtell, Burcham and the doubles team of Nel-Ivarsson.

Tuesday, K-State took on the No. 1-ranked NAIA school, Flagler College of Florida. K-State was defeated, 7-2.

Picking up K-State's only wins were Bitner in No. 6 singles and the doubles team of Bitner-Burcham. Bietau also said he was pleased with the performance of Nel, who played No. 1 singles. She lost a 6-2, 7-6 decision to Flagler's Theresa Shafin, the No. 1-ranked singles player in the NAIA.

K-State recorded a victory in its last dual of the trip, posting a 7-2 victory over Florida A&M Wednesday. The Wildcats started the day slowly, with both the No. 1 and No. 2 singles players dropping their matches. K-State battled back, however, to take the remaining four singles matches and three doubles matches in straight sets.

UNLV, last of '87s Final Four, eliminated

Road to K.C. shortens for contenders

By The Associated Press

Richmond's on the run and now faces the biggest challenge of its March dash — top-ranked Temple.

Already a 72-69 first-round victor over 1987 national champion Indiana, the Spiders shut down Georgia Tech's fastbreak Sunday and beat the Yellow Jackets 59-55 in the second round of the NCAA East Regional.

Peter Woolfolk scored 27 points for the Spiders, 26-6, who have won nine in a row. Richmond also has beaten Georgia Tech three straight times over the past two years, including a 73-67 victory last December.

Trailing by as many as 11 in the first half, Georgia Tech pulled within 57-55 when freshman Dennis Scott made his third 3-pointer of the second half, but guard Benjy Taylor made two free throws with 11 seconds left.

Able to score just nine points off its fastbreak, Tech was held to 55 points, tying a season low.

The Spiders advance to the East semifinals against the Owls, who have won 17 in a row.

EAST

Temple 74, Georgetown 53

Temple outscored Georgetown, 15-6, in the first nine minutes of the second half. Temple, 31-1, thus got past the second round for the first time in five consecutive tries.

"When you're fortunate enough to get into the final 64, anything can happen," Temple coach John Chaney said. "We were successful before we got here. Now, we need to be lucky."

Mark Macon had six points and Mike Vreeswyk five in the second-half run as the Owls turned a 30-26 halftime lead into a 45-32 advantage with 11:15 to play. Georgetown hit only 30 percent from the field in its worst shooting performance of the season.

Macon and Vreeswyk had 21 points apiece for Temple, which led by as many as 22 points in the second half. Mark Tillmon, Charles Smith and Jaren Jackson had 13 points apiece for Georgetown, 20-10.

MIDWEST

Vanderbilt 80, Pittsburgh 74, OT

Barry Goheen hit two 3-point baskets in the final 17 seconds to send the game into overtime tied at 69, and Vanderbilt scored the first six points of the extra period to beat Pittsburgh. Goheen and Barry Booker each had three points in the overtime run. Goohen also hit five free throws in overtime.

Goheen ended with 22 points for Vanderbilt, 20-10. Pitt, seeded second in the region, ended its season at 24-7.

Pitt led by as many as 13 points midway through the first half as Jerome Lane had eight points and Charles Smith six. Smith topped Pitt with 21 points.

Kansas 61, Murray St. 58

Danny Manning had 25 points, including a jump hook with 38 seconds left that boosted Kansas over Murray State. Manning's jumper gave the Jayhawks a 59-58 lead. After Don Mann missed a jumper in the lane with three seconds left, Manning got the rebound, was fouled and added two free throws for the final margin.

Kansas, 23-11, outscored Murray State 16-7 midway through the second half to take a 48-41 lead with 9:48 left. Two free throws by Jeff Martin with 51 seconds left gave Murray State its final lead, 58-57.

Murray State finished 22-9.

SOUTHEAST

Kentucky 90, Maryland 81

Rex Chapman rebounded from a poor-shooting first half with 20 second-half points, leading Kentucky on an 18-10 run after intermission. Chapman, 1-for-6 from the field in the first half, was 8-of-12 in the second half and wound up with 23 points.

Kentucky, 27-5, advances to the Southeast semis against Villanova. Maryland finished 18-13.

Maryland had a chance to take a late lead after a 3-point shot by Keith Gatlin tied the score with 3:06 to play. But a basket by Winston Bennett and a turnaround jumper by Chapman built a four-point cushion.

Villanova 66, Illinois 63

Mark Plansky scored 10 of Villanova's final 18 points, including a pair of free throws with four seconds to play, as the Wildcats stayed alive in the tournament. Villanova trailed by as many as 14 points in the second half but took advantage of poor Illinois foul shooting in the final 1:41.

Kenny Wilson and Pat Enright hit 3-pointers to put Villanova ahead 62-61 with 30 seconds left. Ken Battle put Illinois ahead 63-62 with a field goal, but missed his foul shot with 14 seconds to go, and Plansky put the Wildcats ahead for good.

Plansky and Tom Greis had 16 points apiece for the Wildcats, 23-12. Illinois ended at 23-10.

WEST

Arizona 84, Seton Hall 55

Anthony Cook scored 20 points, and Arizona outscored Seton Hall, 22-4, early in the first half to run away from the Pirates. Seton Hall went ahead 8-3 before Arizona began its run on an 18-footer by Steve Kerr. The run included 13 in a row and three-point plays by Cook and Sean Elliott, who wound up with 19.

Arizona, 33-2, now heads to the West Regional semis against Iowa. Seton Hall ended its season 22-12.

Foul trouble cost Seton Hall. The Pirates were called for nine fouls before the Wildcats got their first, 14:07 into the game.

Iowa 104, UNLV 86

Jeff Moe and Ed Horton scored 24 points each as Iowa rode its full-court press to victory over Nevada-Las Vegas, eliminating the last of 1987's Final Four teams from this year's tournament.

Roy Marble added 22 points for the Hawkeyes, who broke open the game in the last 10 minutes of the first half. The Hawkeyes led all the way in scoring 100 or more points for the 14th time this season and raising their record to 24-9.

Saturday's Results

EAST — Rhode Island 97, No. 9 Syracuse 94; No. 5 Duke 94, Southern Methodist 79.

SOUTHEAST — No. 4 Oklahoma 107, Auburn 87; Louisville 97, No. 19 Brigham Young 76.

MIDWEST — No. 3 Purdue 100, Memphis State 73; No. 20 K-State 66, DePaul 58.

WEST — No. 10 Michigan 108, Florida 85; No. 7 North Carolina 123, No. 15 Loyola, California 97.

Harrison wins triple jump at NCAA indoor

By The Collegian Staff

Kenny Harrison finished right where he expected to finish in the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships — first place in the triple jump.

Harrison won the triple jump event with a leap of 54-11¼ at the meet held March 11-13 at Oklahoma City. In addition to his first place finish in the triple jump, Harrison also took eighth place in the long jump at 25-6¼ .

"I was happy," Harrison said. "Not so much with distances, but that I won (the triple jump) without being healthy."

Harrison had suffered from swelling in his knees since his double-win at the Big Eight meet two weeks earlier.

Also earning All-America honors was Joy Jones, who finished seventh in the 55-meter dash with a time of 7.03. Jones also ran a personal best 24.26 in the 200-meter dash.

Kim Kilpatrick failed to place in the 55-meter hurdles, recording a time of 7.92. Dede Henderson placed ninth in the high jump with a leap of 5-10.

Coach John Capriotti was especially pleased with performance of his team members.

"Kim and Dede just missed making the finals in each event," he said. "And Joy and Kenny, well they just did great."

Golfers fifth at Texas invite

From Wire Reports

K-State's men's golf team opened its season during spring break at the Texas-San Antonio Invitational March 14 and 15 in San Antonio at the 6,814-yard Dominion Country Club course, which has a par 72.

The squad finished fifth out of a field of 12 teams.

Battling changing winds, the Wildcats saw the team score balloon from 315 on Monday to 328 the second day for a 36-hole total of 643. Southwest Texas State claimed the team title with daily scores of 304 and 311 for a 36-hole score of 615.

Individually for K-State, Troy Keller carded rounds of 76 and 79 for a two-day total of 155. That total placed him ninth among individuals at the tourney. He was followed by Jeff Sedorcek, 78-84—162; Daran Neuschafer, 80-83—163; John Shields, 81-84—165; and Chris Gomez, 83-82—165.

The medalist for the tournament was Mike Winfrey of Texas Tech, who fired a two-over par score of 146.

"The wind changed to a different direction, causing the course to become much more difficult to play," Coach Rob Sedorcek said. "Still, we didn't play well, as evidenced by our scores. The course played harder (Tuesday), but our scores shouldn't have gone up as high as they did."

The Wildcats next action will be today and Tuesday at the Baylor Invitational. A field of about 30 teams is expected to participate in the tournament.

Final Standings

1. Southwest Texas State, 304-311—615.
2. (tie) Illinois State, Rice, 309-327—636.
4. Central Oklahoma State, 314-325—639.
5. K-State, 315-328—643.
6. (tie) Texas-San Antonio, Pan American, 316-328—644.
8. Texas Tech, 323-325—648.
9. Arkansas-Little Rock, 322-329—651.
10. Texas Lutheran, 313-339—652.
11. St. Mary's, 338-346—684.
12. Trinity, 342-350—692.

Royals rally with 4-run ninth, upend Red Sox for fourth time

By The Associated Press

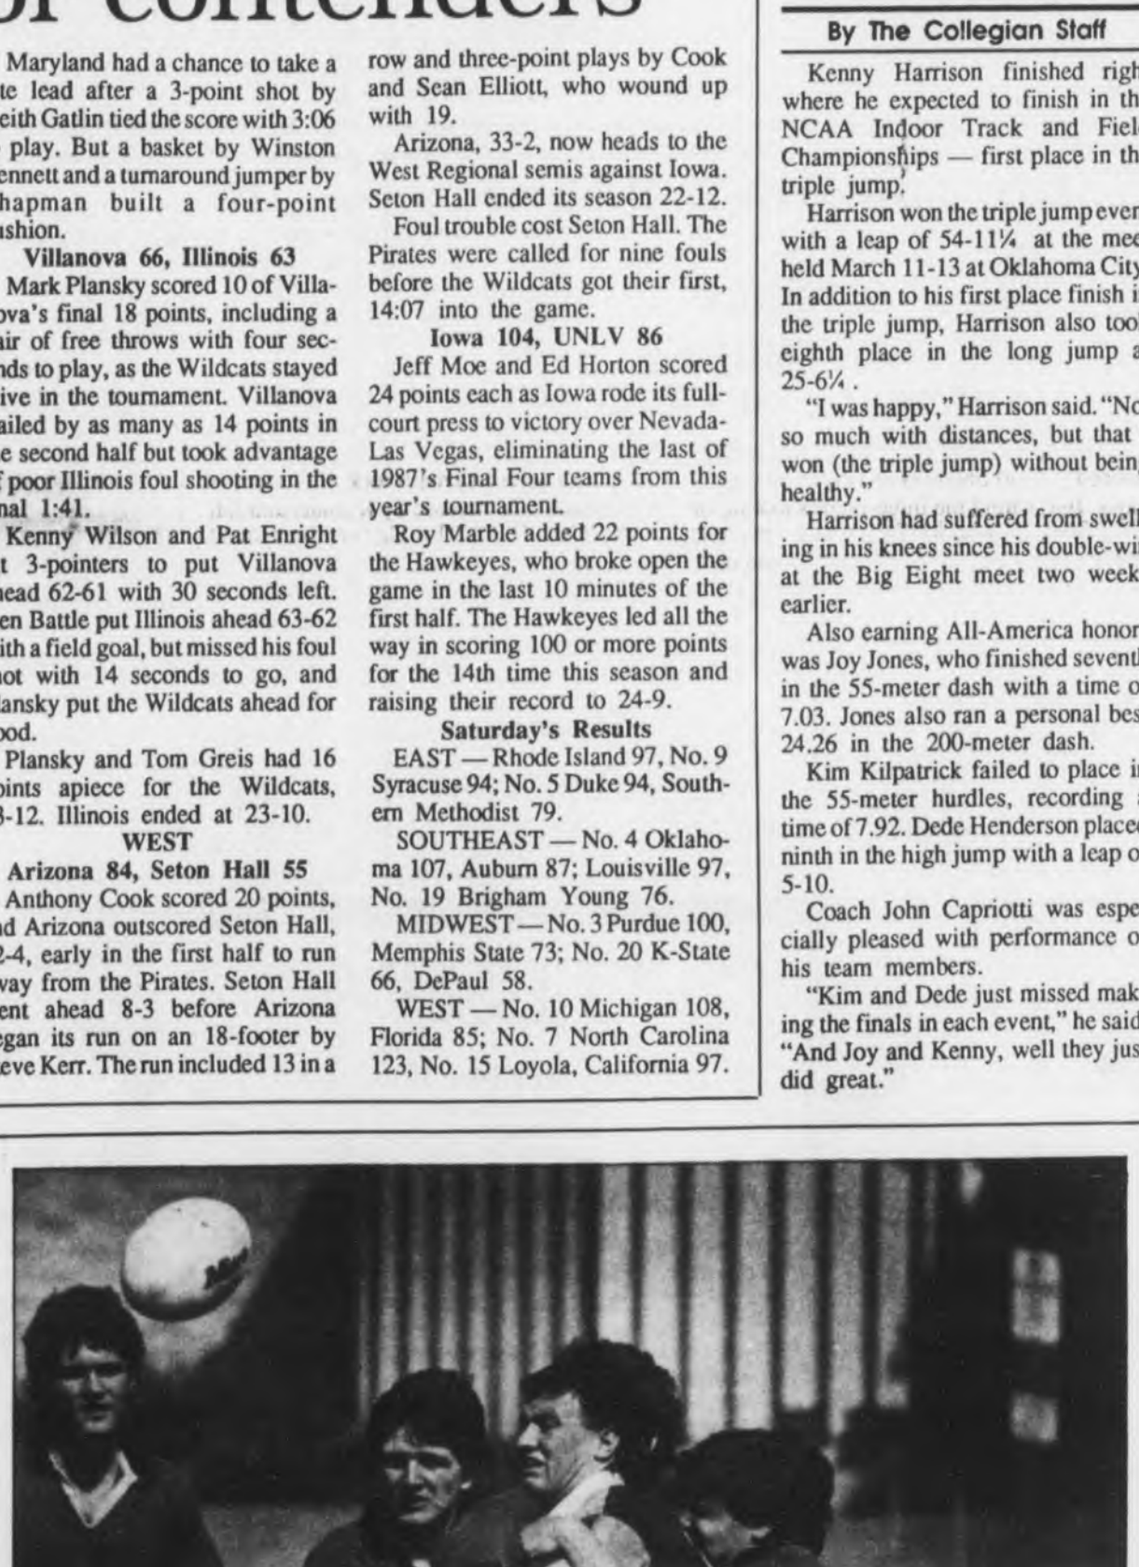
WINTER HAVEN, Fla. — Brad Wellman keyed a four-run ninth inning with a tie-breaking triple Sunday, as the Kansas City Royals rallied to defeat the Boston Red Sox 8-5 for their ninth victory in the last 10 preseason starts.

Kansas City hiked its record to 12-6. Boston fell to 6-11.

Danny Tartabull drove in three runs with a single and two doubles, while Steve Balboni had a double and a single in helping Kansas City beat Boston for the fourth time.

Southpaw Tom Bolton took over as the third Boston pitcher and retired the first batter in the ninth. Bill Pecota then lined a single to left and Scotti Madison drew a pinch walk.

Tartabull followed with an RBI double to left-center and Wellman, a journeyman infielder signed as a free agent last October, tripled down the left-field line. Wellman scored on Larry Owen's two-out single.



Roger Clemens, who struck out nine Royals in four innings last Tuesday, fanned eight in going six for the first time. However, he was tagged for seven hits and three runs.

Mike Smith replaced Clemens and gave up an RBI double to Tartabull in the seventh before pitching a 1-2-3 eighth and giving way to Bolton.

Southpaw Floyd Bannister allowed three hits, including Dwight Evans' first homer, and two runs in pitching five innings for Kansas City for the first time. Evans' homer was the first earned run off Bannister, who has made three of his four starts against Boston.

Ted Power, acquired from Cincinnati, had his scoreless string broken in his fifth appearance. Evans and Todd Benzinger had RBI doubles and Rich Gedman singled across a run, as Boston went ahead 5-3 in the sixth.

After allowing a harmless double in the seventh, Power retired. Dan Quisenberry then blanked the Red Sox on one hit in the final two innings.

Tim Dougan and Eric Long tackle a Creighton rugby player Saturday during the collegiate game which K-State won 12-0. The team also tied Creighton 13-13 in the club game.

Israeli soldier shot

Greater use of guns possible

By The Associated Press

BETHLEHEM, Occupied West Bank — A gunman opened fire at close range Sunday on a reserve soldier standing guard near a Palestinian refugee camp, marking the first Israeli army fatality in four months of unrest in the occupied lands.

The army's chief of staff, Gen. Dan Shomron, said the shooting could augur greater use of guns by Palestinian activists. He stopped short of saying it signaled a major change in the tactics of protesters, who have mainly hurled stones and bottles at Israel's occupation forces.

"I don't think we can yet see this as a shift to an armed struggle," he said.

But Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin indicated stronger action would be taken to quell Palestinian uprisings.

"To the extent that extremist Palestinian terrorist elements try to combine terrorist acts with the civilian disturbances, we will have to adjust our operations and take harsher measures to cope with both," he said.

The army identified the slain soldier as Sgt. Moshe Katz, 28, from the northern port city of Haifa.

He was shot two or three times in the head at close range while guarding a government building facing the small Beit Jibrin Palestinian refugee camp in this biblical city, the military said.

Troops immediately sealed off the road, the main tourist route from Jerusalem to the city's Manger Square, the site of Christ's birth. They also slapped a curfew on the refugee camp and "rounded up everyone who was in the area" for questioning, an army spokesman said.

Shortly after the killing, a dozen Israeli soldiers guarded about 100 Palestinians in front of shops. Soldiers led them away in small groups for questioning.

Rabin and Shomron rushed to the scene.

"It's a painful day, but we are determined to go on to make sure security will prevail in Israel and the territories," Rabin said later at the Western Wall in Jerusalem's Old City, the most sacred site in Judaism.

He told a group of supporters that the protests in the occupied territories had the same goal as the Arab wars against Israel: "The purpose is through the use of force to get rid of us."

Israeli troops have killed 103 Palestinians since Dec. 8, according to United Nations figures.

Class offers dieting savvy

By The Collegian Staff

The majority of people are one of two types of eaters — grazers or structured eaters, said Martha Olson, registered dietician at Lafene Student Health Center.

Grazers eat small amounts of food frequently throughout the day, and structured eaters eat their meals on a regular schedule.

A major obstacle dieters face is parties, Olson said. High-fat foods and sweets are the main foods served at parties.

"We want them to cut back without jeopardizing their social life," she said.

At parties, dieters should choose the foods with the most nutritional value. For example, a potato chip has relatively no nutritional value compared to cheese.

"There is a choice that you have to make, and you should choose the one with the most nutritional value," Olson said.

A weight control class that Lafene offers discusses misconceptions about fattening foods, eating disorders and analyzing why people overeat.

"We have small, rather intimate groups this year," Olson said. "That's not all bad. The students have confidence and will open up and say things that they might not in a large group."

The class meets at 10:30 on Tuesdays or Wednesdays at 3:30 in Lafene.

"We stress nutrition. It is the first thing we do," Olson said. "We also go into behavioral changes, and exercise habits, basically to help them with weight loss."

Students in the weight control class keep a weekly food diary and weigh-in at every meeting to monitor their progress.

Student teaches how to plan spending

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reporter

Wilma Schuh has an unusual job.

While most college students are worrying about their own finances, Schuh, a graduate student in adult and occupational continuing education, is teaching others to manage their money better.

Since October, Schuh has counseled individuals who are on probation for committing minor offenses usually stemming from a lack of money and who must complete financial counseling as a stipulation of their probation.

"At some point in their (legal) processing, (the offenders) have been identified as needing financial counseling, as opposed to drug and alcohol counseling or inpatient counseling," said Frank McCoy, director of the Riley County Community Corrections Office. McCoy refers the individuals to Schuh for counseling.

Schuh begins her counseling by making people list what they owe to their creditors, including their restitution to the court.

Once this is established, she has them make a spending plan. She has the subjects list their income and how they plan to distribute that income during the following month. She does not use the word "budget."

"We use (the term) 'spending plans.' 'Budget' has a negative connotation. It's like the word 'diet,'" Schuh said. "'Budget' means to restrict, but 'spending plan' means 'I'm planning it. I have a choice.'"

Her objective is not to be critical of how the people choose to spend money but to make them aware that money spent in one area cannot go to another area.

One of the most common misconceptions she deals with involves check writing. Schuh said many of the people she counsels think that writing a check automatically makes the money appear. Many of them do not make the connection that writing a check is actually spending their own money.

Schuh said she also finds that, on the whole, the people seem to lack decision-making skills.

"They know the difference between needs and wants, but they don't make that connection when they are shopping," Schuh said. "They have never had to weigh the pros and cons of buying items — like the idea that buying a doughnut a day may mean not buying a gallon of milk some other time."

Schuh said most of the people she counsels are educated. Some have college degrees, and others are in the process of getting a degree.

"They are not quite in poverty, but they are not middle class by any means," Schuh said.

Although Schuh said she generally likes her job, she finds it distressing to see the ages of the people she counsels.

The ages range from 19 to 30. Somewhere in the course of their growing up, these people missed out on learning some important financial concepts, she said.

McCoy said Schuh, who is doing the counseling as part of her practicum, is the only person in Kansas doing this type of counseling because the program is the only one in the state.

"It provides a good community service because it looks at what makes people get into trouble and tries to correct that. It is not a sanction but an educational service."

Tehran, Baghdad bombed

Iran: Iraq used gas to stop offensive

By The Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Iran claimed on Sunday that Iraq killed 5,000 Iraqi Kurds in poison gas attacks while trying to blunt an Iranian offensive. It also said Iran blasted Iraq's two largest cities with 13 missiles.

Iraq reported its gunners fired a long-range missile into Tehran, the Iranian capital, late Sunday. A military spokesman was quoted by the official Iraqi News Agency as saying such attacks would continue "until the Tehran rulers accept international calls for peace."

There was no response from the Iraqi government in Baghdad on the Iranian allegations about chemical weapons.

But the Iraqi News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, said the army's 2nd Corps repulsed an overnight Iranian assault in the central sector of the front, killing or wounding 1,200 soldiers.

Iran said it fired 13 missiles into the Iraqi capital, Baghdad, and the southern port city of Basra on Sunday in the continuing duel known as the "war of the cities." It reported "heavy casualties" in its shelling of Iraqi border cities.

In the Persian Gulf, shipping sources said Iranian gunboats attacked the 84,631-ton Liberian-flag tanker Atlantic Peace with rocket-propelled grenades. No casualties were reported.

It was the fourth Iranian assault on neutral shipping in the past three days in the long tug-of-war for control of the Persian Gulf. Iraqis made an air strike on Iran's Kharg Island oil terminal Saturday, leaving two tankers in flames.

Commercial actors to strike against major ad firms today

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Commercial actors and announcers were poised to strike nationwide at midnight Sunday and presidential candidates were advised to seek waivers with unions if they want to continue making election ads.

A union hot-line message Sunday said: "The strike will begin as planned at 12:01 a.m. this Monday, March 21."

Picket line schedules were sent to members of the Screen Actors Guild and the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists in Los Angeles, New York City, Chicago, and Honolulu for Monday morning, with similar demonstrations planned for other cities later in the week.

The advertising firm of Ogilvy and Mather was targeted by pickets in Los Angeles and Honolulu. In New York City, strikers were told to set up picket lines at General Motors Plaza during a GM board meeting.

In Chicago, the agencies of Leo Burnett, J. Walter Thompson, DDB Needham Worldwide and Tatham-Laird and Kudner were targeted for union picketing.

Talks on a new three-year pact between the commercial performers and the Joint Policy Committee of the American Association of Advertising Agencies and the Association of National Advertisers began Jan. 11 in New York City and broke off March 7.

The unions recently sent telegrams to all presidential candidates warning them of the strike and offering production waivers if they agree to interim contracts conced-

Shultz: Noriega must go

Leader holds Cuban guns

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Sunday the Panamanian military is "cracking open" around strongman Manuel Antonio Noriega, but a defector pilot contended that well-placed military loyalists and a big stash of Cuban arms will keep Noriega in power.

"The situation is that Noriega must leave sooner or later. The sooner the better," Shultz said on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

Shultz said U.S. indictments against Noriega on drug trafficking charges would not be dropped and Noriega could not have any say about the government that would run Panama after his departure.

"What he has to do is leave, and he should settle quickly before the opportunity that is there before him, to go to Spain, should disappear," Shultz said. Spain has offered Noriega political asylum on the condition that the United States not seek his extradition on the drug charges.

"Increasingly, the military is cracking open and making it clear that they want him to leave," Shultz said, citing the defection last week of Noriega's personal pilots, Majs. Augusto Villalaz and Ramon Adames.

Villalaz, interviewed on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley" Sunday, said he had flown three shipments of arms to Panama from Cuba and that Noriega planned to import 500,000 pounds of weapons.

"He located the arms outside the military installations, and he can handle (them) with his people when he wants," Villalaz said.

He said last week's coup attempt against Noriega failed because an officer who was supposed "to secure the commander of troops" protecting Noriega's headquarters failed to do so. He did not give any other details about the coup attempt.

Villalaz acknowledged a Noriega claim that four of the five officers involved in the plot against him received training in the United States last month, but he said no U.S. agency was involved in the coup attempt.

In a telephone interview, Raul St. Malo, minister counselor with the Panamanian embassy, said the pilots told anti-Noriega embassy officials that 70 percent of military officers supported the coup attempt, but Noriega has loyalists guarding the military's firepower. He said the anti-Noriega personnel include captains, majors and colonels in all branches of the service.

National security adviser Lt. Gen. Colin Powell, also interviewed on ABC, speculated that Noriega could be intending to use the Soviet-made armaments to wage an insurgency of his own after he is deposed for use elsewhere in Central America.

Watergate conspirator to head ethics panel

By The Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Watergate conspirator Jeb Stuart Magruder says his past was the perfect prologue to his new post as the head of the city's Commission on Values and Ethics, formed after scores of people scooped up cash that fell from an armored car.

Magruder, now a Presbyterian minister, was a deputy director of communications in the Nixon White House and spent seven months in jail for his role in the Watergate scandal.

Magruder, 53, who calls Watergate one of the greatest ethical scandals of modern times, said in an interview that what he learned from Watergate qualifies him to lead the 15-member panel of business, education and religious leaders.

"Watergate happened 15 years ago. Since that period of time, I have spent most of my life in preparation for the ministry and in the ministry. And in doing that I took on as kind of my issue — because of Watergate I'm sure — the issue of ethics. That automatically hit a responsive chord in me," he said, laughing.

Magruder was ordained a Presbyterian minister in 1981 and since has divided his time between his duties at First Community Church and speaking to groups around the state about ethics. He is almost finished writing a book on the subject.

"I do have a fairly unique kind of a pattern to discuss ... being involved in one of the great scandals of our country, which was an ethical scandal," he said. "And studying ethics from a theological viewpoint, I have come to some conclusions about what is happening in this life."

Those conclusions include a major change from his code of ethics in the Watergate era.

"If they haven't changed, then it has been a real waste of time, hasn't it?" he said.

The commission's goal is to generate discussion of ethics and values by city residents. To that end, it is sponsoring a forum April 23 featuring Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., plans presentations in schools and eventually will distribute a questionnaire posing ethical questions that it hopes will spur consideration of the issues.

It was the brainchild of Mayor Dana Rinehart and others, including Magruder, who have gathered monthly for informal lunch meetings since last fall. Their talk turned to values and ethics in October after the rear door of an armored car flew open and bags of cash spilled onto Interstate 71.

An estimated 200 people converged on the freeway, some to gawk but most to scoop up flying bills.

A telephone worker was given a mayoral proclamation and a reward for returning $57,000, but many others kept the money.

How much cash was lost and how much was recovered has never been publicly released, but published figures estimate that as much as $1 million may have fallen from the truck.

Aquino won't seek re-election

Lack of political ambition cited as reason

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — President Corazon Aquino said Sunday that she does not plan to seek re-election in 1992 and told a radio audience that she lacks political ambition.

Aquino also announced on her weekly radio show that four Manila police officers would answer charges before the Human Rights Commission that they tortured captured communist rebels.

Asked by a caller about her plans to seek a second six-year term, Aquino responded, "I said earlier that I had no political ambitions and I feel I really was meant for one term.

"And so one term it will be," she said. "But I want to thank the Filipino people for having given me this opportunity to serve you at such a difficult time.

"I was only meant for transition. Even now I consider this the transition period from dictatorship to full democracy," she said.

Aquino said the "pillars of democracy" — the executive, legislative and judicial branches of the American-style government — are already in place in the Philippines.

"But because of the economic problems there is no full democracy because we must also have economic freedom," she said.

Aquino was swept to power in February 1986 by a popular revolt that ended President Ferdinand Marcos' 20-year authoritarian rule. Both she and Marcos claimed to have won the fraud-tainted presidential election earlier that month.

Aquino said in response to another question that four Western District police officers would testify before the government Human Rights Commission, but did not specify when this would be.

The commission is merely an investigatory body, but it could make its evidence available to a court of law if it finds wrongdoing.

She said commission chairwoman Mary Concepcion Bautista "has looked into the matter of recently captured communist insurgents."

Authorities rounded up two dozen suspected communist rebels last month in sweeps throughout the capital. Seven were released for lack of evidence and 17 remain in custody.

Shortly after their capture, some of the detainees claimed they had been tortured. Three of them appeared before the House of Representatives' Human Rights Committee and displayed marks on their bodies they said were the result of torture.

The committee chairwoman, Rep. Nikki Coeseteng, later told reporters the panel had found evidence of human rights abuse by the military, and called the treatment given the detainees "inhuman."

Earlier this month, the London-based Amnesty International and the local Task Force Detainees charged there were widespread human rights abuses in the Philippines.

The church-backed Task Force said its investigation showed 7,444 Filipinos were arrested illegally in 1987, eclipsing the 5,967 arrests in 1985 when Marcos was president. It said many of those arrested last year were tortured.

Secord, Hakim invest $1 million obtained from arms sales to Iran

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — The independent counsel in the Iran-Contra case has learned that retired Maj. Gen. Richard Secord and Albert Hakim skimmed nearly $1 million from bank accounts containing money from the arms sales to Iran, according to a newspaper report.

The money allegedly was used by Secord and Hakim to invest in arms, food and real estate businesses for their personal gain, the Chicago Tribune reported in today's editions.

The newspaper cited unnamed sources close to the investigation, which is being led by independent counsel Lawrence Walsh.

The Tribune said Walsh obtained some of his information through the help of Willard Zucker, an attorney and financial adviser who has been granted immunity from prosecution.

The Geneva-based Zucker managed the Swiss bank accounts and allegedly set up a number of shell corporations to mask the diversion of $18 million of the money paid by the Iranians, the Tribune said.

A federal grand jury indicted Secord, Hakim, Lt. Col. Oliver North and former National Security Adviser John Poindexter last week on charges of conspiring to siphon the profits from the Iranian arms sales and use the money for the benefit of the Contra rebels in Nicaragua. It also accused Secord, Hakim and North of using some of the money for personal gain.

All four defendants have said they would plead innocent at an arraignment Thursday.

The indictment also charged Secord and Hakim of conspiring to pay illegal gratuities to North.

No one was hurt in either raid and no damage was reported in Saturday's attack.

Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto sent a protest note to Honduran Foreign Minister Carlos Lopez, saying his government "energetically and formally protests" Saturday's attack, which it called "aggression against Nicaraguan territory."

The ministry also said two F-5 warplanes flew over Sandinista positions Saturday morning in the frontier sectors of Mukuwas, San Andres de Bocay, Waniwas and Wayawas.

The 600 Sandinistas were part of a force estimated at 2,000 that was believed to have entered Honduran territory last week in pursuit of U.S.-backed Contra rebels.

The action prompted President Reagan to send in U.S. troops to noncombat areas for military exercises in a show of force to the Marxist regime.

In Washington, national security adviser Lt. Gen. Colin Powell said the fighting between Nicaragua and Honduras was essentially over.

What would you do with an extra $910?

If your family is like the average American family of four, you spend about $4,420 a year on groceries.* In order to get the same national brand name items you could get at Food 4 Less in a year, you'd have to spend up to $910 more at other Manhattan stores! (According to independent survey results taken between February 23rd-25th, 1988.) Think what you can do with the $910 you save at Food 4 Less!

A YEAR'S WORTH OF GROCERIES FROM	COST
Safeway	$910.96 MORE (or 20.61%)
Dutch Maid	$666.98 MORE (or 15.09%)
Dillons	$624.99 MORE (or 14.14%)

The ways you save at Food 4 Less add up to a lot, but it all boils down to this: NOBODY saves you more money on groceries than Food 4 Less. Nobody.

THERE CAN ONLY BE ONE LOW PRICE LEADER!

Spring breaks into summer

By Deron Johnson
Campus Editor

Drag out the jams, slip on the shades and head for your favorite watering hole: Summer has hit the Little Apple. At least for a while.

On the first day back from spring break Monday, students found temperatures that rivaled or even bested such typical spring break climes as Daytona Beach, Fla., or South Padre, Texas. And today is expected to be as warm or even warmer than Monday, said an official with the National Weather Service in Topeka.

"The only place in the state today that did not reach 80 degrees is Lawrence, and it was 79," said meteorologist Larry Schultz. Hill City recorded the state's warmest temperature Monday, checking in with 85 degrees, and Manhattan had 81.

Normal daytime highs for mid-March are in the low to mid-50s, Schultz said.

The bearer of these balmy temperatures is a high pressure system that is drawing southerly winds up from Texas and the Gulf Coast, he said. Goodland, which was 80 Monday, was the only Kansas city to set a record, outdoing a 78-degree reading in 1945.

Other cities setting records Monday were Alamosa, Texas, Albuquerque, N.M., and Tuscon, Ariz. Wichita Falls, Texas, and Dickinson, N.D., tied old records. Schultz said Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas and western Missouri were in the upper 70s and 80s Monday.

Today is expected to be in the 80s throughout most of the state, with the exception of northwest Kansas, which should be about 70, Schultz said.

People responded to the warm temperatures Monday by buying typically summer fare, said Clem Sheridan, manager of Dillard's department store.

"We've had a good day today," Sheridan said. "When there's a change in the weather such as this, the seasonal things are shorts, sunglasses, swimsuits and knit shirts."

And what were the items du jour Monday?

"It was shorts and knit tops," Sheridan said, adding that the store had more sales Monday than Sunday, which was a few degrees cooler.

Colton McArthur, salesman with Aggie Ski and Sport, and junior in graphic design, said most of his store's clientele haven't made their final summer purchases yet.

"A lot of people are still looking," he said. "There's not much buying yet." However, he added that "a lot" of women's swim suits had been sold.

Despite the basking rays of the real sun, even businesses offering an artificial sun did well Monday. Todd Sodeberg, co-owner of Southern Sun tanning salon, said business was "way above" normal Monday.

"We would have expected not nearly as much (business) as this," he said, attributing the increase to cold temperatures in Florida and Texas last week that were not conducive to tanning.

Jennifer Flynn, manager of Schliebe Workout Center, said her business's tanning beds were popular Monday.

"We've been all booked up today," she said.

However, as with all other good things, this weather too will end, Schultz said.

Staff/Greg Vogel
Ken Williams, Manhattan, and his basset hound Cleo jog over a small bridge Monday afternoon at CiCo Park, taking advantage of the warm weather.

"We can expect this warm spell we've had to be rather brief," he said. Following a chance of showers or thundershowers tonight, Wednesday's temperatures should be back near normal — in the upper 50s to lower 60s.

During the next 30 days, the state is expected to have temperatures slightly below normal and precipitation about normal, Schultz said.

Sandinistas withdraw troops from Honduras

Nicaraguans, Contras propose cease-fire during peace talks

By The Associated Press

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — Nicaragua withdrew its soldiers from the Honduran border Monday and declared an end to fighting while it holds truce talks with Contra rebels, according to reports from all sides.

Both Nicaragua and the Contras proposed cease-fires in talks Monday.

The border region remained tense, with Honduran patrols on the lookout for any booby traps left behind by the Sandinistas.

President Jose Azcona Hoyo said the 3,200 U.S. troops sent to Honduras last week, after the Nicaraguan army was accused of sending 2,000 men across the border last Wednesday in pursuit of Contras, may not be needed any longer.

"The worst is over and there is peace now in the border region," Col. Reynald Andino Flores, commander of the Honduran army's 101st Infantry Brigade, said by telephone from his headquarters in southern Honduras.

"We are remaining on a state of alert to be ready for anything that may happen," he added, and soldiers are "constantly patrolling the area."

Flores and other officers, some of whom insisted on anonymity for security reasons, said the Sandinistas penetrated an area of about 20 square miles inside Olancho province last week while chasing the U.S.-supported rebels in a two-week offensive to evict the Contras from Nicaragua.

About 200 border incidents have been reported in Olancho since the Contras began fighting the leftist Sandinista government in 1981.

President Daniel Ortega and the Nicaraguan government have denied Sandinista soldiers crossed the border.

The Contras maintain camps in an area called Bocay, which includes territory on both sides of the border. Nicaragua claims the camps, which the Contras use to store supplies and to stage raids inside Nicaragua, are in Nicaraguan land but the rebels say they are in Honduras.

At Sapoa, a town on the Costa Rican border, representatives of the Sandinista government and Contras began their first direct talks Monday on Nicaraguan soil.

The purpose of the negotiations is to work out a cease-fire as required by the peace plan that five Central American presidents signed last Aug. 7.

Defense Minister Humberto Ortega of Nicaragua said the Sandinistas would stop fighting during the talks, which are scheduled to last three days, and asked the Contras to do the same.

Contra leader Alfredo Cesar, head of the rebel delegation, called the Sandinista proposal "constructive" and added: "If they do this, then we also can take the same measures."

Britain begins search for 2 soldiers' killers

By The Associated Press

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — IRA gunmen killed a police officer Monday at a checkpoint in Londonderry, the 12th victim in two weeks of heightening tension and sectarian violence.

Britain announced a massive manhunt in West Belfast's Roman Catholic ghettos for the killers of two British soldiers caught in an IRA funeral procession.

Northern Ireland Secretary Tom King said in London that the Royal Ulster Constabulary has launched an immediate review of its new policy of keeping a low profile at Irish Republican Army funerals. The policy was aimed at avoiding clashes between police and supporters of the outlawed IRA.

The policeman who was killed Monday, Clive Graham, 25, was shot in the head in a jeep while at a checkpoint in the Roman Catholic Creggan district of Londonderry, Northern Ireland's second-largest city. He died later in the hospital.

The IRA claimed responsibility for Graham's killing in a clandestine message to Belfast media.

He was the 12th person to die since March 6, when British commandos shot dead three IRA guerrillas who allegedly were plotting a car bombing in Gibraltar.

The funeral policy was started Wednesday at services for the guerrillas killed in Gibraltar. A Protestant gunman opened fire and hurled grenades at the Catholic Milltown cemetery, killing three people and wounding 68.

King's announcement of a review of the policy stopped well short of demands by leaders of Northern Ireland Protestant parties to return to a heavy presence at IRA funerals.

As expectations grew of an imminent wave of arrests in West Belfast, there was also speculation that dozens of IRA supporters who were filmed surrounding and beating the soldiers' unmarked car with iron bars and dragging them out had gone into hiding.

"A massive murder investigation is under way in which all possible resources are involved to identify all those responsible," King said of the manhunt in West Belfast.

Three people were arrested Saturday and police sources said Monday that up to 30 others were being sought after hours of scrutiny of film taken by an army helicopter which hovered over the scene and by TV networks. Gruesome scenes of the attack also were shown on television.

Corporals Derek Wood and David Howes, in plainclothes, were surrounded when they drove up to the cortege, dragged from their car, stripped, beaten and shot dead.

Since 1969, 2,638 people have been killed in the sectarian violence in this Protestant-dominated province.

Panama, U.S. request Gen. Noriega's removal

Officials reject proposal for resignation

By The Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama — Strongman Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega has offered to resign before next year's presidential elections if opponents agree to talks with his regime, Panama's chief of state told his countrymen Monday.

The opposition, whose general strike Monday paralyzed the nation, and the United States, which has kept up steady pressure to force a Noriega resignation, immediately rejected the general's offer.

Elections are scheduled for May 1989.

"There will be no dialogue," said Aurelio Barria, the main leader of the National Civic Crusade, an anti-Noriega coalition of 200 business, professional, labor and political groups that called the indefinite work stoppage.

He added: "The general has to go — immediately, not eventually. The strike will continue."

Manuel Solis Palma, installed last month as the minister in charge of the presidency, made the announcement of Noriega's offer in a nationally broadcast speech.

He said Noriega had given his word "as an officer and a gentleman" to step down if his conditions are met.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Anita Stockman said:

Professors evaluate sanctions' effects

By Shelly Tierney
Collegian Reporter

The possible passage of economic and trade sanctions against Panama in an effort to force Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega out of power are not sure to be effective and may create animosity abroad, said Joseph Hajda, professor of political science.

"It is the unilateral action on the part of the United States that bothers me in this case," Hajda said. "If Panama succeeds in replacing U.S. trade with trade from other countries, we will not be gaining much.

"(The United States) needs to look at collective self-help measures which would include collective international efforts to gain support for U.S. actions taken against Panama," he said. "If we have international support, our chances for success will be greatly improved."

Collective self-help measures are effective, but take more time and patience to organize, Hajda said, because they require the United States to gain international support rather than being the sole country to give support to the measures.

The Panamanian issues must be considered in a broad context because their implications go beyond the effects in the United States, Hajda said.

"Assuming Noriega has control of the armed forces in Panama, he will

Peace talks begin in Nicaragua

SAPOA, Nicaragua — The Sandinista government and U.S.-backed rebels on Monday opened three days of talks in this border town by exchanging cease-fire proposals and agreeing to a truce during the negotiations.

"Neither side seeks a military victory over the other," said Alfredo Cesar, head of the rebel delegation, after the completion of the first day of talks — the first face-to-face negotiations on Nicaraguan soil.

He said the Contra rebels proposed a 30-day cease-fire and continuous talks to reach a permanent truce.

Cesar told reporters the Contras also proposed total amnesty and guarantees of free expression to lead toward reconciliation. He called Monday's talks, which were behind closed doors, "a step ahead."

Life goes on for lone survivor

NEW YORK — Four-year-old Cecelia Cichan, the lone survivor of the Northwest Airlines jet crash in Detroit last summer, has been told that her parents and 6-year-old brother died in the crash and she understands she will not see them again, according to Life magazine.

Cecelia still wears bandages on her chest and arms, the magazine reports in its April issue. She suffered a broken leg and collarbone, deep head cuts and third-degree burns over 25 percent of her body in the Aug. 16 crash, the second-worst U.S. air disaster.

Cecelia was well enough at Halloween to dress up like a ballerina and go trick-or-treating at her new home in suburban Birmingham, Ala., where she lives with her aunt and uncle, Rita and Frank Lumpkin, and her 2-year-old cousin, Tara.

But she still puts up a fuss when she has to go to the doctor for checkups on her skin grafts, Life reports.

Safety caps reduce poisoning

WASHINGTON — Safety experts previewed a series of new designs for child-resistant pill containers Monday to highlight this year's National Poison Prevention Week.

The special medicine containers have helped reduce the number of children fatally poisoned from nearly 500 in 1962 to 56 in 1985, reported Terrence M. Scanlon, chairman of the federal Consumer Product Safety Commission.

Marsha Millonig of the National Poison Prevention Week said resistant caps are one of the three main factors in reducing poisonings, along with the growth of poison control centers and improved parental awareness of the dangers of poison for children.

Poison may kill cancer cells

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Scientists have redesigned a potent natural poison so that it seeks out and kills cancer cells in the test tube, signaling a possible new route for fighting some tumors, a scientist said Monday.

The poison, so strong that a dose the size of a salt grain can kill a person, may be harnessed for fighting breast cancers that have spread elsewhere in the body, and some lung and brain tumors, said Ira Pastan of the National Cancer Institute.

The strategy takes advantage of the fact that some cancer cells display on their surface certain kinds of protein structures called receptors. Specific substances bind to each kind of receptor before they enter the cell.

Normal cells have receptors too, but the new work focuses on receptors that are far more numerous on cancer cells, Pastan told science writers at a seminar sponsored by the American Cancer Society.

Hank Jr. entertainer of the year

BUENA PARK, Calif. — Hank Williams Jr. won his second consecutive entertainer of the year trophy, and Randy Travis won awards for male singer, single and song of the year at Monday's 23rd annual Academy of Country Music Awards.

"Forever and Ever, Amen" brought Travis the song and single honors, the same categories that he won last year with "On The Other Hand."

Williams, 38, son of the fabled country pioneer who has had a career of his own since childhood, and Travis, 28, who swept the event last year with four trophies, went to the show with six nominations apiece.

"It's still a big thing to keep winning. It makes me quite nervous," Travis said backstage.

Album of the year went to Dolly Parton, Emmylou Harris and Linda Ronstadt for "Trio," the mother-daughter duo The Judds took the duet award. and Reba McEntire was top female vocalist.

Corporate farming bill ignored

TOPEKA — No action is likely this legislative session on a proposal to relax the state law that limits corporate farming in Kansas.

The Senate Agriculture Committee adjourned a meeting today without voting on a bill that would permit corporations to own more land than the present law allows. The bill was designed mainly to enable DeKalb Swine Breeders to expand its hog raising operations in southwest Kansas.

Chairman Jim Allen, R-Ottawa, said the committee's inaction ends discussion of the bill in his committee unless five members tell him they are ready to vote for it. Allen said he would support the bill, giving it the six votes needed in the 11-member committee to send it to the Senate for debate.

"There are not five other votes for it at this time, and it doesn't appear there will be five other votes for it," Allen said after the committee adjourned on a motion by Sen. Ross Doyen, R-Concordia.

Spring break tournaments successful for debaters

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

Spring break was a busy but successful time for K-State's debate team.

The team traveled more than 3,000 miles attending meets, winning two tournaments and placing significantly in a third.

"It's probably the most successful week we've had in the history of debate at K-State," said Edward Schiappa, instructor of speech and debate team coach.

Three teams, composed of two debaters each, closed out the East Coast Junior National Debate Tournament at George Mason University in Washington, D.C. To close out a tournament, the final two teams to debate after the elimination process must be from the same university.

A single elimination system is used for the tournament.

"To close out a tournament is a really prestigious thing to do," Schiappa said. "In that case, we just take the awards and go."

In addition to a No.1 ranking in the overall school award category, the K-State team took first, third, fifth, sixth and 10th place awards in the individual competition category. In the team category, K-Staters placed first, third and fifth.

"Schools like McAlester and UCLA were at the tournament (in Washington, D.C.) trying to move up in ranking. We beat precisely the people we needed to," Schiappa said.

During the same weekend, two K-State debate teams attended the annual Debate Forum at Washburn University. First and third place awards were taken in individual competition and the debaters won first and second places in the team competition.

Closing out the second junior national debate tournament March 18-20 at Johnson County Community College, the debaters placed first and third in the individual events and sixth and eighth in team.

"We didn't do as well in the individual competition as team (competition), but the teams did exceptionally well which is really important," Schiappa said. "The individual awards are gravy. It's like a track meet. You can have an individual who wins the mile race but the whole team may get crunched."

The entire squad will be attending the national debate tournament, April 2-3, at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs. All five teams qualified for the tournament, but four is the limit for competition at that level.

By closing out two tournaments during the break, the debaters have ensured a national ranking as one of the top 10 debate squads in the nation.

"We've cinched one ranking already. My guess is it'll be fifth or sixth," he said. Depending on how well the debaters perform at the national competition, the ranking could be even higher.

Schiappa attributes the squad's successes to a three-fold process.

Before spring break, the squad took a three-week reprieve to rewrite and practice their material. This gave the squad an edge since many schools do not work as hard during this time as they might have previously in the semester. As a result of their hard work, the K-State team passed a lot of other people, Schiappa said.

Coaching is a second reason for the program success, he said. The squad operates with three assistant coaches in addition to Schiappa.

"It really helps when we're competing against schools that don't have as good or as large a coaching staff," he said. "It really makes a difference."

The team also has spent most of the season competing in the varsity, rather than junior varsity tournaments. The varsity level is for juniors and seniors while junior varsity is for freshmen and sophomores. Since the K-State squad is composed exclusively of freshmen and sophmores, competing at the varsity level was almost inevitable.

"Other coaches feel like K-State is building a dynasty. We are winning tournaments and yet we have no upperclassmen," said David K. Scott, assistant debate coach.

U.S. helicopter crashes in Honduras

By The Associated Press

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — A U.S. military helicopter crashed Monday during a training exercise near the Honduran town of Juticalpa and all 10 American soldiers aboard were injured, U.S. officials reported.

Maj. Gary Hovatter, spokesman for the American forces sent to Honduras last week, said the UH-1 Huey helicopter went down at about 1 p.m. EST and he called the crash an accident.

In Washington, Pentagon spokesman Lt. Cmdr. Mel Sundin said there were 10 people aboard the helicopter, not nine as previously thought. Their injuries did not appear to be serious.

"All are in good to excellent condition," Sundin said. He added that those aboard the chopper were American soldiers, but did not have further details.

Capt. Nancy LaLuntas, a Pentagon spokeswoman, said earlier that there were no reports of fatalities. She said other helicopters evacuated the victims for medical treatment but it was not clear where they were taken.

One Pentagon official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the cause of the crash appeared to be mechanical.

Hovatter said the helicopter was taking part in an exercise called "Golden Pheasant," which was launched after 3,200 U.S. soldiers arrived in Honduras last week.

Neither Hovatter nor LaLuntas gave further information on the injured soldiers because the victims' relatives had not yet been notified.

The officers said the helicopter crashed about six miles south of Juticalpa. The area is 35 miles north of the Honduras-Nicaragua border and about 60 miles west of the region where Nicaraguan troops battled the rebels last week.

The troops sent to Honduras were from the 82d Airborne Division based at Fort Bragg, N.C., and the 7th Light Infantry from Fort Ord, Calif.

Lawmakers should OK expenditure measure

Voters in Kansas county elections will have a chance to make a more-informed vote as a result of a measure — tentatively passed by the House Monday — that is expected to receive final approval today.

The measure would require candidates for county offices to file a list of contributors to their campaigns before primary and general elections. Currently, those candidates are only required to file expenditure reports after the campaign.

This bill will bring county-level officials in line with current guidelines for state offices.

Rep. Kathryn Sughrue is right in saying this law is "just plain good government" because of the power local government officials wield. Also, it will prevent contributors to local candidates' campaigns from gaining any undue influence.

However, there is one point in the legislation that should be changed. As the bill stands now, candidates would not be required to file the pre-election reports if they have spent less than $1,000 in a primary or general election.

This figure should be changed to the lower cutoff level of $500 that is advocated by some in the House. The lower level is based on the theory that many candidates in rural areas probably would not spend $1,000 in any election.

As it stands now, this is a good bill. With the change in expenditures to $500, it would be a great bill for the voters of Kansas.

Arizona Senate's task is to convict Mecham

Arizona's Gov. Evan Mecham is tired.

More specifically, he's "tired of this kind of baloney," as he so flatly put it last Thursday at his trial before the Arizona Senate, which is impeaching him.

During his second day of testimony, Mecham got into more than one shouting match with prosecutor Paul Eckstein, who was attempting to damage — or at least seriously question — Mecham's credibility. Mecham is being impeached for allegedly ordering Arizona's top lawman not to cooperate in an investigation of an alleged death threat.

The death threat was allegedly made by one of Mecham's staffers against a top aide who was scheduled to testify before a grand jury investigating Mecham's campaign finances. In addition to the death-threat charges, Mecham is accused of concealing a $350,000 campaign loan and of misusing $80,000 from a state fund by loaning it to his auto dealership.

Mecham acknowledged that he ordered Ralph Milstead, the state Department of Public Safety director, not to cooperate with Attorney General Bob Corbin's investigation of the alleged death threat.

That admission alone should cost Mecham his job.

However, anyone familiar with the Mecham circus during the past two years knows he has already done and said enough to be relieved of his duties. Mecham's latest acknowledgment should firmly establish that in the minds of Arizona's senators.

Although the governor maintains that his verbal exchange with Eckstein was "a total manufactured thing," he should realize that such tough questioning will and should continue.

While he's at it, he should also realize that his days are numbered.

Getting some RESULTS

Grass-roots group battles hunger

"Each of the great social achievements of recent decades has come about not because of government proclamations but because people organized, made demands and made it good politics for governments to respond. It is the political will of the people that makes and sustains the political will of governments."

—James Grant, executive director of UNICEF

Commentary

MICHAEL NICHOLS
Collegian Columnist

According to studies conducted by the United Nations as well as many other distinguished panels and commissions, the persistence of hunger on this planet is senseless. The world has the technology and more than enough resources to feed every person alive today; what is missing is the political will to end hunger.

Why is this so?

Only a minority of Americans take advantage of their rights as citizens to communicate with their elected representatives about their concerns. While many may think that as individuals they will probably not make a difference, when working with others in a vast network the participation of every person is important. Against the background of silent indifference in which we find ourselves today, the voices of committed and concerned citizens can make an enormous difference.

That is why RESULTS, an international, grass-roots lobbying organization, was created in 1980. The main goal of RESULTS is to create the political will to end hunger through the collective effort of conscientious human beings around the world. In its seven years of existence, RESULTS has expanded to include more than 70 groups in the United States, 12 in the United Kingdom, three in Australia and three in Canada.

And just what exactly does RESULTS do?

On a local level, RESULTS groups use self-teaching techniques to master basic information about government programs and legislation that address hunger and hunger-related diseases throughout the world. RESULTS members share this information with their elected representatives, the general public and the press, urging support to end hunger. RESULTS works for the passage of laws and policies and funding that put in place programs that make food self-sufficiency possible among the poorest people and programs that enlighten poor parents in the health care of their children.

How practical is this organization, as far as substantial achievements are concerned?

After a year of dedicated action on the part of RESULTS groups in the United States, a budget of $50 million in foreign assistance was created for small enterprise loans for the poor in 1988. Titled the Self-Sufficiency for the Poor Act, this piece of legislation creates opportunities for poor people in developing countries to start a tiny business and generate income to feed their children and themselves.

Other accomplishments include a $3 million increase in UNICEF funding to $54.4 million, making it possible for developing countries all over the world to have access, perhaps for the first time, to health care for the poverty-stricken. Also important was a $2 million increase in vitamin-A funding to developing countries. Vitamin A is essential in the prevention of infant blindness, and at 2 cents a capsule, $2 million goes a very long way.

Most recently, RESULTS has developed another piece of legislation to be proposed to Congress this year. In the words of Dorsey Lawson, assistant executive director of RESULTS: "In a world glutted with food, the United States spends billions (of dollars) each year on foreign aid programs. Yet daily, 35,000 children die as a consequence of hunger and hunger-related diseases." This bill is designed to ensure that specific progress is achieved with U.S. foreign aid expenditures.

The three main goals of this bill are:

■ to reduce by one-half the Under-Five Mortality Rate in developing countries by the year 2000. The U5MR is the annual number of deaths of children younger than 5 years of age per 1,000 live births.

■ to achieve a female literacy rate of 80 percent by the year 2000. In no country should female literacy be less than 90 percent of total literacy, according to this legislation. Female illiteracy is considered one of the greatest factors contributing to the detriment of the health and survival of Third World women and their children.

■ by the year 2000, to decrease the number of people in absolute poverty by at least 50 percent in those countries that had less than 40 percent of their population below absolute poverty in 1985. For countries that had more than 40 percent of the population below absolute poverty, a decrease to 20 percent would be viewed as a success.

On Wednesday, Lawson will speak at 7:30 p.m. in Union 209. During this lecture, she will expand upon the topic of hunger in the world, show a video on the issue and urge individuals to write a letter to their senator or representative on behalf of RESULTS Everyone is invited to attend, as well as to join in the formation of a local RESULTS group in Manhattan.

Letters

Cultural illiterate

Editor,

This is addressed to the geographical and cultural illiterate who is responsible for the article about Farrell Library's Renaissance celebration. The person who wrote the above-mentioned article obviously graduated from the Risk board school of political geography.

For those of you who are still confused, allow me to elucidate. Whales are aquatic mammals. Wales is a political subdivision of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. This sort of foolish error painfully illustrates America's most predominant educational problem — geographical illiteracy.

The sort of mistake that this exemplifies is analagous to someone calling this nation the "United Steaks." Many people may believe I am being overly critical, but if Americans don't wake up to this problem soon, some of these insignificant little places (such as Vietnam, Iran and the Falkland Islands) may become tragically significant. What next? Perhaps the Crown Prince of Great Britain referred to as the "Prince of Wails."

This error is only one manifestation of America's cross-cultural ignorance (and proud of it!) Many of you reading this may be of Welsh origin and not even know it. My middle name is Welsh gaelic for warrior, and a Welsh flag (a red dragon on a green and white field) hangs in my apartment. It is one thing to be ignorant of someone else's origins and culture, but quite another to be ignorant of one's own.

Perhaps next time the Collegian can at least hire someone who has watched an episode of "Masterpiece Theatre" or two. In the meantime, if you expect your reporters to become something more than "talking heads" on the evening news or agricultural journalists reading milo reports on FM radio, tell them to brush up on their political geography!

Free speech rights

Editor,

Marc T. Milhander's letter in the March 9 Collegian protests the recent appearance of the Ku Klux Klan on the University of Kansas campus. In so doing, however, Mr. Milhander reaches the very disturbing conclusion "that those who insist with vehemence that such events must occur are supporters of white supremacy."

That conclusion is hardly warranted. In fact, it strikes at the very heart of a university, which above all should serve as a forum for all ideas, no matter how repugnant. When a society grants the right of free speech, as ours does through the First Amendment, it does not ensure that people will speak morally or with sensitivity; it merely ensures that people will speak freely.

It is true that some will speak with bitter cruelty, but that is the price we pay to guarantee that all of us have the right to speak openly and without fear of reprisal. In short, the right of free speech allows the worst among us to be heard in order to make sure that the best among us will never be silenced.

At the end of his letter, Mr. Milhander adds, "I question the motivations of those who insist on interpreting the First Amendment according to what, I hypothesize, stems from their own hidden agendas." Perhaps Mr. Milhander does not appreciate that the genuine support for the freedom of speech is an end in itself, and thus cannot possibly contain hidden agendas. For the genuine advocacy of free speech to contain hidden agendas is a contradiction in terms; if it did, then the freedom of speech would be granted to some and denied to others in order to achieve those agendas.

One can champion the right of the KKK to speak while not championing a single syllable of what the KKK said. Mr. Milhander strongly opposes the KKK and its message of racial hate. So do I. His protest should really have been directed at the KKK and its abhorrent and cruel doctrines of racial and religious prejudice and white supremacy. Had Mr. Milhander done that, rather than question the motives of those who believe the KKK should be free to speak, I would not have challenged his letter but applauded it.

Getting attention

Editor,

I have heard that the College of Agriculture's administration is concerned about the American Agriculture Movement's threat to sue K-State on the grounds that our research does not benefit primarily small farmers, as the Hatch Act stipulates. (A California group has set a precedent for such action by winning a suit against the state's land-grant university. The court stated that University of California tomato harvesting mechanization research did not fit the Hatch Act mandate.)

An article in the March 7 Collegian shed a little light on this issue. In this article, "Technology aids cattleman," Guy Kiracofe, professor of animal sciences and industry, discusses an ultrasound machine, a tool which K-State has been instrumental in developing. He is quoted as saying, "A good machine can cost $15,000; maybe a big feedlot can afford one."

I am sure there are other examples of K-State research that is clearly against the Hatch Act mandate. Such research, conducted at a publicly funded institution, justifies the administration's concerns over getting sued and the AAM's laudable goal of bringing attention to the research directions of K-State.

Maybe a suit is not the best way to do this, but without a K-State sponsored dialogue (conference, symposium, representation of small- and medium-sized farmers in the research decision-making process, etc.) on the role of publicly funded institutions in technology development (a form of social planning), maybe a suit is the only way that frustrated farmers can get K-State's attention.

Chamber of Commerce attracts businesses

By Vera McMinimy
Collegian Reporter

Much of the new Colony Square building on Poyntz Avenue is not finished. The presence of cement floors, construction workers and signs announces the home of future businesses. But one office already has fresh paint, new carpet and a steady stream of people — the office of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce.

"The chamber is really to business exactly what a union is to labor," said William Boyd, president of the Chamber of Commerce. "It has responsibilities to businesses for legislation, politics, marketing the community and city planning. It is the spokesman for business.

"Our overall product is a business climate, and it is our job to maintain a favorable business climate," he said.

Boyd said a merchant on Poyntz Avenue with the best products and service could not be successful if the streets were dirty and had potholes, parking spaces were minimal, and taxes were high.

"If you put all businesses together, you can be exceedingly effective on the local and state level," he said.

The Manhattan chamber is 71 years old. Last year, membership exceeded 800 for the first time.

Member businesses pay a base fee of $150 to join the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce. Retail and industry businesses pay an additional $10 for each employee, and banks and financial institutions pay an additional fee based on their deposits.

Non-profit organizations, government agencies, unions and individuals have civic memberships that cost $60. Retired business people, University personnel, and organizations such as the Manhattan Optimist Club, the Manhattan Arts Council, Manhattan Christian College and some area churches have civic memberships, Boyd said.

"It is very unusual for churches to join chambers," he said. "It comes from Manhattan being a consensus community without a lot of dogfighting."

Manhattan has traditionally had a strong chamber of commerce because of strong volunteer leadership and a good professional staff, Boyd said.

Although the Chamber of Commerce provides services to area businesses, members also give time to the chamber, he said.

"Most of the people are active on committees and spend endless hours working," Boyd said. "They're not trying to line their own pockets but are working strictly for the benefit of the community.

He said some individuals — such as bankers, and real estate and retail people — benefit directly when people come to town. But others who also contribute work to the chamber "don't make a nickel," he said.

Volunteers serve on the chamber's 19 committees, many of which have up to six subcommittees. Long-term standing committees include economic development and university relations. Each year, special task forces handle new issues.

Gary Boomer, a certified public accountant with Varney Mills Rogers Burnett & Associates, is chairman of the Chamber of Commerce. He took office in January after spending five years on the chamber's board of directors.

The chamber has a budget of about $600,000 a year, Boomer said. The money is evenly divided into three categories: economic development, the convention and visitors bureau, and the chamber's operating budget.

Boomer considers economic development to be one of the most important areas because its purpose is to attract and recruit new businesses and encourage expansion of existing ones.

There are many misconceptions about economic development, Boyd said.

"The purpose of it is to increase the amount of dollars in the community, and not to bring in a new shoe store to compete with the other shoe stores in town," he said. "It is bringing in an employer who would be based here but sells the bulk of goods or services somewhere else.

"Then you can justify having the second shoe store without hurting the first shoe store," Boyd said.

Last year, the chamber conducted a study to determine 13 characteristics of Manhattan, including transportation and the availability of labor. These characteristics were then matched against a list of 30,000 companies known to be considering expansion.

From this matching, a list of 9,100 companies seeking characteristics of the like which Manhattan can offer were contacted, Boyd said. Eleven of those companies showed interest and are presently in negotiations.

One industrial company is in final negotiations and has declared that it will open a plant in Manhattan, Boyd said. He expects the company to make a public announcement within 30 days. The company would first employ about 75 people and could potentially employ about 150.

"It's a very major company, and it's exciting having this plant because it's a company that has many divisions and products," he said. "It's the kind of company you want to get in bed with because there's always the potential for getting more business from them."

Most companies are very secretive about their identity when considering expanding into a new city, Boyd said. They may use a consultant or a company representative who uses a home address and telephone number.

However, before any company will consider Manhattan, there first must be a place for the company to move to, Boyd said.

Manhattan has available industrial sites because Manhattan was prepared for growth, he said.

Boomer said the chamber "sells" companies considering locating in Manhattan on the quality of life in Manhattan, the educational opportunities, the recreation and the work ethic of Kansas people.

The most recently acquired business is Idleman Telemarketing, he said. It will begin operations in about 45 days and will employ about 100 people, mostly part-time.

Incentive packages for new business recruitment are put together by the chamber and are the result of cooperation between the City of Manhattan, the State of Kansas and the industrial park, Boomer said.

The chamber also works to market the land at a reasonable rate and on occasion uses public money for site development and assists with obtaining funds for the development, he said.

Some of Manhattan's limitations hamper recruitment of new businesses, Boyd said. These limitations include Manhattan's isolated location and poor transportation into the city, such as the "two-lane country road" and the airport's "shed-type" terminal, he said.

Another problem is the lack of skilled labor, such as electricians and machinists, he said.

Recruitment of a Fortune 200 company fell through when a labor study revealed Manhattan lacked the necessary skilled and semi-skilled labor. The company would have employed about 300 people.

"Manhattan will compete better as we move further into a service economy, and companies need to employ computer operators, researchers and statisticians," Boyd said. "We'd do very well because of the influence of KSU and the education level of the community.

"We will try to seek out companies that benefit from an educated work force," Boyd said.

Boomer said the chamber is also interested in encouraging the expansion of established Manhattan businesses.

"The reason we're so interested in local businesses is that if 10 businesses increase 10 jobs, then there are 100 new jobs — the same as Idleman (Telemarketing)," he said.

The Chamber of Commerce also establishes priorities each year.

Development of a regional airport is the main priority for 1988. Another priority is the support of the Margin of Excellence program.

The chamber is also against the proposed closed-admissions policy

New tax laws require study by investors

Commentary

STEPHEN P. HARRISON
Business Columnist

Entire books have been dedicated to the Tax Reform Act of 1986 and what it means to us as taxpayers. Unfortunately, this information often makes for dry but necessary reading. Anyone who invests in the stock market, whether it be in mutual funds, individual securities or other products, should take time to learn about the new tax laws.

A significant feature of the Tax Reform Act was to strengthen the alternate minimum tax (AMT). This tax is designed to reduce the number of tax shelters that can be used by high-income taxpayers. Because AMT is so complicated, it should be computed only by a tax professional, but basically, here's how it works.

Tax preference items are added to the taxpayer's regular taxable income to obtain a new taxable income figure. This figure is then multiplied by the AMT rate, 21 percent, and the taxpayer pays the larger of either the AMT or the regular income tax.

Tax preference items include interest from some private activities bonds, certain types of depreciation, intangible drilling costs, certain stock options, most itemized deductions and a list of others. A tax preparer will have the complete list. On a more positive note, however, anyone who has an AMT income less than $150,000 merits a $40,000 exclusion of preference items.

More taxpayers will need to calculate AMT this tax season, so if there's any doubt whether or not you should calculate AMT, don't guess. Seek the advice of a professional.

Another area affected by the Tax Reform Act is cost basis. Although cost basis may confuse some taxpayers, the confusion can be lessened by simply substituting the phrase "cost for tax purposes" with "cost basis." In other words, cost basis is simply the cost you must claim on an individual security or mutual fund when paying income taxes. Of course, you must calculate the cost basis of all individual securities and mutual funds when they are sold.

If a security has been acquired through inheritance, the cost basis will be the value of the security listed on the estate tax return. If no estate return was filed, you should use the market value of the security on the date of death of the person from whom you inherited the security. Along those same lines, any security received as a gift generally maintains the same cost basis as it held for the donor.

If the same security — AT&T stock, for example — is purchased on different days, the taxpayer has several options. If clients hold the securities themselves and can identify the cost of each certificate, they may choose the cost basis of the security by carefully selecting which certificate to sell. This method is called specific identification.

If the security is held by a brokerage house, clients may still use the specific identification method by specifying to the broker which security to sell, either by cost or purchase date. This order must then be confirmed by the firm, using the special instructions on the confirmation. If clients don't specify which security to sell, the first security is sold. This is called first in, first out.

Unfortunately, mutual fund owners who do not take possession of their shares are unable to use specific identification because mutual fund companies do not usually confirm

William Boyd, president of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, has been at the job for one year after coming from San Francisco. He works to bring new business to the Manhattan area and enhance the city's business potential.

Chamber's president likes Manhattan

By Susan Rouse
Collegian Reporter

A yearning for his native Midwest and a "close" community where his children could be raised were strong attractions that lured Manhattan Chamber of Commerce president William Boyd away from his job as general manager of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce.

"I love San Francisco, but I wanted to raise two young children in a close, caring community — one that focuses on neighbors and community," Boyd said.

Boyd has been satisfied with his decision to move.

"I enjoy being here. Manhattan wants economic development, and for me, it is nice to do things on a more human scale than in San Francisco. In Manhattan, I complete things that I can touch and see," he said.

When he first started in San Francisco, all business transactions were done in a very "genteel" way, he said. When he left, nothing was done without a lawyer being present.

Boyd, a native of St. Louis and a graduate of Southwest Missouri State University, said he was lonesome for the Midwest — a fact that aided his decision to leave San Francisco one year ago.

"We've (Manhattan) had a most interesting year," he said.

The Chamber of Commerce moved to its new headquarters in February and experienced a 30 percent increase in its budget. Last year the membership of the chamber grew to more than 800 members.

Boyd said next year promises to be just as interesting.

One of the things Boyd said he wants is for Manhattan to have the credentials of a city instead of a town.

"We think like a city and act like one, but we don't have the credentials," he said.

His plans include making all roads that lead into Manhattan into four-lane highways, including K-177 from Interstate 70 to the south and K-18 from I-70 to the west.

Another plan is for airport improvements that will increase the airport's size and the number of flights coming into and leaving Manhattan.

Boyd wants to attract companies that will help Manhattan's economic development.

"I can't bring in someone who

Cadets experience first air force flight

Air refueling part of students' training

While some students were sleeping in on their first day of spring break, nine K-State Air Force Reserved Officer Training Corps cadets were driving to Forbes Field in Topeka to meet the Kansas Coyotes.

The Coyotes, comprises the 117th Air refueling Squadron of the Air National Guard, introduced the cadets to air refueling techniques as part of their training.

For most of the cadets, the mission was their first experience of flying in an Air Force plane.

"It was neat. However, I'm a little biased," said cadet Kim Ready, freshman in early childhood education. "I love flying. I've always wanted to be a pilot."

The crew of Tempo-41, the 190th air refueling group and a section of the Coyotes, sponsored the cadets on the orientation flight. The cadets were briefed about the mission and what would be accomplished during the flight.

During their briefing, the cadets were told about the KC-135 plane in which they would be flying. Compared to its commercial counterpart, a Boeing 707, the cadets were told that the KC-135 is noisier, bumpier and not as well pressurized.

Because of these differences, the passengers were issued an emergency oxygen mask and a set of earplugs.

Following the briefing, the cadets boarded the craft. There they prepared for the flight by fastening seat belts and inserting hearing protection.

Rather than try to battle the engine noise while talking, cadet Max Divine, freshman in mechanical engineering, and Ready practiced using sign language to communicate.

"I was teaching him some basics," Ready said.

The original mission called for a three-hour flight to Nebraska. There they would circle while waiting to refuel three Air National Guard A-7 fighter jets.

Due to severe weather in Iowa, however, the fighter jets were grounded and the original mission was cancelled.

A second rendezvous was planned with an EC-135 out of Offutt Air Force Base in Omaha. The EC-135 is an airborne command center that is in flight 24 hours a day.

On the way to Nebraska, cadets spent time taking individual turns manuevering the boom pod — refueling boom — at the rear of the plane.

Controlled by a joystick, the refueling boom is similar to a video game, said Staff Sgt. Parker Groves.

While some cadets were operating the boom pod, others ventured into the cockpit area to talk to the crew.

During the flight, cadets were allowed to move around and explore the airplane. Most of them took the time to look out of the plane's windows from an altitude of 27,000 feet.

Thirty minutes into the flight, contact was made with the EC-135 pilot. The cadets crowded around the pod area trying to watch the approaching jet.

Once the EC-135 was within range, Groves guided the boom into its receptacle.

The cadets took turns watching the jet take on 15,000 pounds of the 100,000 pounds of fuel carried aboard the KC-135. Eight minutes later, the connection broke away and the EC-135 departed.

Had the KC-135 refueled a fighter jet, the process would have been more visual, Groves said.

"The fighters are usually faster and take a fighter turn," he said. The pilots like to fly in formation during the process.

When cadet Michael Wasylk, freshman undecided, asked where they were at, Ready said: "I don't see any billboard signs up here."

In a random drawing, cadet Todd McMurry, freshman in environmental design, was chosen to sit in the "jump seat" and observe the crew landing the craft.

"It was different when they were landing," McMurry said. "The plane went into some really thick clouds. We were flying blind for about 30 seconds."

Maj. Richard Brown, professor of areospace studies, said the mission was intended to introduce the cadets to the hard work and professionalism of the Air National Guard.

Big Eight proving itself in tournament of upsets

Commentary

MIKE ROUSE
Sports Writer

Way to go Big Eight! The Conference entered five of its eight teams in the NCAA basketball championships.

K-State, Kansas, Iowa State, Missouri and Oklahoma all received bids to the tournament. These teams were definitely scattered throughout the country, playing first- and second-round games at regional sites in South Bend, Ind., Lincoln, Neb., Hartford, Conn., Chapel Hill, N.C. and Atlanta.

Because of a tournament rule saying that no teams in the same conference may play each other until the finals of the regional, teams are sent every which way. That might explain why North Carolina was sent to the West regional and California-Santa Barbara was sent to the Southeast regional.

K-State, KU and Oklahoma survived the first round of play, while Missouri was beaten by a good Rhode Island team. Derrick Chievous had 35 points in the Tigers' losing cause. And Iowa State, despite Lafester Rhodes's 34 points, was defeated by Georgia Tech.

As the second round got under way Saturday, the Big Eight was looking good. K-State disposed of the DePaul Blue Demons and Oklahoma beat Auburn. 'Cat guard Will Scott shot 7-of-8 from 3-point range for a single game record. Scott finished with 23 points. KU came back from behind and squeezed by Cinderella team Murray State Sunday. The conference thus advances all three teams to the semifinals of their region.

The 1988 tournament has been no different from any other NCAA tournament year — upsets have occurred. The defending national champions, the Indiana Hoosiers, were upset by 13th-seeded Richmond in first-round play. The Spiders then upset Georgia Tech on Sunday. They are now in the unique position of being the lowest-seeded team left in the tournament.

Rhode Island upset last year's runner-up, Syracuse, Saturday. Vanderbilt upset Pittsburgh, who was the second seed in the Midwest region Sunday. How about UNLV? With the Runnin' Rebels being defeated Sunday by Iowa, the last of the Final Four teams of a year ago were eliminated. Providence, the other Final Four team from last year, was not chosen as one of the 64-team tournament's entries this year.

With Cinderella teams popping up, people are starting to think about the "what ifs" of the tournament. What if Oklahoma and Loyola-Marymount would have played for the national championship? Would the scoreboard have ever stopped for a second? What if Indiana's Bobby Knight and LSU's Dale Brown would have coached against each other? Would there have been a boxing match to go along with the game? What if K-State and Arizona (the top two teams with the highest 3-point field goal percentage) played against each other? Would a record be set for the most 3-pointers made in one game? What if K-State, Kentucky, Arizona, and Villanova all made it to the final four? Each team has a Wildcat as its mascot.

The Big Eight has made a name for itself in the tournament. Only one other conference — the Big Ten — equals the Big Eight's total of three entries left in the competition. The Big East Conference started the tournament with six teams, and now, Villanova is its only representative. Their is a monetary angle on all this excitement too. For each win so far in the tournament, each team received $200,000, which is split up among the conference's schools. That is a lot of money going to each team in the Big Eight.

K-State will have a chance to end one of the Big Ten team's season when they play Purdue Friday. The Boilermakers soundly defeated the 'Cats in January. KU will also play Vanderbilt Friday, while Oklahoma will play Louisville Thursday.

The Big Eight has proven it is a tough conference over the years. With solid play (and maybe a little luck), the conference can be like some others in the past and have two teams in Kansas City when the Final Four rolls around.

Reserve adjusts to new role

Diggins makes difference

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Think of K-State reserve guard/forward Carlos Diggins as a partially opened Christmas present. After seeing limited action this season, K-State coach Lon Kruger said fans have had only a glimpse of what Diggins could mean to Wildcat basketball in the future.

"Obviously, we're still thinking about this season, but next year Carlos will play an important role in how well the team responds to losing four senior starters," Kruger said.

Diggins, a 6-foot-4, 200-pound junior transfer from Butler County Community College in El Dorado, has accepted his reserve role after being named one of the top 10 junior college players in the nation last year by The Sporting News.

When one plays behind honorable mention All-American Mitch Richmond, one can expect some serious pine time.

"I'm just sitting on the bench waiting for my number to be called. As long as we're winning, and Mitch is having good games, I'm all for that," said Diggins, who had a homecoming of sorts over the weekend, as the 'Cats played their first and second rounds of the NCAA Tournament in his hometown of Southbend, Ind.

"We don't lose much, if any, when Carlos comes in," Kruger added. "It's just that he is playing behind one of the premier players in the country. Carlos could start for a lot of other teams."

When the regular season concluded, Diggins averaged 9.7 minutes, 2.1 points and 1.3 rebounds per game — quite a change from his Butler County days where his scoring average was well into double figures.

"There's a big difference between juco and Division I. You have to be more mentally prepared. You have to become a complete player here," Diggins said.

"In juco I could shoot the shot, but I didn't necessarily have to shoot it too quickly because there weren't that many people who were going to block it. Now I have to shoot it a lot quicker, get a quicker release and my ball-handling skills have to be a lot better."

Diggins also had to adjust to the slower style of play Kruger prefers after "running and gunning" in his Clay (Ind.) High School days.

"That's all we did on the playground and in high school. I think I've adapted to the slow-down play. I'm really not used to it quite yet, but you really almost have to slow down to be in control on this level," Diggins said.

As difficult as these transitions may appear, the change has been a relatively smooth one for Diggins because of the similarities between K-State and Butler County.

"In terms of the people, they're almost the same — very friendly. My freshman year (at Butler), the team was a big family. That's how it is here. The people just love the athletes at both schools. It's just that (at K-State), it can't get anything but better," Diggins said.

File/Brad Fanshier
Wildcat reserve guard/forward Carlos Diggins will play an important role next season after the team loses four starters from this year's line up.

Diggins turned down offers from Oklahoma, Houston and Michigan to sign with K-State. In his own words, it was "a hell of a decision." The 'Cats are 24-8 overall, placed second in the Big Eight standings and the conference's postseason tournament, and are heading for Pontiac, Mich., this week for the NCAA Midwest Regional semifinals.

Still, Diggins can't help but think about tomorrow.

"I don't think I can do as much as Mitch, but with the players we have coming in, I don't feel that I have to. I just know that I have to come in and play a lot harder and make better decisions than I did this year," Diggins said. "I can't help but look forward to next season."

Royals extend winning streak

By The Associated Press

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Thad Bosley had three hits and drove in three runs, leading Kansas City to a 5-3 victory Monday over the St. Louis Cardinals that stretched the Royals' exhibition winning streak to eight games.

Bosley's third hit, an eighth-inning single, drove in two runs to snap a 3-3 tie. It gave the victory to relief pitcher Bud Black. The hit off loser Randy O'Neal followed singles by Frank White and Bo Jackson and a sacrifice bunt.

Bosley also doubled in the fifth inning and had an RBI single in the sixth. Jackson had three hits for Kansas City and scored twice in helping the Royals overcome a 3-0 deficit.

The loss dropped St. Louis' spring record to 8-8 as the Royals were improving to 13-6.

Golfers in 17th place at Baylor

K-State's men's golf team finds itself in a three-way tie for 17th among 24 teams after the first day of the Baylor Invitational being contested in Waco, Texas at the Par 72, 7,123-yard Cottonwood Creek Golf Course.

The Wildcats carded an 18-hole team score of 315 to join Wichita State and Texas Lutheran at that total. Abilene Christian and Southwest Texas State share the lead in the team standings going into today's final round with 298 scores.

Individually for K-State, Jeff Sedorcek turned in the top score with a 75. He was followed by Troy Keller at 79, Daran Neuschafer 80 and John Shields and Chris Gomez who both shot 81's.

Leading the race for medalist honors after the first round is Richard Bachwell of Texas Wesleyan who fired a three-under par 69.

The final round of 18 holes will get underway this morning.

Crew teams third in regatta

K-State crew coach Don Rose is looking for revenge against the University of Kansas after the Jayhawks won the men's and women's varsity-eight races Saturday at the sixth annual Heart of Texas Regatta held on Town Lake in Austin, Texas.

"The next race out, we're going to look KU in the eye. It's going to be a great race," Rose said.

K-State placed third in both the men's and women's varsity-eight races. KU won the men's race with a course record of 3:17.52 and Tulane finished second with 3:17.54. The Wildcats, defending champions in this event, missed the silver medal by .02 seconds, finishing at 3:17.56.

The Jayhawks won the women's race in 4:14.8, whipping second-place Tulane by more than 12 seconds. K-State finished third at 4:33.7.

Misfortune struck the Manhattan High School girls' squad as one of the rowers' sliding seats broke.

"She rowed the entire race with just her back and arms. That really cost us," Rose said.

Manhattan finished third at 4:46.6 in the women's novice lightweight-eight race. KU won it in 4:34.9, and Notre Dame's "B" team placed second.

Purdue taking momentum to Pontiac

By The Associated Press

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Troy Lewis, Purdue's scoring leader and the fourth Boilermaker to reach 2,000 career points, doesn't expect an easy rematch with K-State on Friday night.

The No. 3-ranked Boilermakers pasted K-State 101-72 in December, the first time since 1969 that an opponent had scored 100 points against the Wildcats. They'll play again in the NCAA Midwest Regional semifinals at the Pontiac, Mich. Silverdome.

"We've got momentum," said the 6-foot-4 Lewis, a senior who raised his career total to 2,019 with 22 points in a 100-73 victory over Memphis State in a second-round game on Saturday.

"But like Coach (Gene) Keady said, just because we blow a team out doesn't mean we can go to Pontiac and do the same thing."

Purdue already has won a school-record 29 games against only three losses this season. The regional assignment also marks the first time since 1980 — when Purdue reached the Final Four at Indianapolis under former coach Lee Rose — that the Boilermakers have advanced past the second round of the tourney.

"When you get over the hump, then you've got to keep going," Lewis said. "We just have to keep going. In 10 years, nobody will want to talk to you about how many points you scored; they want to talk about how many games you won."

20th-ranked K-State advanced to the rematch with Purdue by beating DePaul, 66-58, in the other second-round game Saturday at South Bend. The Wildcats raised their record to 24-8. Vanderbilt plays Kansas in the other Regional semifinal at Pontiac on Friday.

"It's a different situation now, so we'll treat it differently," said Keady, a K-State grad. "They came in here (at Purdue) not knowing what to expect and got into kind of a hornet's nest in Mackey Arena.

"But after that game they really got better. They went back and regrouped and became a tremendous team. They're well-balanced, well-coached and do a tremendous job of getting the ball to (6-5 senior forward Mitch) Richmond.

"This time it ought to be a very close game," Keady said.

Richmond had only 14 points in the first game against Purdue — nine under his season average.

"It's the kids' character, but there hasn't really been any pressure," Keady said of Purdue's reaching the Regional semifinals for the first time since he has been the coach. "I think we have the attitude we're going to try our best, and if it doesn't work out for us, we're going to walk away from it and say, 'Hey, we gave it our best shot.' I haven't sensed any pressure at all."

K-State Coach Lon Kruger said the rematch with Purdue "will be a challenge, but we're looking forward to it."

"Purdue is big, they're strong, they shoot the ball well, they have outstanding quickness and they play a very physical game," Kruger said. "I'm not sure what came out of that first meeting (in December). Purdue kicked us real good. Hopefully, now we're playing a little bit differently than we were at that time."

Arizona 'on a mission' in championships

By The Associated Press

While some coaches sound apprehensive of their next opponent in the NCAA basketball tournament, Arizona Coach Lute Olson is brimming with confidence.

"This team has been on a mission all year," Olson said of his Pacific 10 champions who boast a 33-2 record. "They want to make a statement. We're really pleased with the way we played, but Friday, we'll play better. This team has not had a lull."

All-American forward Sean Elliott of the Wildcats said: "It doesn't matter who we play. Bring on whoever's next."

Iowa, where Olson coached before moving to Arizona in 1983-84, is the next opponent for the Wildcats Friday in a West Regional semifinal at Seattle. The Hawkeyes, seeded fifth and ranked 17th nationally, are 24-9, including a loss to Arizona this season.

Iowa coach Tom Davis, whose team lost at home to Arizona 66-59 Dec. 12, didn't sound confident looking toward the Wildcats after his Hawkeyes routed 12th-ranked Nevada-Las Vegas 104-86 Sunday.

"We'll have to play our best to beat them and maybe that won't be enough," Davis said. "Maybe they're the best team in the country."

North Carolina, which knocked out Michigan in the second round last year, will try and do it again this year.

The Wolverines boast a front line of 6-foot-7, 6-9 and 6-10 with Glen Rice, Loy Vaught and Mills, which is averaging 68 percent from the field and averaging 55 points in tourney wins over Boise State and Florida.

Vanderbilt, the No. 7 seed which upset eighth-ranked Pittsburgh in overtime Sunday while 7-foot center Will Perdue was on the sidelines with five fouls, proved it's not a one-man team.

"We're a basketball team, not a one-man show," Perdue said.

Kansas, the No. 6 seed, will be relying on its one-man show against the Commodores — Danny Manning, who scored eight of the Jayhawks' last 10 points as Kansas got by Murray State.

Temple puts its 17-game winning streak on the line against the surprising Richmond Spiders, which beat 1987 NCAA champion Indiana and Georgia Tech.

"This is like a dream," Richmond point guard Ken Atkinson said. "We're going to keep riding it."

Rhode Island, the No. 11 seed which eliminated Missouri and Syracuse, will be facing a No. 2 seed in Duke, the Atlantic Coast Conference

Living it up

A group of friends enjoys Monday afternoon's mild weather by sitting on a rooftop, talking and catching some rays near Fremont and 8th streets. Today's temperatures are expected to be in the 80s throughout most of the state.

Democrats receive no endorsements

By The Associated Press

Democrats Albert Gore Jr. and Richard Gephardt campaigned in the glow of popular non-candidates Monday — Gore with Mario Cuomo and Gephardt with Lee Iacocca — but came away without endorsements. Republican George Bush touted his endorsement by New Jersey Gov. Thomas H. Kean.

Bush, meanwhile, gave out another kind of endorsement — lending his support to President Reagan's veto of a major civil rights bill. Congress was poised to override the veto today.

"The legislation ... is imperfect and the imperfections should be corrected," he told a group of black supporters in Washington. "I'm not going to start doing now what I haven't been doing for seven years, finding differences with the president, for whom I have great respect."

Bush said, however, that he supported the idea that the federal government should require that organizations that get tax dollars comply with civil rights laws.

Officials in Puerto Rico continued to tally the results of Sunday's primaries, in which Bush rolled up another victory over Bob Dole and Jesse Jackson and Michael Dukakis added to their Democratic totals.

While Bush attended a New Jersey rally with Kean, Republican rival Dole said in Wisconsin that that was the state where he was trying to "get back in the race."

Democratic candidates were focusing on Michigan, where Saturday's caucuses are the next big event after weekend contests in Kansas, Texas and Puerto Rico that helped Dukakis and Jackson.

Gephardt and Gore won kind words but no endorsement in meetings with Chrysler Corp. chairman Iacocca and New York Gov. Cuomo.

Wisconsin's primary 10 days later is shaping up as a further Democratic battleground, two weeks before the big New York primary April 19.

Continuing Education splits conferences

By Melinda Tiemeyer
Collegian Reporter

Position changes within the Division of Continuing Education will focus attention on the conferences division, said Don Gronau, acting director of conferences.

Gronau said there will not be any structure changes taking place within Continuing Education, and that duties and activities will remain the same.

"The process will define national conferences as a separate area," Gronau said. "Before, local and national conferences were all part of the same conference division."

The national conferences division serves a national audience and deals with issues in higher education.

The local conferences division helps faculty members get educational programs out to audiences in other areas. This is done through workshops, seminars and conferences, Gronau said. The conferences division may even assist in the promotional aspects of a program by helping develop brochures and advertising.

The split between the two programs stems from normal position changes within Continuing Education, said LaVerne Lindsey, assistant provost for Continuing Education.

"Self-supporting programs are very vulnerable and can get into financial trouble in a hurry," Lindsey said. "From time to time we make little shifts in this basic structure in order to protect programs."

Because of the rapid growth of the Division of Continuing Education, Bobbie Flaherty, director of national conferences, is now associate director in order to assist Lindsey with the division.

"That position was needed. No one was added on the staff to do that," Lindsey said.

Because Flaherty is a nationally recognized expert on national conferences, Lindsey moved the program along with Flaherty.

"We brought it with the person so we can keep the program stable," she said.

As a result, Gronau will now be in charge of handling local conferences.

The split of local and national conferencing will allow more concentration by each section on its respective departments.

"The position changes will allow us to focus more on the local aspect of the University. We'll be able to give the faculty stronger support and it will give us greater reach to more audiences," Gronau said.

"The changes made will allow us to focus on division issues and expand national conferencing for the entire University," Flaherty said.

Flaherty and Gronau agree that the stronger definition between the two will expand the public's awareness.

To compute the cost basis of mutual funds, investors need to know how much cash they've invested in the mutual fund and the value of any dividends re-invested. This information is provided in the client's year-end mutual fund statement for each year he or she owns the mutual fund.

Supreme Court to review child abuse issue

Brain damaged boy's case to be heard

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court agreed Monday to decide whether abused children may sue public officials for failing to protect them from their parents.

The justices said they will hear an appeal on behalf of a Wisconsin boy who suffered serious and permanent brain damage from beatings by his father. Social workers and officials are accused of gross negligence in ignoring evidence the boy was being brutally victimized.

The court's study of the case, expected to yield a ruling sometime in 1989, comes amid growing concern nationwide over child abuse.

In other actions, the court:

■ Left intact a ruling that forces school officials in New Mexico to defend themselves at trial against allegations they violated a young girl's constitutional rights by paddling her.

■ Left intact a federal law requiring broadcasters to give equal time to opposing candidates for public office.

■ Agreed to consider killing a key provision of a law designed to promote competitive bidding on government contracts. At issue is the proper boundary between presidential and congressional power.

■ Agreed to decide in a case from Texas whether states may impose sales taxes on most books, newspapers and magazines while exempting religious publications.

■ Refused to let states and local governments regulate the prices most of the nation's cable television operators charge for basic service.

In the child-abuse case, the court will consider reinstating a suit against the Winnebago County, Wis., Department of Social Services and two of its employees.

The agency was accused of violating the rights of Joshua DeShaney because it failed to rescue him from his father's beatings. The department was charged with knowing about the beatings since 1983 when Joshua was four.

He has been institutionalized since 1984, suffering from injuries that destroyed half his brain and left him profoundly retarded.

The boy's father, Randy DeShaney, since has been convicted of child abuse and sentenced to two years to four years in prison.

A social worker, Ann Kemmeter, was assigned to the DeShaney case in 1983 after Joshua was brought to a hospital with various cuts and bruises.

Kemmeter visited the DeShaney home several times but allegedly failed to take any steps to remove him from the home or protect him.

DeShaney's ex-wife, Melody, sued the social services officials on grounds they violated the child's constitutional right not to be deprived of liberty without due process.

DeShaney was divorced from her husband and living in Cheyenne, Wyo., when she was informed her son had suffered serious brain damage. DeShaney had custody of his son.

continue to have it, as long as he is able to pay them somehow," Hajda said. "It is difficult to see the upheaval of bureaucracy as long as he has the means to pay them."

Jerry Rosenberg, assistant professor of political science, said controlling the flow of currency into Panama could be an effective way of causing havoc there.

The United States' withholding of tolls paid on the Panama Canal is its most important sanction against Panama because of the currency it generates for the country, Rosenberg said.

From a foreign policy standpoint, the United States must be careful not to perpetuate an image of "big brotherism," he said.

"If we're seen by the Third World as America changing a government it doesn't like, we're going to get a black eye there, because we'll be perpetuating the idea of the 'gringo' who uses his power to manipulate," Rosenberg said.

The transportation of drugs is another area which Hajda said the Panamanian government needs to control.

"We're making the observation that what we're talking about is a situation where high-placed government officials are involved in an international drug operation," Hajda said. "Noriega has been accused of permitting Panama to be used as a base for this operation."

The United States should take stronger action against these actions at all levels, he said. This includes harsher punishments for those found guilty of transporting drugs.

Panama

"We believe the offer is little more than one, a ploy to attempt to legitimize the illegal Solis Palma regime by calling for negotiations between it and opposition groups, and two, an effort on the part of Noriega to maintain direct or indirect control of the Panamanian Defense Forces.

"We stand by our previous view that Noriega should go, and the sooner the better for Panama."

Noriega is under indictment on drug charges in Florida and the United States has virtually dried up the flow of money to Panama, which uses the U.S. dollar as its currency, in the effort to force him out.

He put down a coup attempt by dissident officers last week.

A highway improvement program is one of the chamber's concerns. The program supports the construction of a four-lane highway from Interstate 70 to Manhattan and expansion of Seth Childs Road to a four-lane.

In the area of economic development, a priority is the Bluemont Consortium. The consortium is a joint effort by the City of Manhattan, Riley County, K-State, the KSU Foundation and the Chamber of Commerce to establish a research campus and light-industrial park. The development would include single- and multi-family residences, a retirement community, recreation areas and a convention center.

The proposed development would be west of Manhattan, and the projected cost is $100 million to $200 million.

"The Chamber of Commerce views the University as a very important partner, and it's one of Manhattan's biggest industries, if not the biggest," Boomer said.

Boomer said he believes one of the chamber's most important achievements has been the development of an open line of communication and the partnership between public and private entities.

tournament champion which ousted Boston University and Southern Methodist.

Louisville, which won NCAA titles in 1980 and 1986, has gotten steady play in the tournament from its backcourt of sophomore Keith Williams and LaBradford Smith and center Pervis Ellison, the Final Four MVP in 1986.

Coach Denny Crum's Cardinals go against a high-scoring Oklahoma team, which is averaging 104.6 points per game and has the tourney's leading scorer so far, Stacey King with 60 points.

A Letter To President Wefald:

Dear President Wefald,

We are approaching you because you have voiced your appreciation of the KSU Child Care Cooperative, and have been part of establishing it as a solid program whose quality K-State can take pride in. The days of hoping user fees can be adequate to fund this program are past. The University's lack of further financial commitment concerns us deeply. It will result in the end of outstanding childcare at KSU. Quality childcare is a necessity, not a luxury. We earnestly urge you to carefully consider the proposal submitted to you by the Coop board in January, in light of the following concerns:

1. Higher user fees will go into effect June 1, 1988. The new rates will be prohibitive for nearly all students and most young faculty and staff. Some of our families are forced to spend 20% to 30% of their income for childcare and this will increase dramatically when the new fee schedule is implemented.
2. Our Coop teachers' salaries are below the national poverty level for a family of two. Teachers with bachelors degrees are paid at a rate lower than that of the lowest paid personnel at KSU who have no high school degree and no job-related experience. Like most child care centers, ours is staffed primarily by women; continuing low salaries perpetuates exploitation.
3. Local childcare facilities will be unable to absorb a sudden influx of 200 children if the Coop closes. This will thoroughly disrupt all university activities of the involved students, staff and faculty.

We need your support now. As a first step, please assume the $27,600 in annual rent and utilities charged to the Coop by the University. The KSU Child Care Cooperative is the true "Margin of Excellence." It demonstrates a special level of quality, service and concern for our students, staff and faculty. We must additionally have from you an immediate and strong commitment for the full range of support outlined in our January proposal.

University may pay $700,000 in cleanup of Florida dumpsite

By Paula Selby
Staff Writer

The possibility that carcinogenic transformers removed from K-State six years ago may have ended up in a waste site in northern Florida could cost the University $700,000.

American Electric Corp. of Jacksonville, Fla., was hired by the University to remove transformers containing a carcinogen — PCBs, polychlorinated bi-phenyl compounds — from campus in 1982. Those transformers may have been taken to the Yellow Water Road waste site.

George Miller, K-State vice president for administration and finance, said the University received a form letter Feb. 29 from the Environmental Protection Agency regarding the cleanup of the dumpsite which is near Jacksonville.

"K-State has been working carefully under EPA guidelines to remove all PCB-contaminated containers from campus," Miller said. "These were just three of a total of 31 transformers to have been removed. All are gone now."

K-State is one of possibly hundreds of businesses, institutions and government entities to receive the letter requesting each of them to pay $700,000 to fund the site's cleanup.

The University "made a prompt inquiry" in response to the letter, said Dorothy Thompson, University attorney.

The University's inquiry asked the EPA to supply further information on the dumpsite, Miller said. It also requested a list of other possible entities that could be responsible for

Occupants escape injury

Two women escaped serious injury Tuesday when the car in which they were riding struck a culvert, flipped and landed on its top in a yard three miles east of Manhattan on U.S. 24.

Kansas Highway Patrol officers said the accident occurred at about 5:25 p.m. when the driver of the eastbound Ford LTD apparently swerved to avoid a vehicle that pulled out in front of her.

The driver, Dorothy Seele of rural Belvue, and her passenger, Theresa Breymeyer of Wamego, were in good condition after a crowbar was used to pry open the car door to let them out.

D.L. Redding watched the car out his office window at 8940 E. Highway 24 as it flipped over in his front yard.

"It hit the west culvert, flipped end over end, then landed on its top," Redding said. "I really hesitated to go out there, because I thought somebody would be dead."

Redding's wife, Virgie, said though she was shocked the car crashed in her yard, she wasn't surprised an accident occurred.

"It's really dangerous here," she

Senate committee backs MOE request

From Staff and Wire Reports

The Senate Ways and Means Committee has endorsed a proposal to provide State Board of Regents universities with all the money they requested in their Margin of Excellence proposal.

A University official said the committee's endorsement could lead to placing K-State's faculty salaries on a par with its peer institutions.

Charles Reagan, assistant to President Jon Wefald, said the University was "very pleased" with the Senate committee vote.

The committee endorsed the full Margin of Excellence proposal on Monday, and Sen. Wint Winter Jr., R-Lawrence, a committee member, said Tuesday he expects the full Senate to accept the committee's recommendations.

Reagan said that with the committee's endorsement, it appears the Senate is joining the House in supporting the full amount requested by the regents for increases in teaching and non-teaching faculty salaries.

K-State may receive $304,000/Page 3

If the Senate approves the measure, Reagan said it would place K-State's faculty salaries on average with its peers.

Without the three-year regents program to upgrade salaries, he said, "we'll be losing our best faculty."

"It's good news," Reagan said.

The House approved a regents appropriations bill that would provide money only to the faculty salary portion of the Margin request, or

Senate votes to override civil rights bill veto

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congress overrode President Reagan's veto of a major civil rights bill Tuesday, ending a four-year battle to restore broad protection for women, minorities, the elderly and the handicapped.

A 73-24 vote in the Senate, followed by a 292-133 tally in the House, handed Reagan a severe political defeat and reversed a 1984 Supreme Court decision that sharply restricted the reach of four anti-discrimination statutes.

The votes in both chambers exceeded the two-thirds majority needed to enact a law over a presidential veto. It was the ninth time Congress had rejected a Reagan veto.

The White House pledged to enforce the new law, which Reagan had called a federal "power grab."

"We presented an alternative civil rights act which stated the president's strong views against discrimination in this country," a White House statement said. "The Congress chose to override the president's veto. We will work to implement the new law."

"People who voluntarily take federal funds have an obligation to treat everybody else fairly," said Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., summing up the rationale of lawmakers who have been pressing for the Civil Rights Restoration Act since the high court ruling.

The court said only specific programs or activities receiving federal aid had to comply with four major civil rights laws.

The restoration act bars discrimination by institutions, government agencies and some corporations that receive any federal aid. That means if a college physics department, for example, receives federal assistance, the entire college would fall under the civil rights laws.

Reagan and his congressional allies argued for a less sweeping alternative, saying the act went far beyond simple restoration.

Firefighters work to control a fire that burned out of control Tuesday in Pottawatomie County for at least three hours near Fields of Fair off U.S. 24. Twenty trucks and 100 firefighters fought the blaze.

Fire blazes near Fields of Fair; local residents have close call

By Steve Walker
Collegian Reporter

For at least three hours Tuesday afternoon, a grass fire burned out of control in Pottawatomie County near Fields of Fair, off U.S. 24.

Although some residents said the fire was burning as early as noon, it was not reported to the fire department until about 2 p.m., said Milton Toy, St. George assistant fire chief.

The fire department has not estimated the amount of land damaged by the blaze, but it did burn in patches for miles.

"We have no idea how much area is involved," Toy said. "It's big, though."

The cause of the fire is still under investigation, Toy said. The fire started south of Fields of Fair, near St. George.

"The fire has been burning north of (U.S.) 24 and south of (U.S.) 24 since noon," one Wamego firefighter said. "But, it started down south."

Twenty fire trucks and about 100 firefighters were involved in the blaze, Toy said. Residents from the area also volunteered to battle the blaze.

"Flames were burning 20 feet high all down our property line," said Nancy Longbrake, a Wamego resident. "It threaded its way in between the houses and just burned out right before it got to our home. I don't know why it did, maybe because of the wind."

The National Weather Service reported that the average speed of the wind in the Manhattan area was 20 mph with gusts up to 35 mph. Despite the high temperature of 81 and the extreme concentrations of smoke, there were no reports of firefighters or residents suffering from heat exhaustion or smoke inhilation.

Damage estimates were not available, but a few barns were burned in the blaze. No homes were reportedly damaged. Most residents' lawns and property were burned — some right up to the foundations of the house.

"The fire burned right up to our house," said Marlene Budden, Wamego resident. "The sidewalk stopped it. We were pretty worried, but not anymore."

Belleville, Blue Township, Louisville, St. George, Wamego Township, Wamego City, and Westmoreland fire departments responded to the blaze, Toy said.

The fire was brought under control about 5 p.m., according to the Pottawatomie sheriff's office.

Soviets tackle book shortage

MOSCOW — The shortage of good books in the Soviet Union is being assaulted in a two-front war, with 3,500 previously banned titles being published and a new law in the works that will allow a vanity press.

Soviets have complained for years that while state bookstores are overflowing with political reflections, moralistic fiction and the works of Communist Party officials, people are hard pressed to lay their hands on the best writing of Soviet, Russian and foreign authors.

Two newspapers referred to the "book deficit" on Tuesday in announcing programs aimed at expanding the pool of quality literature available at bookshops or public libraries.

The Communist Party daily Pravda said authors willing to risk their own money will be able to publish their works, sharing in earnings from government sales or absorbing the loss if the material fails to draw a following.

Drug leader escapes arrest

MEDELLIN, Colombia — A reputed leader of the notorious Medellin drug cartel escaped arrest after a shootout early Tuesday between his heavily armed bodyguards and soldiers, the army's 4th Brigade said.

A man thought to be a member of Pablo Escobar Gaviria's personal guard was injured, the army reported. He was not identified.

At least 25 bodyguards were arrested and a variety of firearms and documents were seized after the clash at a country estate outside Medellin, 180 miles northwest of the capital, Bogota, the army said. The haul also was said to include communications equipment, 13 vehicles and ammunition.

Adviser to Mecham testifies

PHOENIX, Ariz. — A prosecutor told the Arizona Senate on Tuesday that Gov. Evan Mecham's $80,000 loan from a protocol fund to his car dealership was an "intentional and wrongful act," while the defense acknowledged it was "not politically smart."

The statements came as the Senate turned to the second of three charges against Mecham at his impeachment trial — misusing state funds.

A Mecham campaign adviser and a deputy county attorney testified that the $80,000 was raised by Mecham's inaugural ball and put into a protocol fund to be used for gifts such as Indian dolls and ashtrays for visiting dignitaries.

State minimum wage may rise

TOPEKA — The Senate Committee on Labor, Industry and Small Business did an about-face Tuesday and endorsed a bill that would raise the state's minimum wage after all but killing the measure the day before.

The committee sent to the full Senate a bill that would raise the state's minimum wage from $1.60 to $2.65.

The motion to reconsider the committee's actions of the previous day was made by Sen. Bill Morris, R-Wichita, who on Monday joined a majority of the committee members to strike all portions of the bill that dealt with minimum wage, effectively gutting the bill.

Morris said he originally voted against the wage increase because such laws tend to penalize the least capable workers. Some employees might lay off minimum wage earners rather than increase their wages, he said, which occurs when employers have to pay the federal minimum wage of $3.35.

Father faces abuse charges

HUGOTON, Kan. — A public school counselor pleaded innocent Monday to abuse of a child stemming from his alleged use of an electric cattle prod on his teen-age daughter.

Richard L. Perry, 46, of Hugoton, entered the plea during a hearing in Stevens County District Court. He is a counselor in the Ulysses school district.

A charge of aiding and abetting in child abuse was dismissed earlier against his wife, Shelley Perry, 39, an elementary school teacher in Hugoton.

Testimony at an earlier hearing alleged that Perry used the cattle prod to restrain his daughter, a special-education student.

Client allegedly attacks lawyer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The trial of a man accused of attacking a woman last year was delayed Monday after his lawyer told a Jackson County judge that his client had tried to hit him.

The man, Jerry L. Rice, was to go to trial this week on charges of first-degree sexual abuse and second-degree attempted robbery in an April 3, 1987, attack on a Kansas City woman.

Rice now is an assault suspect in a police investigation into the alleged attack on his lawyer, Assistant Public Defender Kent Gipson.

Gipson was to have defended Rice in the trial this week, but instead asked Circuit Judge William F. Mauer on Monday to remove him from the case.

During a visit with Rice at the Jackson County Jail on Friday, Rice on two occasions tried to punch him, and also threatened to kill him, Gipson said.

The public defender said he used an accordion file containing information about Rice's case to fend off the blows.

"He doesn't like me," Gipson said.

"This isn't to say that I've never had problems with clients — they don't like your advice, or they don't like your honest evaluation. But this has gone way beyond anything I've had to deal with before," Gipson said.

Universities to benefit from extra fee money

From Staff and Wire Reports

TOPEKA — The House passed bills Tuesday to make more campaign finance information about candidates for county offices available before elections and to let four state universities use extra fee money they received because of unexpectedly high enrollments.

Under the fee release bill, Emporia State University would recieve $125,289 in supplemental appropriations during the current fiscal year from the fees; K-State would receive $304,910; the University of Kansas, $466,382, and Wichita State University, $109,098.

State universities give all the money they receive from student tuition and fees to the state, and the Legislature then sets the universities' budgets and how much of the fee revenue they can spend. The four schools said they had higher enrollments this year than expected and thus need to use more of the money they collected from fees.

Gov. Mike Hayden has recommended that the universities receive 75 percent of the extra fees they collected, and the House endorsed his proposal. The bill passed, 110-14, and also went to the Senate.

George Miller, vice president for administration and finance, said it was great news that the fee release had been passed.

"Those fee releases are essential for us to balance our budget," he said.

Money from the release will go for replacing funds used to cover the enrollment increases K-State experienced this year, Miller said.

K-State administrators expected to receive the 75 percent of the extra fee money from the increase in students, he said.

That was the amount Kansas legislators released last year when a similar request was made by the University, Miller said.

In the other bill, the elections measure would require candidates for county offices to file a list of their campaign contributors with the county's election official before primary and general elections. The new law would not apply to candidates who spend less than $1,000 in a primary or general election.

Candidates for countywide offices currently must file expenditure reports after an election. Candidates for statewide office and legislative seats now have to file pre-election reports with the secretary of state's office.

The measure passed, 89-35, and now goes to the Senate.

In addition, the House also approved bills to:

■ Exempt certain organizations from paying back taxes if the organizations assumed they weren't on the tax rolls. The bill is designed in part to overturn a ruling of the state Board of Tax Appeals that would have retroactively put the Topeka YMCA on the Shawnee County tax rolls. The measure returns to the Senate for consideration of House amendments.

■ Require state political parties to place the head of their official organizations for blacks on the parties' executive committees. That measure went to Gov. Mike Hayden.

Ortega foresees peaceful end

Cease-fire agreement, prisoner release expected

By The Associated Press

SAPOA, Nicaragua — Nicaragua's defense minister, Gen. Humberto Ortega, said at the end of a second day of peace talks between Sandinista and Contra rebel negotiators that he expected a "concrete agreement" today.

He declined to elaborate, telling a news conference, "Obviously we aren't able to go into details."

Earlier Tuesday both sides said they had exchanged proposals, which agree on major points, for an extended cease-fire accompanied by amnesty and release of political prisoners.

Contra leader Adolfo Calero told reporters, "We worked hard during the day. We clarified (points that coincide) and we are working on differences."

"It was a fruitful day and tomorrow could be even better."

Calero described the second round of talks as "direct and frank."

The two sides began three days of meetings Monday at this town on the Costa Rican border, trying to end a civil war that President Daniel Ortega says has cost 26,500 lives since 1981. Both sides suspended battlefield action during the talks.

The Sandinista delegation proposed a 30-day truce that could be extended to three months, during which the U.S.-supported Contras would lay down their weapons and join a "national reconciliation dialogue."

Victor Hugo Tinoco, the deputy foreign minister, announced the proposal at a news conference. For every rebel who stops fighting, he said, the leftist government will free one of the 3,300 political prisoners it considers eligible for release.

Most prisoners are former members of the National Guard, as the army was called under the late President Anastasio Somoza, whom the Sandinista revolution overthrew in July 1979.

Contrary to previous Sandinista demands, Tinoco said rebels who put down their arms would be free from prosecution without applying for amnesty and could take part in Nicaraguan political life.

They would be permitted to operate uncensored newspapers, magazines and radio stations, but television would remain a government monopoly.

Contra proposals, as outlined to reporters by spokesman Bosco Matamoros, call for a 45-day truce beginning on Good Friday, April 1. Rebel fighters would move to cease-fire zones and a permanent truce would be negotiated by Sandinista and Contra leaders.

Matamoros said the Contras demand "total and unconditional amnesty" when the cease-fire begins, so anyone who had left Nicaragua for political reasons could "rejoin the political, economic and social process without any conditions."

Contra leaders also want to join a national dialogue between the Sandinistas and their internal political opponents.

An agreement signed Monday night by President Ortega, the defense minister's brother, and leaders of eight opposition political parties has a significant effect on that Contra demand.

Censoring 'B.C.' strip unnecessary

Commentary

CATHERINE DOUD
Collegian Columnist

It must be habit. The funny page is still the first thing I read every morning in the newspaper. Every single morning without fail I start my day with a little humor. You would almost think I take my comic strips seriously, but I don't. However, the Kansas City Times does.

A perfect example of this is Tuesday's comic page in the Times. Where the comic strip "B.C." should have been was an empty space with a little box that said: "The 'B.C.' comic strip for today was removed because it contained objectionable material. 'B.C.' will be back Wednesday."

Good heavens I thought — what could the writer of "B.C." have written to so offend the sensibilities of the newspaper censorer? So of course I went off in search of another paper that might have carried this apparently disgusting strip. I found it located as usual in the Wichita Eagle-Beacon. I eagerly read the condemned strip only to find myself shocked. Not by the language in the strip, but by the prudish, self-righteous, uncalled-for censorship employed by the Kansas City Times.

Apparently the offensive line in the strip was the description of a bean soup recipe. It was described as being able to "blow your bloomers off."

Good grief. To censor a strip because it insinuates the act of farting seems like a little much to me. Is the Times afraid that if children read about passing gas it will corrupt them? Heck, for most kids in grade school farting is one of the funniest gags ever invented. That's why most of us spent all of fourth grade learning how to do those fake fart sounds under our armpits. I really don't think I can blame the funny page for that. And those kids of a more tender age who might be coarsened by such a rude use of language probably wouldn't know what bloomers are anyway, much less how they are blown off.

I was so amazed that the paper would actually censor this strip that I called the Times and inquired about it. Although the person I spoke to had not seen the strip personally, the individual told me it was considered unsuitable for family reading.

Now I would hate to second guess the person in charge of censoring cartoon strips, but I would think that this strip which alludes to the act of farting would be much more suitable for family reading than perhaps the unedited episodes in "Doonesbury" which featured Dr. Whoopee delivering condoms to eager couples. However, when a character in "Bloom County" called another character "wormbutt" early this fall, it fell prey to the terrible eraser of the comic editor. Apparently the editor has difficulty with descriptions of the human posterior as being suitable for family reading.

This censorship seems to be completely random. While farting on the funny page is offensive, only three pages away ads for porn theaters featuring "private video booths" can be printed. However, when the movie "Hail Mary" — a modern version of the Joseph and Mary story — was being protested by Catholics in the Kansas City area as being offensive since it portrayed the immaculate conception in a less-than-reverant light, the Kansas City Times refused to run ads from the theater where it was playing.

Thus, the movie had to close. The movie contained some profanity and a brief bit of nudity, yet the Times apparently believed that its ads were unsuitable for viewing in a family newspaper. Either that or the paper's editors were trying to appease a vocal segment of their readers. Meanwhile, the ads for the porn theaters were still printed.

The Kansas City Times is doing more damage than good by taking the stance that it must protect its readers from potentially harmful material, such as gas. The actual censoring of a comic strip or ad generally causes more controversy than the material itself. Thus, by the time it is all over with, more people are exposed to the material than would have been in the first place.

For example, I doubt that if I had just opened the paper and read the "B.C." strip that I, or most people, would have even noticed anything wrong with it. However, once I knew that it had been censored, I took the time to find it, show it to all of my friends, and it became a topic of discussion over the dinner table. Often when a paper chooses to censor a strip it receives nationwide attention. This action is self-defeating. Unless, of course, it is only doing it to raise a little controversy and cause more people to look at the paper.

The Times should make a stronger policy on what exactly is offensive and what isn't. When an anti-pornography group was campaigning recently to limit pornography in Kansas City, the Times took the stand that pornographers had the right to express themselves. So why then can't cartoonists express themselves freely about a bodily function that everyone experiences?

Censorship, regardless of whether it involves something as trivial as a cartoon or as important as a vital news story, must not be taken lightly. If we become complacent about this sort of censorship, more is sure to follow and it won't be limited to the funny pages. While the censoring of just one comic strip may seem trivial, the arbitrary way in which it was chosen to be censored, possibly at just the whim of a prudish editor, should have all of us as readers concerned about the direction some newspapers are taking.

Come on Times, grow up. If we can stand our children seeing ads for feminine hygiene products, porn movies, sex aids and hemorrhoid remedies day in and day out, I really doubt that someone breaking wind in a comic strip will ruin them for life.

The offensive cartoon:

Euthanasia guidelines must be set nationally

A Missouri woman, who is currently in a vegetative state, is the subject of a controversial euthanasia court case. Her parents want the hospital to stop feeding the woman, therefore letting her starve to death.

The woman's family claims this is what she would want, rather than living for an indeterminant length of time as nothing more than a body which lacks the ability to think.

A neurologist has testified that the patient, who was in a car accident in 1983, is brain dead. According to the doctor, numerous tests have been performed and there is no indication of any activity in the woman's brain.

The controversy in this case is that several nurses from the hospital where the woman is staying have testified that they have seen the patient open her eyes and look around the room. The nurses even claimed that, after they read the woman a card from relatives, she cried. They also testified that they witnessed her laughing.

It is unclear how the patient could be crying and looking around the room if she is truly brain dead; perhaps the nurses are seeing what they want to see. Or, the neurologist could be wrong.

Regardless of who is right and who is wrong, hospital personnel have said that if the court rules in the family's favor, they would prefer that she be dismissed from the hospital and allowed to die at home. The hospital personnel do not want to be responsible for the woman starving to death.

The father of the patient said that if he lost this case in Missouri, he would simply take his daughter to another state where the laws are more lenient toward euthanasia.

A federal precedent needs to be set in this matter so that people will not be moving from state to state until they finally get the decision they want.

It is ridiculous for courts in one state to make a decision on a case of such major importance, just to have the people go to another state whose court will make a different decision. A federal statute is in order, and until one is made this issue will continue to plague the state courts.

This case is not simply a matter of taking a body off of life-support systems. It is a matter of denying a patient food, with death being inevitable.

The neurologist and the family say the woman will feel no pain, but the hospital personnel are skeptical. They do not want to be the ones to do the deed.

City cannot be savior to failing businesses

It's the nature of the business.

Businesses are moving out of Aggieville and downtown at an alarming rate. The reasons they are leaving vary — too much competition, too few customers, too great an overhead.

The people who own the property of the businesses that are closing are concerned they will have to lower rent rates to fill the slots. They are also concerned that the state's reappraisal effort may increase the taxes they will pay on the property that is sitting idle.

They would like the City Commission to lower property taxes and help them out in their time of need.

The land owners, however, are not the only Manhattan citizens the City Commission represents. The city needs the property taxes to ease the classroom overcrowding problem in the Manhattan School District and to pay for other services that benefit all residents.

The land owners need to be more innovative. The old business ways simply do not work anymore. There is stiffer competition and different kinds of customers.

Before asking for help from the City Commission, the land owners and business people need to change their business practices to the evolving economy.

Helping the merchants to be inefficient will not benefit all of the city's residents. The merchants can afford to raise prices of merchandise when they know the city will support them.

The consumers will evenually be hurt if the city implements the merchants' wishes. In turn, this will hurt the city. Consumers will begin to take their dollars elsewhere and deprive the city of the sales tax money that would have been spent in Manhattan.

And then who will be singing the blues?

Care unawareness

Editor,

Juli Kramer's further explanation of her statements regarding the KSU Childcare Cooperative demonstrates an unawareness of legal and developmental issues relating to day care in general. The state licenses day care centers only if staff meet very specific levels of training and expertise, and has further requirements regarding program structure, physical environment and ongoing training for staff.

This is because young children have developmental needs which must be addressed whatever care situation they are in: separating from parents and bonding with another care giver, self-care, cooperative play and many other skills which are incredibly difficult for untrained adults to encourage when dealing with larger groups of young children.

Parent financial status has nothing to do with the need for quality child care. Our children's growth and development is important for the future of us all.

Death prompts fond memories of friend

JAMES F. PETERS III
Guest Columnist

Brad Blaker was a bit of a philosopher. Among the many things we talked about in the short time we knew each other, it was Brad's philosophical bent that brought us closest together. He loved to dream about how things could be with just a little nudging.

So, for example, I remember the many months during which he brainstormed about an entity-relationship diagram he developed for a Manhattan company. He seemed to relish tinkering with possibilities in that somewhat enormous E-R diagram. Only in retrospect do I realize that Brad's puzzling over the relationships in that E-R diagram were a natural extension of his relishing over the art of the possible.

Brad had mastered the art of structuring possible relationships. This was apparent in the many hours we spent together toying with grammars. He had a natural ability to think in grammars, to imagine the relationships between the productions of a grammar. It was fun to be nearby Brad when he was inventing the parts of a new grammar, which he obviously was fond of doing. Here again I see now that Brad was a craftsman perfecting his mastery of the art of the possible.

Brad was also a friend. He befriended me when I was very insecure. Since we were close in age, we grew together easily. As a native Kansan who had spent his life in Manhattan, he shared with we his fondest dream: to become a faculty member in the Department of Computing and Information Sciences at K-State. Fulfillment for him meant, in part, being part of the academic program here.

Brad's love of computing was always coupled with his love of others in the graduate program at K-State. I was among many graduate students he befriended and helped.

He was a person who wished the good for others. I know he spent many, many hours helping others. As much as he apparently loved helping other graduate students with their compiler theory problems (or other problems), he would routinely drop everything to go to one of his son's football games or to be at home with his family. He was a person who somehow lived a 25-hour day. He always seemes to find an extra hour for someone besides himself, no matter how busy he was with his own work.

When I was driving back to Manhattan last weekend after spring break with my family in Minnesota, I caught myself looking forward to seeing Brad again, telling what happened at home, dreaming with him about the coming months at school. Then I realized I would not be seeing Brad anymore. Only then did I fully realize what a profound impact Brad has had on my life. Even though we shall not be able to talk together again, I will always carry with me his giving and expansive spirit.

Lecturer discusses role of manuscripts

By The Collegian Staff

The mass production and printing of books revolutionized the role of manuscripts in society, said a guest lecturer Tuesday night in Farrell Library.

Martin Lowry, book historian and specialist of early English and Italian printing, said manuscripts were used as a social object and as a source of learning in early Venetian history, but the introduction of printing posed a threat to that concept.

Lowry discussed "Printing and the Murder of the Manuscript." His lecture was based on his study of a catalog of book sales in Venice between 1484 and 1488.

"It is a rather overbearing title," he said. "I would like to modify it to the 'attempted murder of the manuscript' because the manuscript is obviously still with us."

Lowry is a visiting fellow at the Getty Center for the History of Art and Humanities of Santa Monica, Calif. He is a lecturer and tutor of history at the University of Warwick, England.

Before printing began, the process of putting together a book was a group effort, Lowry said.

Because of the scarcity of books before printing, they were valued and respected. Book collectors were lucky to own 50 or 60 books, and there was a structured system of loaning them out.

The printing of books in the 1480s made a sudden impact in the quantity of books available, Lowery said. Although large books were still considered a luxury, books such as grammar books were reduced in price and were made more easily available.

Printing also provided the opportunity for individuals to purchase large quantities of books. Wealthy citizens could purchase enough books to build a collection.

Strike keeps Panama shut down

By The Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama — Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega's opponents scorned what they called a cynical offer to negotiate his resignation and kept Panama shut down Tuesday with a general strike intended to force him out.

An estimated 90 percent of offices and industries were shut by the strike, which appeared to be gaining support on its second day. Most shops and stores were closed, public transportation was halted and many government employees did not go to work.

Panama is out of cash because of pressure from the United States to force the ouster of Noriega, who is the real power in Panama as commander of its 15,000 soldiers and police. The U.S. dollar is the national currency and the supply has been cut off.

Most government workers were paid only $75 of their midmonth wages last week and the $33 million end-of-the-month payroll for the 130,000 public employees problably won't be met. Pension checks due today have been delayed, at least until March 28.

Hunger is spreading among workers as well as the poor, unemployed and elderly. Many washerwomen, cleaning women, maids and cooks have lost their jobs because there is no money with which to pay them.

Manuel Solis Palma, the civilian Noriega chose to run the government, said on television Monday night the general would resign in exchange for "a national dialogue" to reconcile differences with opponents of the regime. He prefaced the offer with a diatribe against the United States.

The implication was that Noriega, under federal court indictment in Florida on narcotics and money laundering charges, would stay in Panama and might retain power behind the scenes.

Calling the offer a "noble gesture," Solis Palma said Noriega pledged "as an officer and a gentleman" to resign before presidential elections scheduled for May 1989.

Solis Palma, who has the title "minister in charge of the presidency," said he would not accept Noriega's resignation unless "all of the political forces in the country" join "a national dialogue."

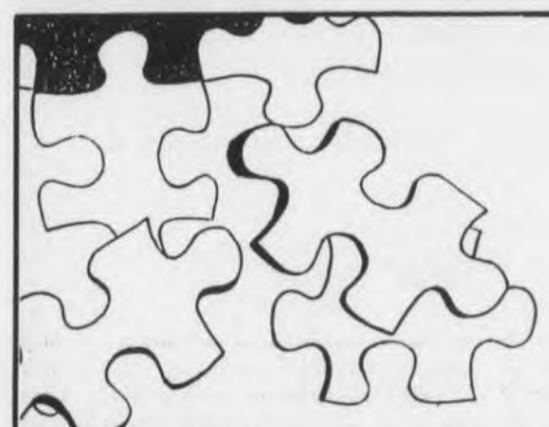
Noriega put Solis Palma in office Feb. 26, after President Eric Arturo Delvalle tried to fire the general and the legislature dismissed Delvalle instead.

Delvalle, still recognized by the United States, is hiding in Panama. His dismissal began a run on Panama's banks and they were closed the next week.

Pressure from Washington has included freezing virtually all Panamanian funds in the United States, including revenue from the Panama Canal.

Reagan administration spokesmen rejected the Noriega proposal. Last week, Noriega turned down a U.S. plan for him to leave Panama and live in Spain.

Guillermo Cochez, vice president of the Christian Democratic Party, said the proposed discussion would occur in a panel of 33 members, 22 of them supporting Noriega.



"This is not a dialogue," he said "It's just cynicism."

The canal, guarded by about 10,000 U.S. troops, has been operating normally despite the crisis. The United States sent 300 more soldiers Monday.

Honduran conflict eases; troops stay for maneuvers

By The Associated Press

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — U.S. troops sent here for emergency training exercises will stay on to complete the maneuvers, a U.S. military spokesman said Tuesday, although Honduras says its border crisis with Nicaragua is over.

"Right now the plans are to make it a 10- to 14-day exercises. We have not received any directive as to when to begin redeployment," said U.S. spokesman Maj. Gary Hovatter in a telephone interview.

He said exercises were taking place Tuesday at four sites.

President Reagan ordered 3,200 American troops to Honduras last week at the request of President Jose Azcona Hoyo, who had accused Sandinista soldiers from neighboring Nicaragua of penetrating Honduran territory in pursuit of U.S.-supported Contra rebels.

President Daniel Ortega of Nicaragua denied his troops were in Honduras. Last week Honduran jets twice bombed Nicaraguan positions to force them to leave. No casualties were reported.

Honduran Foreign Minister Carlos Lopez Contreras told The Associated Press in an interview Tuesday that the border tension "has virtually disappeared" after both the Sandinistas and the Contras suspended hostilities and began truce talks.

The three days of negotiations began Monday in the small southern Nicaraguan town of Sapoa, near the Costa Rican border. The talks aim mainly at reaching a cease-fire so that both sides can strike a permanent peace accord in their 7-year-old war.

The dispatch of the U.S. troops bolstered the American military presence in Honduras to about 6,000 servicemen.

Kite snagged by plane

8-year-old girl hangs on tight

By The Associated Press

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. — Little DeAndra Anrig was flying her kite when it suddenly started to fly her, her parents say. It was just a short hop, but one the 8-year-old isn't likely to forget.

A twin-engine plane caught the 200-pound nylon test line of DeAndra's kite and carried her about 100 feet — over her daddy's head and almost into a tree, she said Tuesday.

She let go, but said she was still sore after two days' rest. The plane, meanwhile, is grounded because of damage apparently caused by getting tangled in the kite string.

DeAndra and her parents, who live in the East Bay community of Dublin, were picnicking with friends at the Shoreline park about 30 miles south of San Francisco and about two miles from the Palo Alto Airport Sunday and taking turns flying a glider-type kite with a 12-foot wingspan.

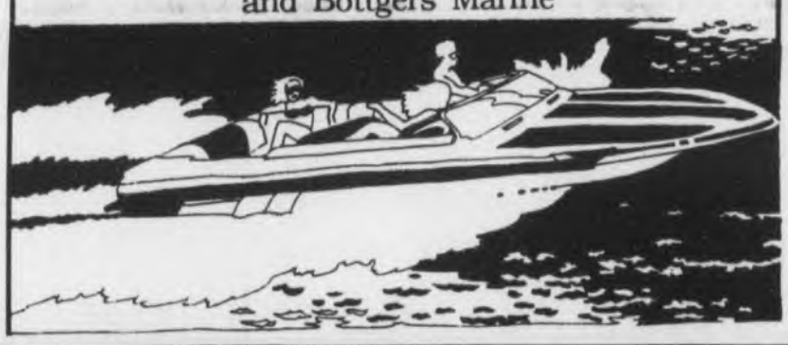
While it was DeAndra's turn, a plane descending for the airport snagged the line, her parents said.

"She said it was just a big jerk that lifted her into the air," said DeAndra's mother, Debby. "It carried her right over my husband's head. All he saw was a shadow going over his head. I'm just thankful she let go."

"We always said, 'Hold on tight. Don't let go, honey,'" the mother said, recalling their advice on proper kite-flying technique.

DeAndra said she was doing just that, until she saw what was looming in front of her: "I thought that I was gonna hit a tree."

Asked what she thought about during her brief flight, DeAndra said, "I wasn't thinking anything but how scared I was."



Mountain View fire marshal Frank Moe said the child was dragged for about 100 feet before letting go. Moe did not see the incident.

Good food fast...

Quick meals cut fat, calories

If you are the type of person who dislikes both the food and the plastic ambience of fast-food restaurants, you probably cook most of your meals at home — no matter how long it takes.

But, if you are the type who gets all or most of your meals from take-out windows or the frozen-food section of a supermarket because you think you don't have enough time to cook, you might not be considering all the meanings of the term "fast food."

The fact is, there are a lot of quick, easy and nutritious meals that can be made at home in the same time it would take to fetch a meal from one of those fast-food establishments.

In most cases, food prepared at home will contain a lot less fat, calories and salt and will have more vitamins, minerals, complex carbohydrates and fiber.

Piecing together a meal in the kitchen while listening to some tunes or catching the evening news on the tube is a lot more pleasant than fighting traffic, bad weather, standing in line, paying too much for food that never looks like the picture, and discarding a Styrofoam cocoon that will be littering the world for generations to come.

The unfortunate fact is, many of the things that taste really good are loaded with fat. Research has shown that a low-fat diet can improve health. According to government research, most adults should follow a diet that gets 20 percent or less of its calories from fat.

Here are a few tips on cutting down on the amount of fat in meals:

Cook without oil whenever possible. Use cookware with non-stick surfaces and saute in water, adding seasonings for flavor. When absolutely necessary, wipe a thin layer of oil on the inside of the pan with a paper towel or use a commercially made spray, like Pam.

Reduce or eliminate butter, shortening, and oils from recipes. Simply leave those fatty ingredients out. When moisture is needed for baked goods, use applesauce or mashed bananas instead of oil. If total elimination of fat is out of the question, use only a fraction of the amount called for in the recipe. Try making favorite recipes with half the recommended amount of fat. If the recipe is successful, reduce the fat even more the next time.

Cut down on the amount of nuts and seeds called for in recipes.

Reduce the amount of eggs in recipes or use an egg substitute. If elimination of eggs altogether seems a bit too radical, then at least throw away the cholesterol-loaded yolk and use only the white.

Cheese derives 70 to 90 percent of its calories from fat. Cutting down on cheese cuts down on fat. Using low-fat cheeses like mozzarella or dry-curd cottage cheese are the best choices.

Tofu and seasonings can be blended together for use as dips and salad dressings, instead of using high-fat sour cream or mayonnaise. Tofu is an improvement over sour cream and mayonnaise, but still derives 52 percent of its calories from fat, so don't overdo it.

Here are a few ideas for toss-together meals. Some of these recipes are not perfectly fat free, cholesterol free, salt or even sugar free, but few foods are perfect. Even if they are, few choose to eat them. Fats and cholesterol and such can't be totally eliminated, but they can be kept to a minimum.

Most of these recipes use rice as a base because rice is very versatile. It can be used as a dinner vegetable, a healthy base for foods, even a pudding for dessert. Rice is the mainstay food for millions of people around the world. Pasta, which has become popular, can be used as a suitable substitute for rice.

Here are a few recipes which are not only quick, but also nutritious.

Pepper Steak

Ingredients:

1½ pounds beef steak
2 medium sized bell peppers (sliced)
1 small onion (sliced)
1 large tomato
2 cups white rice
2 teaspoons ground black pepper

Preparation instructions:

Remove skin from the tomato by placing tomato in boiling water for 1 minute, and then placing it in cold water. The skin should peel right off. Dice the tomato and set it aside.

Remove excess fat from the steak and slice into bite size strips.

Mix steak, tomato, green pepper and onion into a large skillet and sprinkle on the ground pepper.

Simmer at medium heat for 20 to 30 minutes, depending upon how well done you want the steak.

While steak is simmering, prepare rice according to package instructions.

Serve over the rice. This dish serves one or two people, depending on appetites. A salad and Chablis wine are perfect companions to this meal.

Rice should be mounded and fluffy, each grain separate and tender — that's the way rice should and could be if you prepare it right. Resist the temptation for the extra stir or the peek into the kettle, and when stirring or fluffing, always use a fork to avoid crushing the grains. Avoid overcooking; it produces mush.

Don't limit rice selection to just one type. Regular rice, with hull and bran removed by polishing can be used for casseroles, puddings and desserts. Processed or converted rice contains the vitamins found in the husk of brown rice but is polished like white rice. The cooking time for converted rice is longer than for regular rice. Precooked (instant) rice, if you are the type who burns Kool-aid, this is the one for you.

Brown rice has a nutty flavor and is used primarily for a side dish. Wild rice is long-grained and dark greenish brown in color (and not really rice but the seed of aquatic grass). It's expensive and often sold combined with brown rice.

The next recipe lets you get a little fancier, but not to the point you have to spend all night in the kitchen preparing a meal that will be devoured by starving friends in less time than it takes to play one round of "Hi Bob."

Stir Fry Medley

Ingredients:

½ pound boneless chicken breast
½ pound beef steak
½ pound veal
1 medium sized green bell pepper (sliced)
1 medium sized onion (sliced)
1 medium sized carrot (shredded)
10 to 15 snow peas (snip the ends off)
6 ounces slivered almonds
2 tablespoons soy sauce
1 teaspoon garlic powder
1 teaspoon ginger
¼ cup water
3 tablespoons corn starch
3 cups prepared white rice

Preparation instructions:

Prepare vegetables as described above and slice meat into bite-sized strips.

Place meats into a large skillet or wok and cook at high temperature. Cook until the meat has lost all pinkness, stirring constantly. Add vegetables and continue to cook for 3 to 4 minutes, while continuing to stir. Sprinkle spices over the mixture and reduce the heat to low.

Add corn starch and soy sauce to water and mix well. Blend into the meat and vegetable mixture and bring to a boil, again continuing to stir constantly. Reduce heat and allow to thicken.

Serve over rice to a group of four, or two victorious Wildcats.

Well here it is, a fat-loaded recipe calling for the use of fat-loaded sausage, but it's oh so good, and oh so fast.

Kelbasa and Rice Combo

Ingredients:

1 pound Polish Kelbasa sausage, sliced-bite sized (actually any smoked sausage can be used, but Kelbasa seems to work best).
1 medium green bell pepper (diced)
1 small bermuda onion (diced)
3 cups white rice
2 teaspoons paprika

Preparation instructions:

In a large skillet mix the sausage, green pepper and onions. Sprinkle paprika over the mixture, cover and simmer for 25 to 30 minutes.

While sausage is simmering prepare rice according to package directions.

Serve over white rice. Tossed salad or cole slaw make a good complement to this quick and easy meal. Serves 3 hungry campers or one student preparing for finals.

Leftover rice tips:

Reheat cooked rice in the top of a double boiler over hot water for about 10 minutes or until rice is hot and fluffy. Or place rice in a heavy pan with a tightly fitted cover. Sprinkle water over the rice, about 2 tablespoons to each cup of rice. Cover; heat over a low heat for 5 to 8 minutes, or until rice is hot and fluffy.

Refrigerate cooked rice in a tightly covered bowl or wrap completely to prevent drying out. Rice will keep this way for 4 to 5 days.

Cooked rice can be frozen in a covered freezer container or wrapped completely. It will keep for up to two semesters this way.

You won't find the next dish being served by the Kentucky Colonel, but its cheaper and you can make it yourself.

Quick Chicken

Ingredients:

1 cup bread crumbs.
4 boneless chicken breasts.
¼ cup vegetable oil.
2 cups tomato sauce or spaghetti sauce.
12 ounces wide egg noodles.
1½ cups shredded mozzarella cheese.

Preparation instructions:

Prepare noodles according to package instructions, rinse with cold water and drain well. Spread noodles evenly in a casserole dish.

Heat oil in a skillet. Dip chicken in the bread crumbs and place in the oil. Cook for 5 minutes on each side and then place on a paper towel to remove excess oil.

Place chicken on top of noodles. Spread half of the cheese over the chicken and cover with the sauce. Sprinkle the remaining cheese over the sauce and cover. Bake at 350 degrees for 20 minutes.

This quick and nutritious meal serves four.

A fresh garden salad or crisp green vegetables, accompanied by a loaf of hot-baked bread round out the menu.

Remember, some foods may require a longer cooking time but much less preparation time. So while the chow is simmering you can balance your checkbook, do some homework, or simply crash in front of the tube — but you don't have to make it "Mac tonight."

House endorses prison parole bill

Committee on Corrections to study penal problems

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A House committee endorsed a parole bill designed to alleviate the state's prison overcrowding crisis while legislative leaders appointed a committee to study the issue Tuesday as the Legislature began to focus greater attention on the penal problem.

The parole bill, endorsed by the House Federal and State Affairs, is designed to make it easier to parole some criminals earlier and to tranfer some power oversee parole programs to the secretary of corrections from the Kansas Parole Board.

However, the measure also puts into law an informal parole board policy that makes it tougher to parole violent felony offenders. It requires unanimous decisions by the board to fee the violent offenders.

The committee sent the bill on to the full House on a voice vote after almost no discussion. Its chairman, Rep. Robert H. Miller, R-Wellington, said he was not surprised with the lack of dissent.

"It's not a cure-all," Miller said of the proposal.

Currently, the state's prison system houses more than 5,800 inmates in buildings designed to have a maximum capacity of 5,015. In addition, the state faces a possible federal court order to release inmates from the Kansas State Penitentiary in Lansing.

Meanwhile, Senate President Robert Talkington, R-Iola, will be chairman of a Special Committee on Corrections to study the crisis, including a $100 million proposal from the director of the penal system. House Speaker Jim Braden, R-Clay Center, will be the committee's vice chairman.

"We hope this committee will be able to do something this year," Talkington said during a news conference.

Gov. Mike Hayden is encouraged by the formation of the committee, his press secretary, Kathy Peterson, said.

Talkington said legislative leaders want to avoid a special session on the issue.

Corrections Secretary Roger Endell has proposed a plan to build two new prisons and a work-industrial complex, as well as renovate two existing state institutions and increase the number of inmates in community corrections programs by 400. In all, 2,516 beds would be added to the penal system.

On floor action, a bill designed to discourage corporate raiders from taking over Kansas companies received the House's tentative approval while a measure creating a new organization to oversee emergency medical services was given first-round approval in the Senate.

The corporate bill passed by the House would modify a 1939 law that is designed to give minority stockholders more of a vote in the management of a corporation. Opponents saw the bill as an attack on minority stockholders' rights.

The bill was advanced to final action, 59-54, and a final vote is expected today. However, the bill will need an absolute majority, or 63 of 125 votes, to pass.

"The state of Kansas (currently) is saying it approves of some of the tactics of some of the corporate raiders," said Rep. Robert Vancrum, R-Overland Park.

The measure would allow companies to avoid a practice known as "cumulative voting" in elections for seats on their boards of directors.

Under cumulative voting, a stockholder receives a number of votes equal to the number of shares he holds multiplied by the number of directors on the board. Stockholders are allowed to cast more than one vote in an election for a single seat on the board.

Thus, minority stockholders can pool their votes, abstain from voting in most elections for single seats, and cast all of their votes in elections for a single or a few seats on the board.

Stamp prices to increase in April

From Staff and Wire Reports

WASHINGTON — Higher postage rates, including a 25-cent charge for first-class letters, will take effect April 3, the Postal Service announced Tuesday.

But despite the increase, Marvin Roth, Manhattan postmaster, said that he expects little change in the amount of mail his office processes.

"Historically, right before a rate change there is an increase in volume (processed). Then for a few weeks following it there may be a slight decrease," he said.

The Manhattan post office processes about 90,000 pieces of first class mail each day.

John Griesemer, chairman of the Postal Service Board of Governors, said that the Postal Service has been managing the costs of operating a growing universal delivery system and moving a volume of mail that has nearly doubled to more than 160 billion pieces this year.

The new policy includes a sweeping series of new rates that were recommended March 4 by the independent Postal Rate Commission after 10 months of studying the problems.

The last rate increase was in February 1985, when the price of a first-class stamp rose from 20 cents to 22 cents.

Postage rates will rise about 17.5 percent on average, with the biggest hikes for the so-called "junk" advertising mail and less of an increase for the typical consumer.

Users of first-class postage face a 14.7 percent hike, compared with jumps of 18.1 percent for newspapers and magazines and 24.9 percent for mailers of advertising material.

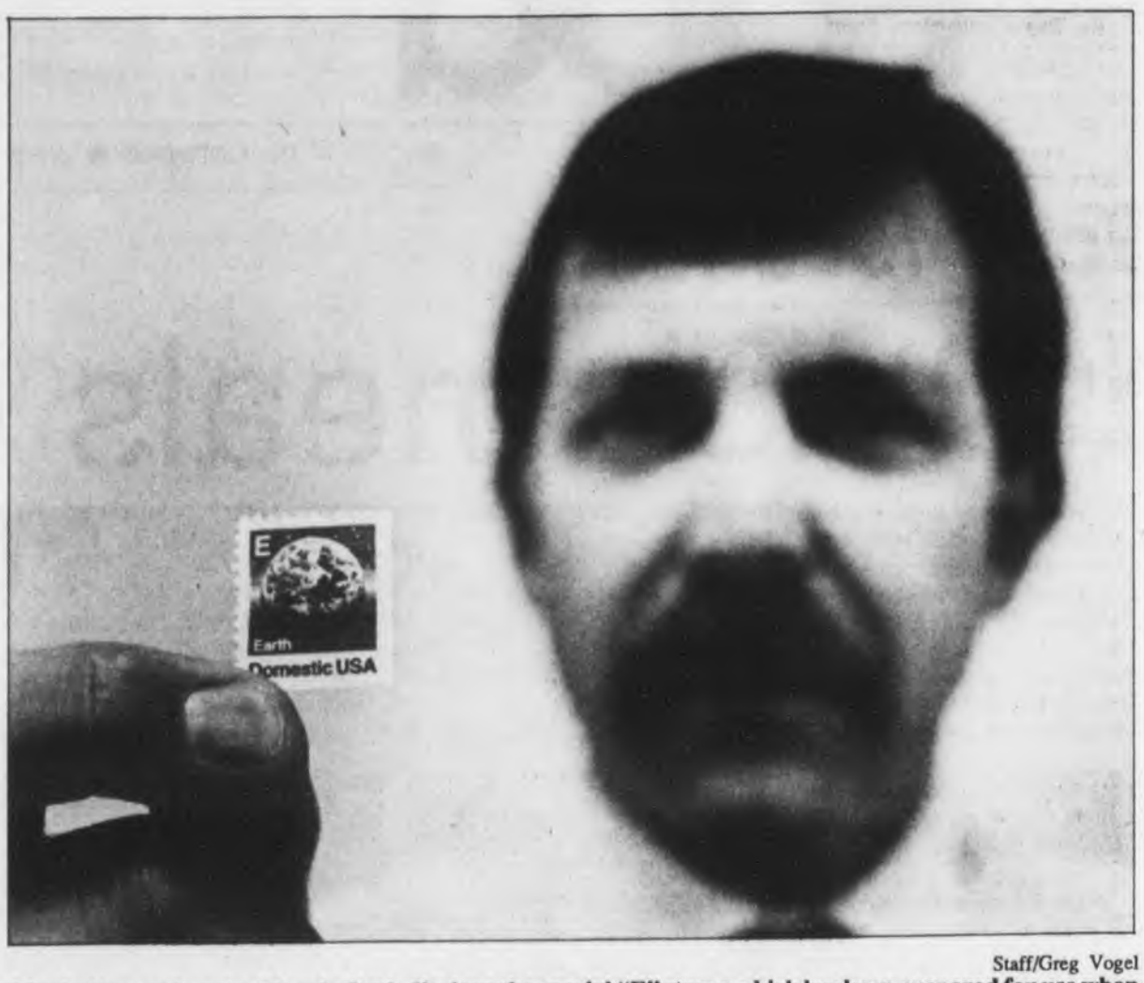
Postal officials have said the increases are needed to avoid deficits for the agency that could reach $5 billion in 1989. The Postal Service lost more than $220 million last year.

The increases are unrelated to recent reductions in window hours, collections and other service, however. Those cuts were forced by congressional action mandating a spending reduction by the agency.

The new 25-cent first-class rate means that sending a letter will take about the same bite from the average wallet as it did in 1932. Adjusted for inflation, the 3-cent postage rate introduced in 1932 would amount to 25.5 cents today.

The new 25-cent rate is just for the first ounce. The price for each additional ounce of mail will rise from 17 cents to 20 cents.

The cost to mail a post card will increase from 14 cents to 15 cents.



While those are the rates most readily noticed by consumers, the charges to businesses for mailing bills and advertising and sending books and magazines to American homes also affect individuals. Prices and subscription rates may well increase, with the postage costs being cited as a factor.

The new rates, for example, would add about $1.15 to the annual cost of mailing a weekly newsmagazine to one home. Utilities, credit card companies and department stores that bill once a month will have to spend about 36 cents more, annually, per customer. The cost of an average book club mailing will rise by about 50 cents.

The minimum rate for third-class mail will jump from 12.5 cents to 16.7 cents and the per-pound rate will rise from 38 cents to 48 cents.

For non-profit advertising mail, the minimum rate will increase from 8.5 cents to 8.7 cents.

Second-class mail, newspapers and magazines for the most part, will face overall increases of just over 18 percent.

Geographer to discuss landscaping

By The Collegian Staff

A leading geographer will discuss landscaping and its effects on the environment at 3:30 p.m. today in Dickens Hall room 206.

John Fraser Hart, professor of geography at the University of Minnesota, will discuss "Reading the Landscape." Hart is a specialist in the areas of the family farm and the future of small towns.

His presentation will include how geographers perceive and interpret the physical and human landscapes, said D.E. Kromm, professor of geography.

It will include a slide show which will show physical changes in lanscaping and what can be learned from the changes, he said.

"We wanted to bring a captivating and interesting person to promote professional identity to our majors," Kromm said.

Hart is the author of four books and has been a visiting professor to several universities. His lecture is sponsored by Gamma Theta Upsilon, student international geography honor society.

"Hart is an excellent writer and an outstanding speaker," Kromm said. "We are encouraging members of the University and general communities to take advantage of this opportunity to hear and visit with him."

An informal coffee will follow the lecture.

New campus signs aid visitors

By Robert Clasen
Collegian Reporter

A series of new directional signs, designed to help travelers find their way to various parts of the campus, has been put up on city streets and along highways leading to Manhattan.

"The administration, in trying to raise awareness in general, thought that (current) signage was not sufficient enough," said W. Lawrence Garvin, director of facilities planning.

The University recently negotiated with the city, county and state for the external (off-campus) signage, he said.

Garvin said all three agencies were cooperative.

"We paid for the signs. The rest was gratuitous," he said.

The administration asked facilities planning to clarify approaches to the campus, Garvin said.

The new signs direct visitors to three major segments of the campus: the sports complex (KSU Stadium and Fred Bramlage Coliseum), the Veterinary Medicine Center and the main campus.

Traffic is directed via three major routes — 17th Street to the information booth on the main campus by the Union, Bluemont Avenue to the main campus, and either end of Kimball Avenue to the Veterinary Medicine Center or the sports complex.

A proposal has been brought before the State Legislature to allow two 12- by 16-foot signs, containing the Wildcat logo, to be placed on I-70 near each of the two main exits.

Students recognized for cancer research

By The Collegian Staff

Cancer Research Awards were given to 16 undergraduate students for their their work in cancer research.

Certificates of recognition and a $500 award will be given to each student at an awards banquet in April.

The awards were given for the students' research in a cancer or cancer related laboratory with a faculty sponsor. They were required to complete a written proposal, conduct the research and complete a formal report.

Terry Johnson, director of the Division of Biology, said the award gives research opportunities to undergraduate students.

Of those students, Johnson said about 70 percent continue their education.

The experience of being part of a cancer research team is extermely valuable for students wanting to pursue a career in a research area, he said.

Funds for the Cancer Research Awards come from the Center for Basic Cancer Research at K-State.

"The center is based in the Division of Biology but is also involved with research across the campus on cancer," Johnson said.

using the dumpsite, how each one may have attributed to the waste site and copies of any invoices proving K-State's alleged contribution to the site.

"We haven't verified that any of our materials were disposed of at the site," Thompson said. "Even if they were, the amount of PCBs from the three transformers would constitute a miniscule portion of the total amount of hazardous waste at the Yellow Water Road site. The number of other potentially responsible parties could be in the hundreds."

The law is written, Thompson said, so that any involved party is potentially responsible for the entire cost of the cleanup.

Responsible parties could include current and former owners or operators of the dumpsite, persons who generated hazardous substances, or those involved in the transport, treatment or disposal of the materials at the site, she said.

Because the University doesn't have adequate information, administrators are unsure of what their choices will be in solving the problem, Thompson said.

The University paid $7,000 to American Electric Corporation to remove the transformers, and the company was licensed by the EPA to transport and remove hazardous waste, Miller said. The company has since gone bankrupt.

Under EPA regulations, the original owners of hazardous waste materials continue to be responsible for it even after its disposal, Miller said.

"You can never avoid that responsibility, even though you have hired licensed personnel to dispose of it," he said.

Thompson said that while the University is willing to cooperate, it must also be concerned with its defense.

"As a state supported institution of higher education we have the desire to cooperate in environmental protection activities, while at the same time reserving all of our legal defenses," Thompson said.

Both Miller and Thompson said that now the University can only wait for further information from the EPA.

"It could be a week, a month or a year (until the information arrives). It is hard to tell when working with an arm of the government. These things move slow," Thompson said.

Some of the information for this story was contributed by K-State News Services.

said. "Most everyone along here has been hit while coming in and out of their driveways."

She said although the speed limit in the area is 55 mph, many people ignore the signs.

"We need a speed zone here," she said. "People don't drive 55. They drive crazy. We kept joking we would be next, but we didn't expect anything like this."

Breymeyer, who is 26 weeks pregnant, is a secretary for the Department of Music at K-State. She and Seele, who works at Butter Krust Bread Thrift Store, ride to work together.

Seele's daughter, Paula, who works in the extension office at K-State, said the stretch of highway between Wamego and Manhattan is like an obstacle course.

"It's not surprising this happened," she said. "I've driven up here every day since 1974 and have seen so many accidents."

Police said both women were wearing safety belts when the accident occurred.

Paula Seele said she was thankful her mother and friend had been wearing safety belts.

"I work with the safety belt people at K-State," she said. "I keep telling people to use their safety belts. This makes a believer out of you."

about $6.3 million.

The Senate committee added $4.5 million more for improvements in specific programs at the universities.

However, Winter said the improvements would cost the state only about $2 million because senators had discovered extra revenue the universities will receive due to projected enrollment increases. The Senate committee also voted to make several cuts in additional money to individual universities that the House had approved.

Members of the Senate committee voted to provide the extra money for program improvements because they think education should be one of the Legislature's priorities this session, Winter said. Also, they thought it was better to provide the additional money to all six regents universities, rather than just to Fort Hays State University, as the House did, Winter said.

If the full Senate approves a different version of the bill than the version approved by the House, the bill will go to a joint conference committee, where lawmakers will try to work out a compromise version.

Scott makes it happen for 'Cats

Guard playing best ball in homestretch

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

"Saving the best for last" just might be the best way to describe Will Scott nowadays.

It was a year ago that Scott finished the season as the nation's third best shooter from 3-point range — shooting 52.9 percent. This year, though, the average has dropped a bit, down to 48.4 percent.

But in K-State's two NCAA tournament games thus far, Scott has regained superior shooting form — just in time for when it really counts.

In the 'Cats' first- and second-round wins over La Salle and DePaul, Scott has shot just over 63 percent from the 3-point stripe (12 of 19). And in the 66-58 win over DePaul, Scott led K-State with 23 points while establishing a K-State record with seven 3-pointers, falling one shot short of the Big Eight Conference record of eight.

"Will's been playing as well as he has been in the two years that he's been at Kansas State."
—Lon Kruger

Scott doesn't really know how to describe his success from the 3-point range, but his actions on the court have spoken just as well as words.

Since the K-State's 77-67 win over Nebraska March 2 in which Scott scored 18 points, Scott's actions have spoken very loudly, as he has averaged 17.8 points per game.

"Will's been shooting the ball well for the last month," K-State basketball coach Lon Kruger said. "He's had a lot of confidence and he's looking (for the shot)."

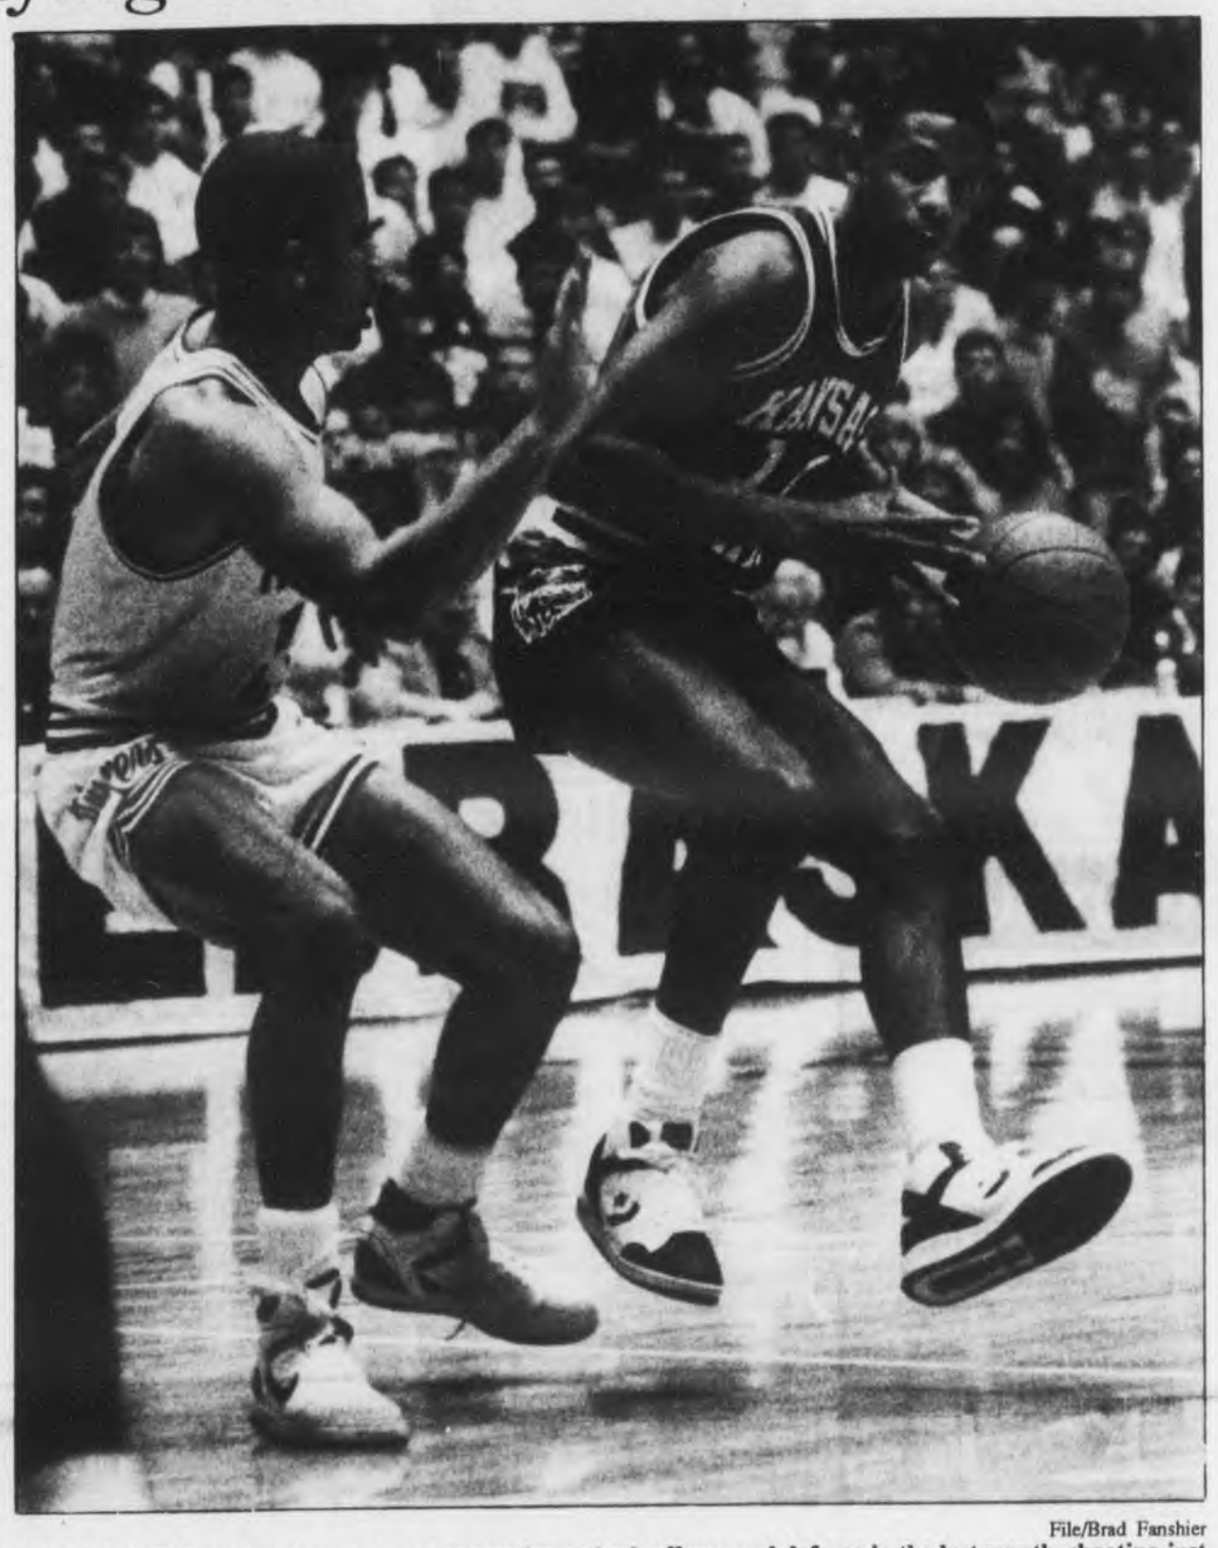
"Will's been playing as well as he has been in the two years that he's been at Kansas State."

Mitch Richmond, Scott's All-American teammate, knows what it's like to play against the 6-foot-2 senior. Richmond played against Scott in the junior college ranks, and he definitely prefers being on the same side of the ball rather than the opposing side.

"(Will) moves around the court almost unnoticed," Richmond said. "The big guys get the ball down low and then kick it out to him, and he just sinks the 3-pointer."

Scott credits his increased offensive production to improved defensive efforts, an analysis Kruger agrees with.

"Basically, I got a little bit more agressive on the defensive end," Scott said. "That just led to more agressive offense. It led to more steals and rebounds.



"I started concentrating more," he added. "I'm also getting squared up to the basket and releasing (the ball) a little bit quicker."

Scott's has possibly his biggest task awaiting him Friday in Pontiac, Mich., as he and the rest of the 'Cats go up against the Purdue Boilermakers, the No. 1 seed in the Midwest region.

Scott might have the duty of guarding Boilermaker guard Troy Lewis, another player who is no slouch beyond the 19'9" line. Lewis is averaging just over 17 points per game and is shooting about 40 percent from 3-point range.

"I don't comprare myself to Troy Lewis," Scott said. "I just go out and try and do what I can do best to help the team get a win."

"I think that I might guard him because he's the number two guard on their team and I'm the same here," Scott said. "But it depends on whether we play (man-to-man) or zone."

File/Brad Fanshier

K-State's Will Scott has become more aggressive on both offense and defense in the last month, shooting just over 63 percent from outside the three-point range in the first two rounds of the NCAA Tournament.

Parrish announces hiring of new coach for defensive line

From Wire Reports

K-State football coach Stan Parrish has announced an addition to the Wildcat grid coaching staff.

Jon Tenuta, an assistant coach at Marshall University the past two years, will join the K-State staff and will be responsible for the defensive line.

Tenuta, 31, served as defensive coordinator and coach of the defensive secondary last season when Marshall compiled a 10-5 record and advanced to the NCAA Division I-AA championship game. In his first season with the Thundering Herd, he guided the defensive backs and served as recruiting coordinator.

Prior to going to Marshall, Tenuta coached the defensive secondary from 1984-85 at Vanderbilt. In 1983, he was a graduate assistant at Maryland where he was responsible for the defensive secondary and special teams. He also worked with the defensive backs, special teams and linebackers while serving as a part-time assistant for three years at Virginia.

Tenuta, a native of Columbus, Ohio, graduated from Virginia in 1981 with a bachelor's degree in physical education. He was a three-year football letterman there, was the team's Most Valuable Player in 1980 and was a three-time Atlantic Coast Conference Honor Roll selection.

"Jon is very young but all his experience has been at the major college level," Parrish said. "He has coached all facets of the defense. I expect him to inject a lot of energy as well as bring a solid coaching background to our defense."

With the addition of Tenuta to the Wildcat staff, Dave Flegal, who has served as defensive line coach the past two years, will coach the 'Cats' offensive tackles and tight ends.

Parrish also announced that Rich Rachel will assume additional duties on the staff as assistant head coach. Rachel has been the team's inside linebacker coach the last two seasons.

Golfers finish 17th at Baylor tourney

From Wire Reports

Despite improving its score by four strokes from the first round, K-State's men's golf team still finished 17th in a field of 24 teams at the Baylor Invitational which concluded Tuesday in Waco, Texas at the Par 72, 7,123-yard Cottonwood Creek Golf Course.

K-State carded a 311 team total over the final 18 holes to go along with its first round score of 315 for a 36-hole total of 626. The Wildcats had entered the final day of action tied for 17th.

The top K-State individual score was turned in by Jeff Sedorcek who fired rounds of 76-75 for a 151. With that total, he missed finishing in the top 20 by just one stroke. In addition to Sedorcek, other Wildcat individual totals included Chris Gomez 81-75—156; Troy Keller 79-80—159; Daran Neuschafer 80-80—160; and John Shields 81-84—165.

Host Baylor claimed the team crown with a two-day total of 600. Paris Junior College was second at 605.

K-State's next action will be April 7-8 when they host the K-State Classic.

Jackson remains an enigma to Royals' management

By The Associated Press

HAINES CITY, Fla. — Bo and baseball. Will he make the choice, or will the Kansas City Royals?

"It's going to be a very tough decision," Manager John Wathan said. "We might risk losing him if Bo is sent to the minors. But we have to do what is best for the team."

More likely, Bo will do what Bo wants to do — just like he does on the football field.

There are some, and Wathan is among them, who believe Bo Jackson could become the greatest baseball player ever.

Others, including many who have seen Jackson flail at curves and misplay fly balls, aren't so sure.

Then there's Bo. He's not saying. Bo — he refers to himself in the third person, as in "Bo can be a funny guy" — is not talking this spring.

He says he is dedicating himself to baseball and wants to avoid any distractions.

Sound familar?

"He said he wasn't going to play football and then he did," Wathan said. "They offered him a ton of money and he doesn't come from a wealthy family."

"Hey, he changed his mind," Wathan said. "We all do that."

Except that when Jackson turned his attention to a new "hobby," he seemed to turn off baseball.

Jackson was batting .253 with 18 home runs and 45 RBI in 79 games when Los Angeles Raiders owner Al Davis signed him to a $7.6 million, five-year contract shortly before the All-Star break last year. After that, Jackson hit just .193 with four homers and eight RBI in 37 games.

"All of a sudden, he seemed to drift," teammate George Brett said. "He had good numbers in July and he didn't add much to it."

He did, however, build his football legacy. Jackson, a Heisman Trophy winner at Auburn and No. 1 NFL draft choice, ran for a Raiders record 221 yards in one game and kept running over defenders.

Brett was among many Royals who sharply spoke out when Jackson signed with the Raiders. They claimed Jackson misled the club.

Kansas City fans skewered Jackson. They littered Arrowhead Stadium with footballs when Jackson came to town to play in the fierce Raiders-Chiefs rivalry.

There was talk between Jackson and Royals management. At first, it appeared Jackson would be forced to make a choice. Royals co-owner Avron Fogelman later said there is no ultimatum, that Jackson can play both sports.

The scars of Jackson's feud with the Royals seem to have healed. There was a team meeting, some give-and-take, and he is now one of them, sort of.

The Royals still marvel at his monstrous batting-practice shots and how he runs, fast and powerful with his legs apart spraying up dirt.

They admire his muscular body, but no longer cluster around him, as if trying to win his attention. He is just a baseball player, albeit a special one.

There is no guarantee Bo will be with the team on opening day. He is competing with Gary Thurman to start in left field. Thurman batted .300 throughout the minors, impressed Wathan in Class AAA last season and hit .296 in 27 games with the Royals.

Kansas City beats Pirates in 10th inning

By The Associated Press

BRADENTON, Fla. — Mackey Sasser's throwing error on Brad Wellman's bouncer to third enabled Bill Pecota to score the winning run in the 10th inning as the Kansas City Royals beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 5-3 in 10 innings Tuesday.

Pecota walked and stole second to lead off the Royals' 10th inning. One out later, Wellman hit a grounder to Sasser, who threw over the head of first baseman Sid Bream for a two-base error, which allowed Pecota to score.

The Royals added another run on a pinch-hit single by Ed Hearn, who scored Wellman.

The exhibition game was played at the Pirates' McKechnie Field.

The Royals went ahead 3-2 in the ninth inning when Bo Jackson hit a one-out solo home run off Pirates' reliever Jim Gott.

The Pirates tied the game in the bottom of the ninth inning against Royals' reliever Steve Farr. With two outs, pinch-hitter Barry Bonds walked and Bobby Bonilla followed with a pinch-hit single. Bonds then scored on a single by John Cangelosi.

The Royals scored in the first inning when Jackson walked, stole second and scored on a single by Danny Tartabull.

The Pirates came back in the second inning on Darnell Coles' leadoff homer off starter Charlie Leibrandt. They went ahead 2-1 in the third when Cangelosi doubled and scored on Felix Fermin's single.

Farr was the winner and Gott was the loser. The Royals are 14-6 and the Pirates are 9-12 in Grapefruit League play.

Fogler plans to stay at WSU

By The Associated Press

WICHITA, Kan. — Coach Eddie Fogler says he's staying at Wichita State University even though Texas and others might be interested in wooing him away to head their basketball programs.

Fogler, 39, and WSU agreed on a one-year extension Monday that, if it is signed next month, will mean his contract runs through the 1991-1992 season.

In recent weeks Fogler has been mentioned as a candidate for head coaching spots at Texas, Providence and Rutgers.

"I am not a candidate for any other coaching position," Fogler said Monday. "I plan on being at Wichita State."

Fogler signed a pact with a base annual salary of $65,000 in March 1986. His base now stands at $68,250, but supplemental income from basketball camps, radio and television shows and an atheltic shoe endorsement contract reportedly equals his WSU pay.

Athletic Director Tom Shupe said WSU's Intercollegiate Athletic Association must review the proposed extension and approve adjustment of Fogler's base pay. Shupe declined to say how much of an adjustment he would recommend.

Fogler guided Wichita State to two consecutive NCAA first round berths in his first two years at the helm, becoming the first coach in the school's history to do so. The Shockers suffered first round losses to DePaul last week and St. John's in 1987. Fogler was 22-11 last year and 20-10 this season.

NAIA ups academic standards

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Legislation that would require student-athletes to make progress toward their degree to continue their eligibility was approved Tuesday by the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics.

The legislation sets entrance standards athletes must meet to play in their first year, and the amount of credit hours which the athlete must pass each year to continue to remain eligible.

"This represents a giant stride and one that will allow us to say to all of our constituencies that we are placing athletics in a proper perspective as an important part of our institutions," said Dr. Jefferson Farris, executive director of the NAIA.

"This clearly places the NAIA on record as the athletic association which demonstrates ... that only bona fide college students will represent our institutions in our athletic programs."

The NAIA is an association of about 500 small colleges and universities.

Some educators praised the legislation.

"This is really a pioneering effort by the NAIA to put emphasis on academic progress," said Dr. Richard Rosser, president of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities.

U.S., Soviets talk about civil rights

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze held a "businesslike, straight-forward, constructive" session Tuesday on nuclear arms control and human rights. They also opened a satellite link with Moscow to reduce the risk of accidental war.

Their 6½ hours together were not entirely harmonious. Charles E. Redman, the State Department spokesman, said there were "a few laughs, a few arguments." He declined to provide any details.

Shultz then extended the talks into the evening, treating Shevardnadze to a buffet of hot dogs, hamburgers and potato salad — and arranged for "That's Entertainment," the nostalgic Hollywood musical retrospective, to be shown in the State Department's Ben Franklin reception room.

Despite the party atmosphere, Shultz and Shevardnadze intended to continue their preparations for the next superpower summit meeting. A date — speculation centers on late May — may be set after Shevardnadze calls today on President Reagan at the White House.

More than half of Tuesday's discussion dealt with human rights, Redman said.

Shultz has been pressing the Soviets to relax their emigration restrictions and liberalize cultural and religious practices. The Soviets, on the other hand, have made a point of the homeless problem in the United States and the what they describe as a poor civil rights record.

"This time, it was a much more detailed discussion," said Vadim Perfilyev, the deputy Soviet foreign ministry spokesman.

During the day, Shultz and Shevardnadze also received reports from U.S. and Soviet arms control experts. The conflicts in Afghanistan and Nicaragua, wars in which the two superpowers have armed rival forces, were deferred until today.

The arms control experts are trying to mesh U.S. and Soviet drafts of treaty provisions to scrap 30 to 50 percent of the two sides' long-range bombers, missiles and submarines and to devise measures to ensure compliance with the accord.

The treaty is the projected centerpiece of the summit meeting Reagan will hold in Moscow later in the spring with General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

The treaty drafts also include data on the size and locations of U.S. and Soviet long-range weapons. Assistant Secretary of State Rozanne L. Ridgway said Monday there were "blanks" in the information both sides submitted. She said "lots and lots" of disagreements remain.

Taking a break from their day-long talks, Shultz and Shevardnadze presided at the opening of a new communications center designed to reduce the risk of nuclear war.

While you polish your design and editing skills in a real-world, professional environment.
University News is looking for an exceptionally talented graduate student with solid newswriting and editing skills and a demonstrated flair for publication design to serve as editor of In-View, the university's twice- monthly faculty/staff newsletter.
We'll provide you with a $20,000 budget, state-of-art desktop publishing system, clerical and office support and the counsel and assistance of our professional staff. You'll manage the budget and design, write, edit and publish what we want to be one of the best and brightest newsletters around. We think it will take you about 20 hours a week to get the job done.
If you have the skills and whether you can start now, this summer or at the beginning of the fall term (candidates who can start earlier will be given preference), we'd like to hear from you right away. Pick up an application at University News, 9 Anderson Hall.

Truce reached
Sandinistas, rebels agree to cease-fire

By The Associated Press

SAPOA, Nicaragua — The leftist Sandinista government and U.S.-supported Contra rebels signed an agreement Wednesday for a 60-day cease-fire to start April 1, both sides announced in a joint communique.

The two sides said that during the cease-fire, the process for negotiating a permanent truce will be worked out. Within the first 15 days of the 60-day truce, the rebels agreed to move into specified zones in Nicaragua.

The Contras also have agreed to accept only humanitarian aid from a neutral organization.

The Nicaraguan government said it would grant gradual amnesty and allow all political exiles to return to the country without fear of persecution.

The announcement was made after Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Managua, offered a brief prayer asking that Nicaragua be blessed for "all it has suffered."

Both Contras and Sandinistas earlier had agreed to a temporary truce while the negotiations, which began

Two attackers shoot grenades at embassy

By The Associated Press

BOGOTA, Colombia — Two attackers thought to be leftist guerrillas fired rocket-propelled grenades at the U.S. Embassy Wednesday night and an embassy spokesman said the roof was slightly damaged, but no one was hurt.

The assailants apparently were siding with Panama's military in its standoff with the United States.

The embassy's chief security officer said the assailants fired rocket-propelled grenades. He spoke on condition his name not be used for fear of reprisals.

Police initially said rockets were fired at the building from a distance of 150 feet. Witnesses later said they saw men firing a recoilless rifle.

"The round apparently hit the fence surrounding the embassy and exploded prematurely," the security officer said. "We think it went off over over the building. We went up on the roof and there was absolutely no damage."

U.S. Embassy spokesman Steven Gangstead said in a telephone interview that a projectile hit the embassy roof, causing minor damage.

President plans Moscow summit

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan announced Wednesday he would go to Moscow from May 29 to June 2 for his fourth summit meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev and his first visit to a nation he once branded an "evil empire."

The five-day visit will mark the first trip to Moscow by an American president since Richard Nixon's 1974 summer meeting with Leonid Brezhnev. Later that same year, in November, Gerald Ford met with Brezhnev in the Soviet port city of Vladivostok.

The summit's intended centerpiece was the signing of a treaty to scrap 30 percent to 50 percent of the superpowers' long-range bombers, missiles and submarines. However, Reagan already has suggested an agreement will not be ready, saying time is too limited.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze reported Wednesday night that differences remained between the two sides on the accord.

The two said in a joint statement they would meet again in Moscow on April 21-25 and also in May, but did not indicate where that session would be held.

"Both sides have worked hard and some progress has been realized in a number of areas, but much more needs to be done," the statement said.

Co-op supporters rally for cause

By Janet Swanson
Campus Editor

Ensuring access to affordable, quality child care is not only a campus problem. It is a national one, according to speakers at a KSU Childcare Cooperative rally held Wednesday in front of Anderson Hall.

More than 200 students and faculty members rallied and 110 people signed letters to University President Jon Wefald to show their support for the cooperative.

"I want to see the administration support the child co-op. Their decision (of whether or not to help fund it) is going to have a tremendous effect," said Dale Bushyhead, junior in electrical engineering.

Volunteers passed out fliers and balloons while almost 100 children ate their sack lunches on Anderson's lawn.

Susan Farr, rally committee member, said the rally was planned to provide information to anyone interested in the cooperative, and its services.

"It was planned mainly to bring awareness not only to K-State, but throughout Manhattan and the state of problems that are being faced related to child care," she said.

Tammy Rankin, lead teacher at the co-op, said the co-op offers staff members and students a quality program.

"We want K-State to be aware that we are here," Rankin said.

"The main problem is the deficit that we have acquired and teacher salaries," she said.

John Daly, assistant professor of Russian history, has a child who attends the cooperative.

"This is my first year here. When I came to interview a year ago, I spent two hours touring the day care center. It was the determining factor in my coming here," Daly said.

Student Senate denied a $1-per-semester student fee increase for full-time students and 50 cents per semester for part-time students two weeks ago. Proceeds from the increase were to be given to the co-op to help cover part of its projected loss of $75,000.

Marilyn Johnson, senior in social science, is the mother of one of the 192 children that attend the co-op.

"I pay (student fees) for other things that are more important for younger students. This is an important issue," Johnson said.

Jon Hickel, junior in business administration, agrees with Johnson.

"They deserve to have quality care. Not all students use the (Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex), but everyone pays for it," Hickel said.

Daly said he believes the responsibility to fund the co-op rests equally on the faculty and students.

"I think their (Student Senate's) decision was very shortsighted," he said. "I question an administration that can find $700,000 to help clean up a waste site in northern Florida, but can't find a tenth of that for child care.

"The cooperative is the true margin of excellence at KSU."

Wildcats Mitch Richmond and Ron Meyer greet fans before leaving for Pontiac, Mich., for the Midwest Regional Semi-finals of the NCAA Basketball Tournament.

Kruger amazed by 1,500 fans at Wildcats' Pontiac send-off

By Eric Barnhart
Collegian Reporter

K-State gave the men's basketball team an energetic send-off to Pontiac, Mich., Wednesday with a pep rally outside Ahearn Field House that attracted more than 1,500 people.

The 'Cats are on their way to the NCAA Midwest Regional and will meet Purdue University Friday.

K-State will be competing in the semi-finals of the Midwest Regional against the No. 3 team in the nation after posting victories over La Salle and DePaul in the first and second rounds, respectively.

Mitch Holthus, voice of the Wildcats, was the rally's host and introduced each of the team members and coaches. With the crowd applauding each of the introductions, it was then time for coach Lon Kruger to take over.

"All you guys are really something special," Kruger said to the cheering crowd. "We've known that all year, but you keep amazing us."

Kruger, who is in his second year at the helm of the Wildcat team, has compiled a two-year record of 44-19, which ranks as the second-highest winning percentage among coaches in the Big Eight Conference. After returning to his alma mater where he once starred in a purple and white uniform, Kruger has guided the K-State program to back-to-back appearances in the NCAA Tournament, with a record of 3-1 at that post-season tourney.

Speaking for the players was senior center Ron Meyer, who expressed the team's appreciation of the student support.

"This has been a great year so far," Meyer said. "I think you all have a lot to do with it. Coach told us we were going to a pep rally, but coming here makes me more nervous than playing in front of 30,000 people. We really appreciate it."

As for the response of the students to this year's success of the Wildcats, many are as excited as the players.

"I've been waiting for this since around 1980 when Rolando (Blackman) was here," said Jim Yoakum, junior in education. "We're finally back in the 'Sweet Sixteen.'"

Some avid K-State fans are even going so far as to make the trip to Pontiac.

As Tom Kyzer, senior in management, said: "I'll feel a lot better when I'm sitting in my chair in the Silverdome with purple on from head to toe, thinking there's no place like dome."

The Wildcats, who currently have a record of 24-8, have posted some impressive statistics in NCAA Tournament play:

- 18 trips to the NCAA Tournament, ranking them seventh in the nation for appearances;
- 26 wins in tournament play;
- a record of 11-4 in the 1980s;
- seven trips to the "Sweet Sixteen;"
- six appearances in the final eight;

Nicaraguan troops in Honduras

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — A reported 300 Nicaraguan troops entered Honduran territory Wednesday in the same region where Sandinista soldiers fought U.S.-supported Contra rebels last week, a Honduran military source said.

"We don't know the purpose of this new entry and violation of our country, but the situation is being studied by the high command," said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

"It's a matter of small armed groups of Sandinistas. Because of that, the state of alert continues for all combat units of the armed forces," he said.

The location was given as the San Andres de Bocay region in Olancho province, but no other details were available.

In Washington, a government source speaking on condition of anonymity, said there had been unconfirmed reports that an estimated 300 Sandinista soldiers had entered Honduras.

Pentagon officials in Washington said earlier Wednesday that, unless the military situation in the region changes, the approximately 3,200 U.S. troops sent to Honduras last week would return home early next week.

Wanted man seen on MTV

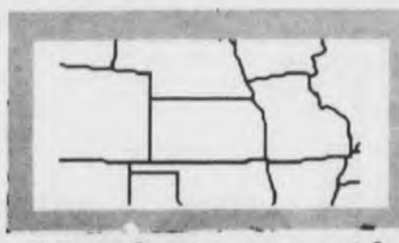
DAYTONA BEACH SHORES, Fla. — A man suspected of hitting another man over the head and robbing him was spotted on MTV and arrested, authorities said.

Kent Joseph Manor, 26, who was wanted on charges of robbery and maiming in the attack, was in a crowd watching the music-video program's "Remote Control" show, Capt. Francis Monaco said Tuesday.

Manor, a dancer who had worked for the victim, Raleigh Thompson, is accused of hitting Thompson repeatedly over the head and robbing him in the driveway of Thompson's Hampton, Va., home, last September.

Mickey Mouse visits Mofford

PHOENIX — Acting Gov. Rose Mofford and her staff sang the "Mickey Mouse Club" song Wednesday and posed for pictures with the cartoon mouse and former Mouseketeer Annette Funicello.



"I don't think it will stay," Mofford said as she tried to fit a set of fake mouse ears over her beehive hairdo. The governor also donned a black and red "Mickey Mouse Club" jacket with her name on it.

The occasion was a proclamation recognizing April as cable television month in connection with a charity drive by the Disney cable channel and local cable distributors.

Food stamp ruling upheld

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court said Wednesday the government may limit a family's eligibility for food stamps when a family member is on strike.

The court said a 1981 federal law imposing such limits does not violate any constitutional rights. The 5-3 decision reversed a federal judge's 1986 ruling that had struck down the law.

Manhattan artist honored

TOPEKA — Gov. Mike Hayden unveiled the fourth painting in the Kansas Wildlife Art Series in his office Wednesday, honoring Manhattan artist Jerry D. Thomas.

Thomas' painting, "Kansas Daybreak — Greater Prairie Chicken," was picked last month from among 41 entries to be the 1988 Kansas Wildlife Art Series painting. The series began in 1984.

Wednesday was Kansas Wildlife Heritage Day, with state wildlife groups having displays on the first floor of the Capitol to commemorate it.

Thomas is a graduate of Southwestern College in Winfield, and has been the artist for a variety of commercial firms and organizations designing their logos. He is an active member of Ducks Unlimited and has donated works to help support conservation groups.

Pets may require sterilization

TOPEKA — A bill designed to decrease the number of unwanted dogs and cats received the House's tentative approval Wednesday.

The measure would require persons adopting dogs and cats from a city or county pound or a licensed humane society to have the animals sterilized. The persons adopting the pets would have to leave a deposit with the pound or society to ensure that the pet would be sterilized.

The House amended the bill to prevent a pound or humane society from requiring that the neutering or spaying of the animals be performed by a single veterinarian or from among a group of veterinarians.

Fire chief's home burns down

EDNA, Kan. — The home of Jerry Winters Jr., newly appointed fire chief of Edna, was destroyed by fire Wednesday.

Winters and his family were not home when the fire broke out about 6 a.m. Edna Police Chief Joe Shaffer, who lives about a block away, said he saw the roof on fire when he looked outside.

Volunteer firefighters from Edna and Altamont-Mount Pleasant Township had the fire under control by about 6:30 a.m. and totally extinguished by 7:20 a.m., Shaffer said.

The house and contents were declared a total loss. Shaffer said the fire appeared to have started from an electrical source.

Edna, a community of about 500, is located near the Oklahoma border in Labette County, south of Parsons and east of Coffeyville.

Hayden 'proud' of his role in senior citizen issues

Staff/Steve Wolgast

After a short address, Gov. Mike Hayden greets senior citizens during a reception Wednesday at the Seniors' Service Center. He told the group that he passed into law a bill that will keep families together even if castastrophic illness occurs.

By Shelly Tierney
Collegian Reporter

Gov. Mike Hayden visited K-State and a local senior citizen's center Wednesday. At both of the events he told constituents of issues he has pursued in their behalf.

Hayden said he successfully got the Division of Assets bill passed this year with a unanimous vote in the House of Representatives and the Senate.

"It's something that should have been done a long time ago and we're sure proud to have been able to play a role in getting it passed for the senior citizens in Kansas," Hayden said at a "meet and greet" session at the Seniors' Service Center.

The law is designed to give more financial protection to elderly couples in the event of a catastrophic illness.

Before passage of the bill, elderly couples were obligated to use their joint assets to pay for medical care for the sick spouse. Medicaid benefits often did not become effective until most of the joint assets had been depleted.

Under the new law, the couple's assets are divided equally between them providing for more financial security for each one.

"It will help keep a lot of our families together, especially when catastrophic illness unfortunately strikes some of our citizens," Hayden said.

Hayden also discussed the loss of double deductions for senior citizens under the Federal Tax Reform Act of 1986.

The actions of the government "caused the loss of a double deduction which our senior citizens were able to take on their Kansas income tax," Hayden said.

Hayden proposed a bill to restore double deduction benefits to senior citizens. The bill passed through the House and the Senate. It is now in conference committee "where they are working out the differences," Hayden said.

"One thing they both agree on is that the senior citizen double deduction must be restored for the next taxing year. I feel very confident, even though we might not get a bill for another two or three weeks, that when we do get a bill it will be a bill which restores the double deduction for the senior citizens."

Hayden said he thinks his proposed bill on qualified admissions to Kansas universities, which was voted down recently by the House, will come up in next year's session.

"I am very supportive of the bill," he said. "It's an excellent way to prepare young people for universities."

Hayden's bill to bring the death penalty back to Kansas was also voted down. It passed through the House, but the Senate voted it down by three votes.

"It's the Democrats who changed their vote to "no" when they realized

Senate should approve MOE without hesitation

There may be hope.

The Senate Ways and Means Committee on Tuesday endorsed a proposal to provide Board of Regents institutions with the full amount of money they requested under their Margin of Excellence proposal. Under the MOE, K-State would receive about $304,000 — every penny of which is greatly needed.

All that remains between making MOE proposal and fact is approval from the Kansas Senate. If that approval is given, K-State will then be placed on a level equal with its peer institutions, said Charles Reagan, assistant to President Jon Wefald.

Without the three-year program to upgrade salaries, "we'll be losing our best faculty," Reagan said, adding that the committee's endorsement is "good news."

Indeed it is. The MOE proposal is the first serious attempt to increase the money regents universities receive, and the Senate should approve it without reservation.

After all, the future of the regents universities — including K-State — hangs in the balance.

NAIA makes good move by upgrading standards

The National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics took a positive step Tuesday when its members voted to strengthen the association's academic standards.

Under the legislation adopted, student athletes will be required to make progress toward their degrees to continue their eligibility. In addition, the legislation sets entrance standards that athletes must meet to play in their first year and the number of credit hours the athlete must pass each year to retain eligibility.

The NAIA, an association of about 500 small colleges and universities, now has standards similar to the National Collegiate Athletic Association's. Specifically, students must meet two of three requirements, including a score of 15 on the ACT test or 700 on the SAT, a high school grade point average of 2.0 on a 4.0 scale, or ranking in the top one-half of their high school class.

The legislation takes effect in the fall of 1989, and currently enrolled student athletes are exempt.

Many educators justly applauded the new standards, saying they increase the emphasis on academic performance and bolster the NAIA image nationwide. As one educator said: "We must restore the idea that athletics is the secondary consideration or emphasis among the student athletes."

With the new academic standards, the NAIA has effectively caught up with the NCAA, which has had tougher standards since it passed Proposition 48.

With the new NAIA standards, students just out of high school won't have the temptation of enrolling at an NAIA school simply because of easier standards. That in itself will make the NAIA's name more credible.

And moreover, the standards ensure that once enrolled, the student-athlete will keep his or her priorities straight.

'Cat fans demonstrate why they're among best

If NCAA championships are based on fans' enthusiasm, Wildcat fans won the tournament hands down at the pep rally Wednesday.

More than 1,500 devoted fans showed up in front of Ahearn Field House to wave the 'Cats off as they headed to Pontiac, Mich.

And in so doing, the fans showed why they were selected for the Big Eight Conference Sportsmanship Award last year and why they deserve it again this year.

Coach Lon Kruger said it all when he said the team represents K-State and that K-State represents the team. In addition, team members have said they wouldn't have gotten as far as they have without the support of their fans.

While that is easy to say, it is nonetheless true. Just ask a player how difficult it is to play in front of hostile fans.

The success of this year's team is amplified considering it plays in one of the toughest conferences in the nation — the Big Eight, which has three representatives in the "Sweet Sixteen."

Team members also maintain a good attitude. Despite this being the last year for Ahearn, the team has never looked back — only forward. Nor has the team ever spoken the phrase "give up."

Although the success of a team is usually determined by how far it goes in tournaments such as the one in which the 'Cats are playing, it can be said that the Wildcat team's 1987-88 campaign has produced a season ranking among its best ever. Even if the 'Cats fall victim to a tough Purdue team Friday night.

But don't let Purdue hear that. Because if spirit and heart have anything to do with the outcome, the 'Cats will emerge from Friday night's game a member of the "Great Eight" or "Elite Eight" or whatever else anyone wants to call it.

And the Wildcat tradition will continue.

No responsibility

Editor,

I would like to respond to Wally Brockhoff's column "Magazine not negligent in running ad" in the March 9 Collegian. It seems we are living in an age in which people no longer want to accept responsibility for their actions. Certainly the victim's husband and the hired assassin should be held responsible and prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

I also believe that the magazine should be held responsible. Freedom of the press is a right protected by our U.S. Constitution. However, our forefathers believed that rights and privileges carry an amount of responsibility. Granted, there is no possible way for publishers to follow every person who places an ad in their publication to ensure they intend no harm from the product of the ad. Yet, I believe that one should do everything possible to ensure the advertisement will not be used to produce harm.

In this case, the ad itself was enough to raise a few questions before publication. What type of assignment would require jungle expertise in the United States? Why would it be necessary for an applicant to be a Marine or Vietnam veteran? The likelihood of getting straight answers to these questions is slim to none, but at least the publisher would have taken reasonable precautions before printing the ad.

No, we cannot guarantee that a service we provide will always be used in the manner we intend. But we should do everything reasonably within our power to eliminate any potential danger coming from our service. For too long the media have been acting irresponsibly with privileged information, using the First Amendment as their excuse. It is time for not only the media but America to recall the words "To whom much is given, much will be expected."

AIDS information

Editor,

A recent question in the "Answers on AIDS" column asks why "AIDS is such a big deal." Both the question and answer appear to be misleading. It is true that some people have overreacted to the possibility of acquiring the AIDS virus through casual contact. However, much is left unsaid.

Why is AIDS such a big deal? In January, the Centers for Disease Control estimated that 1 million to 1.5 million persons in the United States are infected by the AIDS virus, and many of them are not aware of the fact they are infected. Some researchers believe that as many as 50 percent, and perhaps even 100 percent of those infected iwth the virus, can be expected to develop AIDS and to die from AIDS. However, many years may pass before the disease expresses itself.

It will be years before we know the full impact of the viral infection. We do not currently have a vaccine that can protect persons from infection and it is unknown whether an effective vaccine will ever be available.

The precise risk to students at K-State cannot be determined because it is not known how many students on campus are already infected. However, it is not unrealistic to estimate that there may be as many as 35 infected students here (based on a rate of 1.9 infected persons out of every 1,000 persons in the United States, a recent CDC estimate), many of whom may not know that they are infected.

Under these circumstances the surest way to avoid acquiring AIDS is to limit intimate sexual activity to a mutually monogamous relationship and to avoid IV drugs. Other ways to reduce risk would be to use condoms with every sexual encounter and/or to use only sterile IV needles if using IV drugs.

If you value yourself and your future, please take the necessary precautions to avoid becoming infected with the AIDS virus!

Clear idea

Editor,

First it was about how Americans interact with foreign students. As foreign students, it got me and a lot of my friends mad. I hoped that things will get better, but they never did.

Another aimless column appeared, this time about the difference between basic and applied research. The authority to speak on the topic being justified on the basis, "Hey, it's a free country!" — as though the rest of the world is enslaved.

On March 4, it was a column about maybe "crying" or maybe "world hunger" or maybe "death" or maybe about "Anand" (the Indian movie.) The three columns I have just mentioned have one thing in common, apart from the fact that they were published in the Collegian. All three were written by the same author.

The latest column of the "Winnie" series is a sort of multiple choice question where the reader is to choose from a variety of topics presented in a single column. When I first read the article, I thought it was too intellectual for me to comprehend, but I wasn't sure. So I asked an intellectual American friend of mine how he felt about the article. He replied with a sarcastic smile which later broke into a loud laughter: "It is something about world hunger."

I opted not to discuss the column further since I was not sure if my friend got that idea by reading the column or by looking at the picture of the author.

I think I got my idea across.

Dearly bought

Editor,

Mathematics needs all the good press it can get. But that in the unsigned Collegian editorial of Feb. 26 was dearly bought. To say, as it did, that German universities require an American doctorate of their mathematics faculty is a real howler. (But understandably many Germans on campus were less than amused.)

How could anyone entertain such a zany idea? Maybe the language of instruction there is English too! The most charitable interpretation of this statement may be that, say, in contrast to the use of foreign TAs in our universities, no American without a Ph.D. could teach in a German university. While not quite true, it's at least not prima facie absurd. In fact, another level of achievement beyond the doctorate, the habilitation (in many respects a second thesis), is required of prospective university faculty in Germany.

The finer points

Editor,

When foreign students come to the United States to take advantage of our learning institutions, it's sad to see that they cannot recognize the finer points of this, our great democracy. The March 11 commentary by Rizwan Mithani ("Americans governed by strange behavior") is proof that foreign students need to take a more in-depth look into what makes this nation great.

For example, Mithani's comments on the Washington Monument were entirely without reason. I would like to clarify that the monument was not built for egotistic reasons but instead to honor one of our founding fathers and first president. To make light of our foods is amusing. However, you should be forewarned that Americans have certain values and principles that are sacred and not to be overlooked.

It could be seen that the comments on American women were also put together with little thought. I quote: "The American girls are charming and pretty. They have little practical common sense amid a vastness of attractive unreasonableness." It is apparent that the writer of these comments hasn't had much success meeting women in the United States.

The female sex in the United States is one of the most independent and well-educated in the world. These are truely fine qualities and it's most evident that if you can't already see them they're not what you're looking for in a woman.

To conclude: I hope this response will be read with a "friendly spirit." However, it is my true feeling that some foreign students need to take another look at what the United States of America is really about.

Oh, I almost forgot, just in case you were wondering. I'm not kidding.

Other perspectives

Step proudly there, son, you're walking on the official dirt of the state of Kansas. Those words soon will be heard across the state when Harney silt loam, which covers about 4 million acres of Kansas, is designated the official state soil. A proposal to do just that is now in the House Agriculture and Small Business Committee, and it is expected to breeze through.

It seems that Kansas is following a national trend to designate official state anythings. For example, Florida has an official state beverage — orange juice; Pennsylvania has an official state dog — the Chesapeake Bay Retriever; and Hawaii has an official state fish — the Humuhumu-nukunuku-a-pua'a.

Telling the rest of the nation what kind of dirt Kansas has will not make a strong statement about the state.

Companies study campus parking problems

Redesigning, creating spaces expected to be part of solution

By Vince Huser
Collegian Reporter

The frustrations of on-campus parking may soon be eased.

Two firms — Eres Consultants and Barton-Aschman Associates Inc. — have been hired by K-State to look into the problem of parking and offer potential solutions.

"(Eres Consultants) is ... looking into the actual surface maintenance of parking lots," said George Miller, vice president for administration and finance.

Eres Consultants will conduct a detailed study of the conditions of some of K-State's parking lots, make recommendations on the resurfacing of lots, and provide certain kinds of treatments to protect those surfaces.

Barton-Aschman Associates Inc. is a parking operations consultant that will be looking into such things as the number of additional parking spaces K-State should have, the locations of the parking spaces, and traffic patterns within those parking areas, Miller said.

"They will also advise us in regard to the recommendation we have received from our ad hoc committee on parking," he said. The ad hoc committee's recommendation was for a parking structure to be located south of the Union.

"The consultants will be looking in terms of economic feasibility of (a parking structure) and helping us to size the structure and make recommendations in terms of management and funding of that operation," Miller said.

Both companies submitted their bids and then were selected by the Parking Maintenance Program Selection Committee and the Comprehensive Traffic and Parking Study Selection Committee.

"There was a selection committee for each (contractor)," said Lawrence Garvin, University architect and director of facilities planning.

The parking and planning consultants will provide long- and short-term recommendations as to how the University should deal with current and projected parking problems, Garvin said.

Miller said he is aware of the parking problems and has worked with the traffic and parking committee to provide a number of additional parking spaces that have already been made available on campus.

"On the other hand, I have made a set of recommendations to the parking council, also reviewed by the Campus Developing Committee, that we take other action on campus immediately that would create about 800 additional parking places," Miller said, adding that the soonest that action would be taken is this summer.

Miller made these recommendations because both consulting firms need about six months before their work will be complete. K-State is expected to receive the results sometime in June.

"These (new parking spaces) will be gravel lots, but it is an additional 800 parking spaces and a substantial number of these will be available for students," Miller said.

Several parking lots, including the West Stadium lot, will be redesigned to create the additional parking spaces and should be completed before next fall.

The funds to complete some of these ideas will come out of parking operations, which are the fees charged for parking permits and parking violations.

"In the following years, the tentative plan is to follow up on as many of the recommendations as the consultants will provide with regard to additional parking spaces and move to start paving some of those lots," Miller said.

The goal is to create about 1,600 new spaces, which doesn't begin to accommodate all the visitors to campus, Miller said.

"My personal goal is to address the problem head on and do everything we possibly can do to take care of many of the parking problems that are economically feasible," Miller said.

Fire damages extensive

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

The extent of damages resulting from a grass fire Tuesday in Pottawatomie County near Fields of Fair has not yet been determined.

In addition to burning an estimated 1,000 acres of land, the fire also burned two small sheds, some antique tractors, a greenhouse and a Christmas tree farm, said Milton Toy, assistant fire chief of St. George Fire District No. 10.

"We've got to get out the maps and figure out just how much ground was burned over," he said, adding that deep gullies and rough terrain are making it difficult to get an accurate figure of total acreage that was charred.

"The fire was called 'under control' between 5 p.m. and 6 p.m. Tuesday and was called 'out' at 3 a.m. Wednesday," he said.

The cause of the fire has been determined to be a "rekindle" of a fire on Sunday, he said.

"The fire Sunday got into deep brush, trash and dead trees and there was apparently still some live embers. The wind blew hard enough on them to get a blaze going," he said.

"A truck had been driving over the area periodically checking for flare-ups, but there's not much you can really do about it — we've still got hot embers out in the burn area," he said.

Panel to review free enterprise

By Paula Selby
Staff Writer

The classical economic system — how the public votes with its dollars, what products are produced and who should buy them — will be discussed at the Lou Douglas pre-lecture panel at 7 tonight in Putnam Hall.

Roger Trenary, professsor of economics; Joseph Bellizzi, professor of marketing; Michael Oldfather, professor of economics; and Dick Morse, family economist, will speak on "The Marketplace as an Arbiter of the Public Interest."

Morse, moderator of the forum, said Trenary will describe how the marketplace works. The role of the professional marketer will be represented by Bellizzi, and Oldfather will be concerned with economic and consumer education.

"We'll be speaking about the marketplace and how it theoretically divvies up the pot," Morse said. "Those who have the dollars get (products), and those who don't have them don't get them — the classical economic problem."

"We are all trying to answer the same question — how well this free-enterprise system really serves society," Bellizzi said.

Bellizzi will present some marketplace realities that are common in the free-enterprise economy.

Trenary says the marketplace usually does a good job of deciding what is good for the public.

"I don't deny that government has a role to play (in the economic system). But in general, the less we use the government to decide what is good for people the better," he said. "I think the market does a better job of discovering what people want than government does."

Stanley Cohen will discuss the marketplace and how well it serves public interest at the Lou Douglas Lecture at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in Union Forum Hall.

Lecturer to discuss West Bank

By Chris Wilhelm
Collegian Reporter

Recent events leading to the violence and tension in the occupied territories of the West Bank will be the focus of a lecture by Abdul-latif Ata Akel at 7:30 tonight in Union 212.

His speech, "The Palestinian Uprising: Its Impact and Implications," is being sponsored by the International Coordinating Committee, the Arab Student Association and the political science and history departments.

Akel is the dean of scientific research at An-Najah National University in Nablus on the Occupied West Bank. He is in the United States this year as a professor at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

Akel, who received a doctoral degree in social psychology from the United States International University in San Diego, has had his work published several times. His published works include the textbook "Social Psychology," several books of poetry, columns for two daily newspapers, several plays and writings for other publications.

"Mr. Akel will talk about what brought about the uprising, the motives for it and its strengths and weaknesses," said Michael Suleiman, professor of political science. "He will also talk about the Israeli response and how the problem may be resolved."

Ziad Naji, vice president of the Arab Student Association and senior in business administration, said besides the issues that are directly related to the title of the speech, he hopes Akel will touch on the subject of students attending schools in the areas under military jurisdiction.

"Being a member of the faculty at a university on the West Bank, I hope he will touch on the subject of schools being closed by the Israelis," Naji said. "Some of the schools close for up to three months a semester and a degree that takes four years to complete can often take six or more years to finish.

"This is a problem that deserves world attention," Naji added. "More than 100 Palestinians have been killed since December, and one Israeli soldier was killed in an isolated attack. Up until now, the Palestinians have been resorting to non-violent means such as boycotts and rallies, but with the upscaled violence against them, the problem is getting out of hand."

The speech will last about one hour, Naji said, and will be followed by a question-and-answer session.

Group aims to end world hunger

By The Collegian Staff

Those who attended a presentation by RESULTS Wednesday night were told that the average person can make a difference in the worldwide war on hunger.

RESULTS, an international, grass-roots lobby organization, has been dedicated to creating the political will to end world hunger since 1980. It has more than 70 groups throughout the United States with chapters in Great Britain, Australia and Canada.

Dorsey Lawson, national manager of RESULTS, led the introductory presentation which addressed the possibility of forming a RESULTS chapter in Manhattan.

Lawson spoke about legislation that RESULTS and other organizations such as UNICEF have created that will be introduced in Congress March 29.

The bill — called the Global Poverty Eradication Act — proposes an end to world hunger by 2000, starting with citizen action in the form of letters, calls and other methods.

Thirteen million to 18 million people die each year from hunger and hunger-related diseases, Lawson said. The main thrust of the legislation is the formation of goals that would measure programs that fight hunger to see if they are making progress.

"A country can double or even triple its gross national product and still have the same number of people in trouble," Lawson said. "We need more than just economic indicators of progress."

Adjusting to Change

Adjusting to change has become a routine chore for wheat farmer Rod Gilley and his family in Brewster. Each year brings new challenges to the family that is trying to keep its farm prospering in this small community located just east of Goodland.

This year is no exception.

Last August, Gilley packed his eldest daughter off to college. He buried his grandmother in October and witnessed the birth of his third child — his first son — shortly before Thanksgiving. And in January, Gilley entered a one-year program to become a certified high school teacher.

That's right — a teacher.

As of December 1987, Gilley has been dividing his time between the wheat fields and the classroom. To Gilley, it's just another change to adjust to.

"It's a matter of survival more than anything," he said. "More and more people are coming off the farm and working two jobs."

Gilley will be certified to teach social science after completing the K-State program. The University began the program this year after receiving a grant of $125,000 from the Fund for the Improvement of Post-Secondary Education, a federal agency of the Department of Education.

The main purpose of the program is to retrain unemployed farmers and oil industry workers who meet two requirements: they must have a bachelor's degree in a field other than education, and they must have a desire to retrain for a new career in teaching in the rural community, said Floyd Price, professor of curriculum and instruction and program coordinator.

Price said the majority of the applicants are satisfied with staying in the rural communities, where the demand for teachers is high and recruitment is low.

"Many of them are leaders in the community," he said. "They will continue to contribute to the community in addition to being good teachers."

For Gilley, the program couldn't have come at a better time.

"It's too good to be true," he said. "I've always wanted to go back and get my certification (to teach). ...It sure beats having to move."

Gilley travels three hours to Dodge City Community Junior College for a class every Tuesday and is currently enrolled in a Telenet course — an electronic correspondence course offered through K-State.

This semester, he is acting as a teacher's aide at Brewster High School, which in recent years has felt the effects of a declining farm economy. The school's total enrollment for kindergarten through 12th grade is 140 students, a decrease of 27 students from the 1986-87 enrollment of 167.

The school loses students as families move elsewhere for jobs and industries, said Steven Adams, Brewster High School principal.

Despite the problems and declining enrollment, teaching in a small community appeals to Gilley.

"I want my kids to have the same educational opportunities I did," he said, adding that he believes it is important to maintain a positive attitude. "You have to keep hoping that (the economy) is going to turn around."

Gilley graduated from Brewster High in 1970 and went on to acquire a degree in political science at K-State in May 1974. Although he said he initially went to college with the intention of someday becoming a teacher and a coach, Gilley returned to the family farm after graduation.

The second oldest of seven children, Gilley is the only remaining farmer in a family that has a tradition of farming. Staying on the farm is something that is very important to him.

"It's something that is bred into you, or ingrained," he said. "You just don't want to give it up. So you devise whatever means you can to save it — and it usually flat means more work."

Gilley acknowledged that the birth of his son has driven him even further to make his farm a prosperous one.

"That's the only reason, really — to be able to leave it to someone else," he said. "I'm supposing my son might be interested in farming. He may not be, but it's just the idea that you will have someone to leave it to."

Times have not always been easy for the Gilley family. Gilley went through trying times when he turned his land and his house over to the Farmers Home Administration four years ago.

Since then, he has regained his house and 10 acres of the land and is in the process of gaining the title on the remaining quarter — or 160 acres — of ground.

But now Gilley is faced with another predicament. The recent death of his grandmother, who lived with the Gilleys for the last nine years, has left some 800 acres to be divided up among 15 heirs. Gilley will inherit 75 acres but is intent on acquiring more of the land in the hopes of keeping the land in the family.

"My first goal is to get that land," he said. "I can't afford to lose any ground. I've got to hold things together long enough to buy some ground. It gets back to the old survival game, and that's all it is."

Gilley said he would have no way of paying for the land without another job.

The opportunities to teach and to re-establish his farm "pretty much go hand in hand," he said.

Farmers are not the only ones displaced by the economy. Oil workers and geologists are also hard-pressed for employment, including Bill Arnold, a 1976 K-State graduate. Arnold lives with his wife and son in Lawrence, where his wife is a student in pre-medicine.

After graduating with a master's degree in geology, Arnold worked in the uranium business until 1980.

The demand for uranium was high in the late 1970s, he said, adding that the demand decreased when the number of nuclear power plants being constructed declined. Arnold then worked in California for a gold exploration company, but the precious metals business has had its share of misfortune also.

Springsteen rocks Chicago crowd of 17,000

'Tunnel of Love Express Tour' heads for Midwest

By Robert Manchon
Collegian Reporter

There is no way to adequately describe the kind of rock 'n' roll energy expended March 16 in Chicago by Bruce Springsteen and his superlative E Street Band. It's only March and there is not much doubt that the "Tunnel of Love Express Tour" will set the standards for 1988.

Concert Review

The show started at 8:15 p.m. after a 15-minute delay during which chants of "Bruuuce, Bruuuce, Bruuuce" rang through the crowd of 17,000 at the Rosemont Horizon.

The New Jersey rocker opened the show with the title track from his latest album "Tunnel of Love." He ended the show four hours later proving he and the band are real rockers, not afraid to earn their pay.

Even cultured types who do not usually care for rock 'n' roll can be swept up in Springsteen's rich, literate imagery and poetry of his vocals. His voice sounds like a shout in the street, and he sings of the ups and downs of love and the "Runaway American Dream."

"You gotta see him play live" is an overworked phrase in the rock world, but Springsteen is definitely an audience pleaser. After his third song, "Adam Raised a Cane," from the "Darkness on the Edge of Town" album, he welcomed the hysterical crowd to Chicago.

"Tonight we burn down Chicago," he said.

Springsteen played seven songs from his latest album, "Tunnel of Love," but included most of his fans' favorites as well. The band has honed the newer tunes to a razor edge, but its masterpieces such as "She's the One," "Born to Run" and "Backstreets" show why Springsteen is known as The Boss.

The performance may have exceeded even the most rabid fan's anticipations. Springsteen and crew played two 2-hour sets and four lengthy encores at a level of intensity seldom seen on the rock stage.

"I felt like I just ran a marathon race and won," Steve Fanning, a Kansas City, Kan., resident, said after the show.

"Springsteen could get away with doing less material and putting less into it, but he doesn't," he added.

"Bruce rocked harder than I have ever seen him rock," Fanning said. "This tour was much better than the 1984 'Born in the U.S.A' tour."

Fanning said he has seen Springsteen 12 times in the last seven years.

"Even though the music has stopped, I'll be dancing for weeks," said Paul Sherman, computer programmer and Kansas City, Kan., resident.

Sherman said Springsteen gave the "most devastating show" he has seen and hopes to see him again in Denver and St. Louis.

"This is my first Springsteen concert and I can't believe the hysteria," said Tammy Mitchal, a student at the University of Chicago. "He was just spectacular."

Even though 5,000 seats were backstage, those sitting in the back did not seem to mind.

"It doesn't matter where you sit at (a) Bruce (Springsteen concert), as long as it's in the arena," said Lou Fanning, a Chicago resident and Springsteen fan since 1975. "He can transform the atmosphere of a huge arena into that of a small club."

Springsteen played 33 songs during the four-hour concert and once again added a new line (which is traditional) to his 1973 cult hit "Rosalita."

"The record company, Rosie, gave me so much money — it's ridiculous!" was Springsteen's latest addition to the song.

During this tour, Springsteen introduced a five-piece horn section, which complemented the band, but was not necessary. He also had Patty Scialfa fill in on vocals during "Tunnel of Love" and "One Step Up."

Springsteen closed the concert with a show-stopping version of the Mitch Rider Medley ("Devil With the Blue Dress," "C.C. Rider" and "Jenny, Jenny"). He also threw in a little bit of "Mystery Train."

The next stops in the Midwest for the "Tunnel of Love Express Tour" are St. Louis and Denver.

Division to sponsor NASA space lecture

By The Collegian Staff

Bioserve Space Technologies, a part of K-State's Division of Biology, is sponsoring a lecture by Dale Bremmer at 7 tonight in Ackert 120.

The two-hour presentation will include slides and movies about the space environment, space shuttle, space research and the reasons for manufacturing in space.

Bremmer, an adjunct associate professor at Oklahoma State University, is an aerospace specialist for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. He was hired by NASA to make presentations about the space program, said Kenneth Buyle, special assistant to the Bioserve Space Technologies program.

"(The presentation) is not going to be really heavy with jargon. His expertise is in the area of putting the information on a level everyone can understand," Buyle said.

The biology division is sponsoring the space presentation as part of a $5 million, five-year NASA grant to establish a center for communications development in space. K-State has no departments specializing in space.

"While we're pretty good biologists, we don't know much about space. The NASA grant gives us just that opportunity," Buyle said.

Landscape fills crucial function

Components contribute to structural differences

By Melinda Tiemeyer
Collegian Reporter

Division of the land, the economy, types of housing and the evolution of the small town are four major components that contribute to the way Americans build structures, said John Fraser Hart, professor of geography at the University of Minnesota. Hart spoke Wednesday afternoon during a lecture on landscaping and its effects on the environment.

The lecture focused on how a structure can reflect cultural, environmental and economic differences in landscaping based on how it is built.

"Understanding why a structure is there helps us to better understand the landscape," Hart said.

Different people have different ideas of what structures should look like, he said, which is strongly associated with cultural backgrounds.

For example, styles of housing structures contribute to cultural differences.

"Styles of homes have always reflected the fashion of the era. First there was Colonial, then New Republic, Greek and Victorian," Hart said. "Each style reflects a certain era."

The challenge of building fences to adapt to changing environments produced a wide variety of structures that began with the stone fence and then varied with hedge rows, woven wire — or "hog wire" — stump fences and fence anchors.

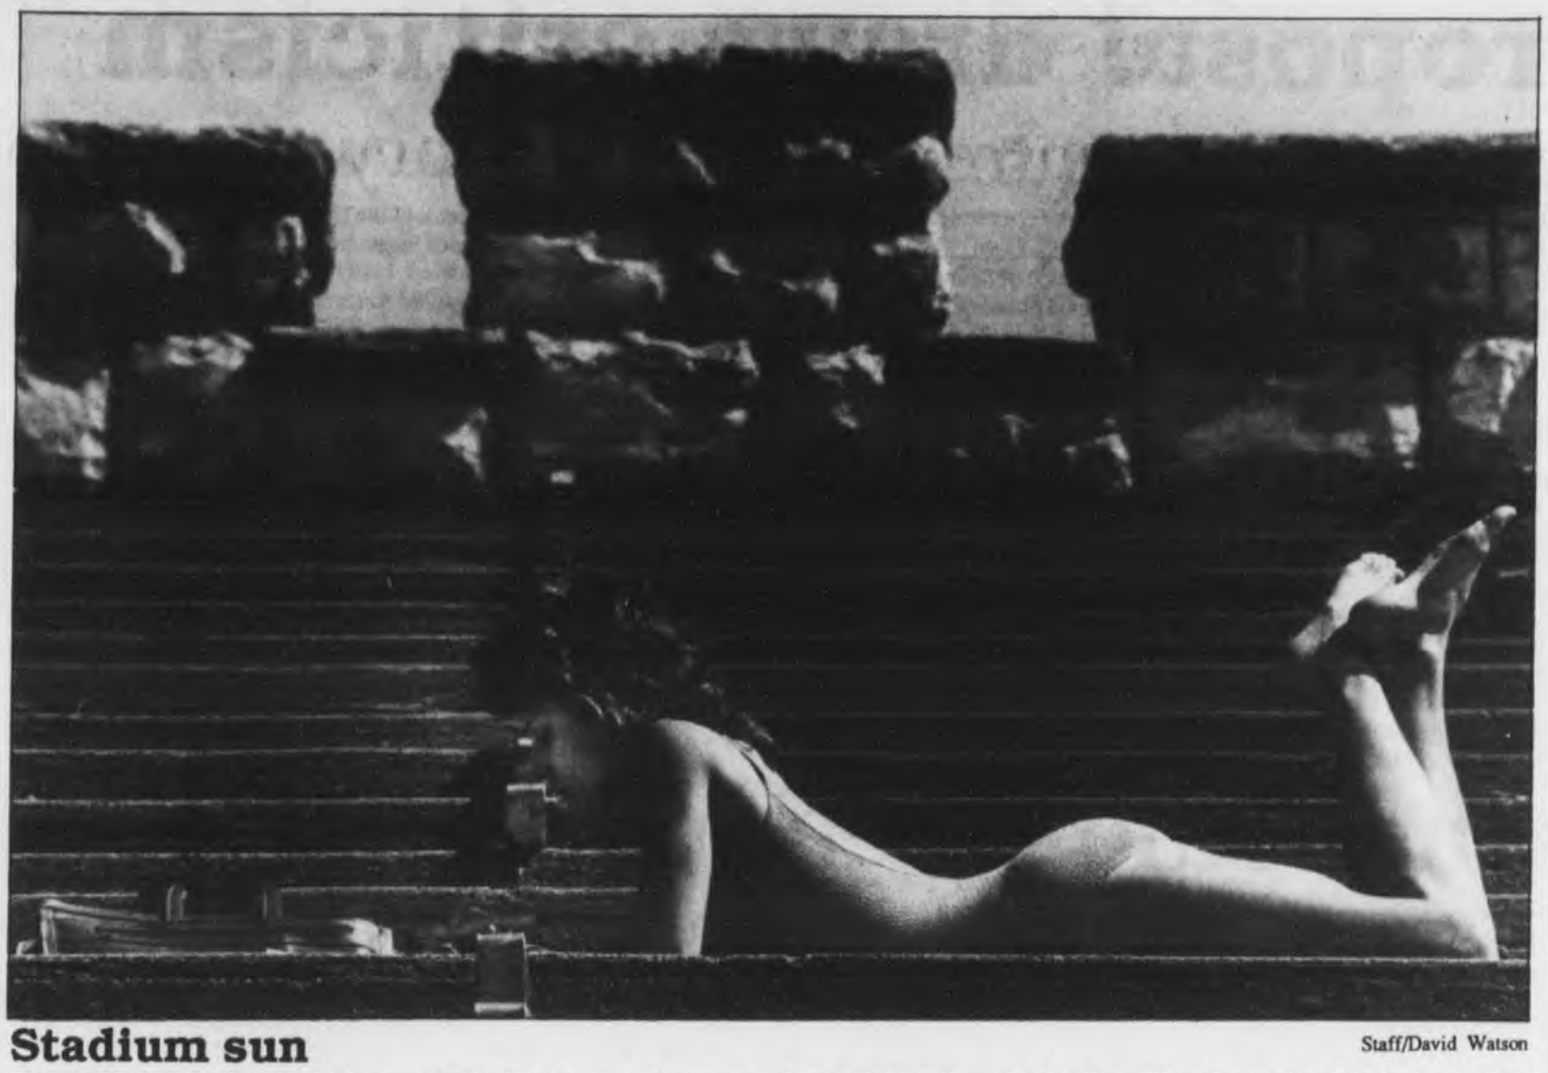
The Sand Hills of Nebraska are actually fences that have been covered by dirt over many years.

"(The Sand Hills fences represent) an attempt to settle somewhere that never should have been settled. The area was never suited for agricultural growth," Hart said.

Land division systems are often adopted from other areas, such as the Cajuns who brought to Louisiana the French method of using narrow fields laying at right angles, he said.

"Fields are now getting longer in the Corn Belt in order to accommodate new and larger machinery," Hart said.

Hart cited the Corn Belt as an example demonstrating differences in farming styles.



"Fields in most of Illinois are small, and barbed-wire fences are used, and crops are rotated each year," Hart said.

"But in eastern Illinois, more cash grain crops are grown — crops grown for sales — and there isn't any livestock or fences. No ties to the land are present.

"Today, farmers must be good businessmen. Farms must increase in size in order to survive, so more farmers are renting land," he said.

Hart said small towns are used for collecting, processing and distributing information for area farmers. Although the smallest of the small towns are not increasing in size, the larger small towns are increasing, he said.

Local entrepreneurs who develop manufacturing centers and farmers who specialize in a certain area may help boost a small town's economy, Hart said.

Proposal draws criticism

Bill would require Kansas history course

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A representative of the Kansas Association of School Boards criticized a bill that would require schools to teach Kansas history, a measure that is one of Gov. Mike Hayden's legislative priorities.

"The issue is not about teaching Kansas history," Richard Funk, lobbyist for the association, told the Senate Education Committee. "All accredited elementary schools already do this. The issue is that Kansas elemetary schools do not teach enough Kansas history. So the question is should the Kansas Legislature mandate how much is enough?"

At a news conference, Hayden said the association showed a lack of leadership in not supporting the bill.

Funk said the Association of School Boards is not opposed to teaching Kansas history, but is against the Legislature mandating a curriculum.

Schools are now being asked to add to their curriculum "social" subjects at the expense of "academic" subjects, he said.

"The reality is you shorten time available or drop that subject," Funk said. "I believe we have reached our limits."

While the proposal might make good politics, he said, legislatively mandating the course would not provide students with a good education.

Gerald Henderson, executive director of the United School Administrators of Kansas, joined in Funk's criticism of the proposal, saying the "problems of quality of education cannot be solved easily by edict."

School administrators are not opposed to teaching the state's history, he said. "Our sole objection is to mandated curriculum beyond that already in statute," he said.

Bill Moulden, a history teacher in the Washburn Rural School District, said many Kansans know very little about their state's history.

He said Kansas history is touched upon in elementary schools, but frequently nothing is taught at the junior high or senior high levels.

He also said Kansas history should be taught at the secondary level, when students retain more of what they are taught.

"There's something special about the great state of Kansas," said Rep. Richard Harper, R- Fort Scott, one of the 58 representatives who introduced the bill. "In order to appreciate Kansas, it's necessary to know something about the history of Kansas."

Reps. Jeff Freeman, R-Burlington, and Denise Apt, R-Iola, also endorsed the bill.

"I don't know how we can expect other people to appreciate our heritage if we don't," said Apt, who is chairwoman of the House Education Committee.

Burnt cross spurs fear, intimidation

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Coordinating Committee of the Black Community asked U.S. Attorney Ben Burgess Wednesday to investigate the burning of a cross last Saturday night in the yard of the executive director of the Topeka Housing Authority.

"Cross burnings are symbols of the Klu Klux Klan and are intended to intimidate and interfere with the employment, housing and public accommodation rights of blacks, other minorities, religous group members and individuals who vigorously support those rights," William Minner said in a letter to Burgess, whose office is in Wichita.

Minner is equal employment opportunity coordinator of the CCBC, a local civil rights organization.

He delivered copies of his letter to the Topeka offices of U.S. Senators Bob Dole and Nancy Kassebaum, U.S. Representatives Jim Slattery and Attorney General Robert Stephan.

Lana Balka, 46, the Topeka Housing Authority executive director, reported to police on Sunday that a 6-foot wooden cross made of 2-by-4 boards had been burned in her yard overnight. Also burned was a small area of grass.

Israel raids Lebanon targets

Battles decline in Israel due to mass arrest policy

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — The army made overnight raids throughout the occupied lands Wednesday, arresting hundreds of Palestinians in its latest strategy for ending a rebellion in which more than 100 Arabs and an Israeli soldier have been killed.

Israeli warplanes flew their second raid in six days against guerrilla targets in south Lebanon.

Arab reports said about 500 Palestinians were rounded up in the sweep. Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin said 3,000 have been detained since riots began Dec. 8 in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Soldiers shot and wounded an Arab protester in Gaza's Jabaliya refugee camp, officials at Shifa Hospital reported. They also said a Palestinian from the Deir al Balah camp had serious head injuries from a beating.

According to U.N. figures, 107 Palestinians have been killed since the violence began, nearly all by Israeli army gunfire or beatings. The Israeli soldier was shot to death by an Arab last weekend.

The number of major protests and street battles has declined dramatically in recent days. Rabin credited tough Israeli policies of mass arrest and economic sanctions.

"The phenomenon of large violent demonstrations has been substantially reduced ... as a result of the general activity of the army, the security forces, the riot police," the defense minister told officers on a tour of Gaza. "We feel a certain tiredness among the (Arab) population."

India protested Israel's handling of the Arab rebellion by canceling a match in Israel by its Davis Cup tennis team scheduled for next month. It was the first such cancellation of a sports or entertainment event.

"We feel a certain tiredness among the (Arab) population."

—Yitzhak Rabin
Israeli Defense Minister

Gad Yacobi, Israel's economy minister, said the violence and strikes have cost Israel more than $335 million in lost production, exports and added security expenses. He said the figure did not include losses to tourism and agriculture.

In the air raid, Israeli pilots destroyed buildings used by guerrillas to store weapons and equipment near Sidon, a port in south Lebanon, the military said. It was the fourth Israeli air raid in Lebanon this year.

The army did not identify a guerrilla group, but Beirut radio stations said the warehouses belonged to Yasser Arafat's Palestinian guerrilla group Fatah and Lebanese Moslem militias.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir reported to the 10-member inner Cabinet on his talks in Washington. A minister who attended said Shamir had found no signs the United States would yield to Israeli requests for changes in its Middle East peace proposals, which involve trading territory for peace.

Ceremony honors classified employees

By The Collegian Staff

Three K-State staff members were named 1988 Classified Employees of the Year at a ceremony Wednesday afternoon attended by Gov. Mike Hayden. In addition, 217 employees were honored for outstanding work, length of service and retirement.

President Jon Wefald, who offered greetings at the beginning of the ceremony, announced the three winners. Selected were Paula Seematter, office assistant in the Graduate School; Sharon J. Hauck, administrative officer in the Registrar's Office; and David Mitchell, general maintenance and repair technician in the College of Architecture and Design.

Thirty-five retirees and 173 employees with five, 15, 25 and 35 years of service were honored along with the other finalists for the Employee of the Year award. The winners were selected by the KSU Classified Affairs Committee, organizer of the 11th annual recognition program.

Coach to receive raise as reward for excellence

Kruger typifies 'Cats' class program

By Bill Lang
Sports Writer

This is the last of a five-part series about the K-State men's basketball coaches who have coached in Ahearn Field House.

He's a winner in every sense of the word.

He is Lon Kruger, coach of the K-State Wildcats, and winning is something he grew up with.

Kruger was raised in the shadow of K-State basketball in nearby Silver Lake, Kan. He was also close enough to Kansas City to be affected by the play of the Kansas City Athletics baseball team.

Sports became an integral part of Kruger's life. He participated in football, basketball and baseball, lettering in all the sports during all four of his years in high school.

"Growing up close to Kansas State and listening to the 'Cats play basketball was great," Kruger said. "I think it would be difficult for anybody to have stronger ties to a school or to a program. I liked basketball very much then and it was what I chose to pursue the most after high school."

And pursue he did. During his career as a Wildcat point guard in the early 1970s, Kruger was named the Big Eight Conference's Sophomore of the Year — now known as the Newcomer of the Year — in 1971. And in the following two years, he was named the Big Eight Player of the Year.

The awards are honors Kruger cherishes and will always remember.

"The help my teammates gave and the way they created things for me made things that much easier," he said.

Chuck Neinas, executive director of the College Football Association, has watched Kruger's development from a skinny freshman to a head coach.

"Sure, there are a lot more good players and great athletes than there were in the Big Eight when Lonnie Kruger played," Neinas said. "But if he were playing today, he would still find a way to be the best."

Kruger didn't star only for the basketball team. He was a two-sport athlete at K-State, playing baseball for four years also.

In fact, baseball almost took the services of Kruger from the basketball ranks. He was drafted by the Houston Astros and played two years in their minor league system.

But high tops and hoops came to overshadow the baseballs and bats when his former coach, Jack Hartman, asked him to be a member of his coaching staff.

"He gave me the offer and I accepted," Kruger said. "I got a chance to get back into basketball and since then its been good to me."

Kruger left K-State in 1982 to assume the head coaching duties at Pan American University in Edinburg, Texas. Kruger's winning attitude gradually took hold at Pan Am. In his four seasons there, the Bronco's were 7-21, 13-14, 12-16 and 20-8.

He returned to his alma mater in 1986, and in his first season, did what no other K-State coach had done before — post a 20-win season in his first season.

Since then, he has compiled a better record (44-19) than any other coach in the Big Eight except Billy Tubbs of Oklahoma (52-13).

But it is this season — the last one in Ahearn Field House — that has meant the most to him, he said.

After the final game in Ahearn Field House — a 92-82 win over Missouri March 5 — Kruger was reminiscent.

"When I got to the top of the stairs (out of the lockerroom hallway)," he said after the game, "nothing in particular came to mind. It was just a blur of great times and memories. It's been a great building and it has had a good life."

And at the 'Cats' send off rally to Pontiac, Mich., Wednesday afternoon just outside of Ahearn, Kruger took one more opportunity to tell the K-State fans just what kind of year it has been.

"You know this really has been a special year," Kruger said. "You look back at it and it seems like not that long ago we started practice Oct. 15.

"At times during the year we wondered what was going to happen to us, but (the players) continued to work hard. ...I think they represent as well as any club can what Kansas State basketball is all about," he added. "I think they now realize how important basketball is to the students at Kansas State University."

And the people of K-State realize just what kind of winner Lon Kruger is. So much, in fact, that he is on his way to receiving a raise.

"We want to reward excellence, and he's been excellent," K-State athletic director Larry Travis said. "As soon as the season's over, we will address some things."

In the midst of leading K-State in its second consecutive NCAA tournament appearance, Kruger has been linked to speculation about the vacant job at Texas.

He was given a $7,000 raise and a one-year contract extension last year after taking the Wildcats to the tournament for the first time since 1982. Travis said he and Kruger had talked about the contract, a four-year deal that pays Kruger a base salary of $65,000 annually.

Travis said reports linking his coach to the Texas job had nothing to do with the talk about a raise.

"The fact that we are doing this has nothing to do with that," said Travis, adding that Texas has not asked for permission to talk to Kruger. "We were going to do it anyway."

Kruger said he and his staff have not let talk about the Texas job become a problem.

"We haven't let it become any distraction at all," Kruger said. "We never address the subject. We just go to practice and try to get the things accomplished that we need to accomplish. If the players have a question about it, we might visit. But there's nothing to address there."

K-State fans have begun to worry about how strong Kruger's ties will be to his own

Since returning to K-State as head basketball coach last season, Lon Kruger produced two 20-plus game winning seasons, compiling a 44-19 record.

Kruger's attributes numerous

Commentary

TOM PERRIN
Sports Columnist

Of all the ovations from Monday's pre-Pontiac pep rally, none came off any louder or more inspired than the applause coach Lon Kruger heard as he stepped toward the microphone.

And maybe it's fitting that it happened that way. Because more than Mitch Richmond or Steve Henson or even athletic director Larry Travis, Kruger is responsible for the resurgence of basketball at K-State.

A student body that was once largely skeptical about the hiring of Kruger has now come to appreciate Kruger's efforts, his responsiveness to K-Staters and Wildcat basketball.

"Every time we take the floor, we talk about how we represent a lot of people," Kruger told the group of around 1,750. "And I think (team members) better realize now than they did two or three months ago how important basketball is to people at Kansas State, how important basketball is to the students at Kansas State."

Only someone like Kruger, a K-State graduate and standout point guard for the Wildcats in the early 70s, could accurately convey that type of message to players. Only a person with a K-State background could understand what it was going to take to return the basketball program to national prominence in just two years.

With all the talk this season about how great a player Richmond has become, how Henson has matured at point guard, how well K-State works together as a team, etc., etc., Kruger's role in the success has somehow been obscured.

Take the voting for Big Eight Conference coach of the year for example. Winning the award by a wide margin was Oklahoma's Billy Tubbs. Kruger finished in a distant second-place tie with Larry Brown of Kansas.

Sure, Tubbs is a great recruiter. Just take a look at the athletes the Sooners put on the floor. But did Tubbs do a bet-

Tournament adds money to coffers

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Forget the fame and glory for just a moment. The Wildcats' first appearance in the NCAA's "Sweet Sixteen" since 1982 means additional income to K-State's athletic coffers.

After defeating La Salle and DePaul in first- and second-round games at the Midwest Regionals in South Bend, Ind., K-State will receive an estimated $317,000 after dividing its profits equally among the other seven Big Eight Conference schools.

If the Wildcats win Friday's game with Purdue in the Midwest Regional semifinals, K-State's share could increase to more than $400,000.

K-State has the smallest athletic budget among the conference schools.

In addition to the money K-State receives from the NCAA's annual postseason basketball tournament, Mike Jones, the athletic department's business manager, said there are other advantages.

"Every time they flash K-State's name or results on the screen as one of the 'Sweet Sixteen' entries, that's free national advertising for us that would normally cost thousands of dollars," Jones said.

The trip to Pontiac, Mich., for a rematch with the Boilermakers will also have postive effects on K-State's future, Jones said.

"As our name recognition goes up, the major networks will be more inclined to carry our games on national TV," he said. "The more we are held in a prominent light, it helps us get through to big sponsors which in turn makes us more attractive to national TV."

If projected incomes as estimated by the NCAA hold true, a school could collect more than $1 million (approximately $230,000 per game) by making it to the Final Four in Kansas City, Mo. The NCAA projections say participating teams should receive: $230,000, first round; $461,500, second round; $692,000, third round; $922,900, regional finals; and $1,153,00 for the Final Four.

K-State also receives a one-eighth share from the other conference teams participating in the tournament. Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri and Iowa State also qualified for the tournament, and KU and OU have qualified for the "Sweet Sixteen."

Big Eight schools such as Oklahoma State, Colorado and Nebraska — which didn't qualify for postseason play — have earned approximately $275,000 from the tournament because they are conference members, Jones said.

When K-State made it to the second round in last year's tournament, it received approximately $275,000.

NCAA NOTES...K-State has been to the NCAA tournament 18 times which is seventh best of any college basketball program in the country.

East regional chalk full of new affiliations

Atlantic 10, Colonial leagues getting awaited recognition

By The Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Duke is the odd team out in the NCAA East Regional, at least when it comes to recognizable conference affiliations.

The Blue Devils, the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament champions, might be the one team in the regional whose conference is familiar to basketball fans.

But for the Atlantic 10, home of top-ranked Temple and Rhode Island, and the Colonial Athletic Association, in which Richmond plays, recognition has been a perennial problem.

"The size of the school, the size of the state, what conference you play for, those things are irrelevant at this point," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said at one of four news conferences Wednesday. "That has no bearing on the game. We just want to concentrate on our players and have them play their game."

Fifth-ranked Duke, 26-6, will meet Rhode Island, 28-6, tonight in the opening game of the doubleheader at the Brendan Byrne Arena, while No. 1 ranked Temple, 31-1, will face Richmond, 26-6, in the second game.

The East Region championship game will be played Saturday afternoon, with the winner heading for the Final Four in Kansas City.

For the Blue Devils to play their game, they must come up with a way to cope with Rhode Island's outstanding senior guard duo of Tom Garrick and Carlton Owens, who both average more than 20 points per game, and blossoming sophomore forward Kenny Green.

The Rams come into the game on an emotional high after victories over Missouri and Syracuse, which was seeded third in the East. Duke is the second seed behind Temple. Rhode Island is the No. 11 seed, while Richmond is No. 13.

"The pressure is on Duke," Rhode Island coach Tom Penders said. "If they lose to us, it's tough. I'm sure (Syracuse Coach) Jim Boeheim has to wear a mask up in Syracuse because he certainly wasn't supposed to lose to Rhode Island of the Atlantic 10.

"We're loose. We feel we have everything to gain and nothing to lose."

One of the keys for Duke will be the play of 6-foot-6 forward Billy King, who will be assigned to try to stop either Garrick or Owens.

"He's a great defensive player," said Owens, who runs the Rams' run-and-gun offense. "It doesn't concern me who he plays. We're still going to play our game."

Krzyzewski is hoping Duke does the same thing against Rhode Island, meaning the Blue Devils play good defense and play as a unit.

"We can't let Owens or Garrick have career games, or let Green take off," he said. "We have to try not to do anything different. We have to play out style."

Temple coach John Chaney said Richmond can cause some problems for his Owls because the two teams are similiar in that they both play good defense and concentrate on a half-court game.

"This is the exciting portion of the year," Chaney said. "I think people who characterize teams in the final 64 as underdogs are people who have closed their heads and eyes on what has taken place. Anything can happen."

Richmond is a perfect example of that. The Spiders knocked off Indiana and Georgia Tech last week to make it to the round of 16.

"Our goal at the beginning of the season was to get to the NCAAs," Richmond coach Dick Tarrant said. "Once we got that, we decided to make Hartford our Final Four. After Hartford, we had a team meeting, reassessed our goals and said let's beat the No. 1 team in the country. Our goals will end tomorrow at midnight if we can beat the No. 1 team."

Pritchard out of shape; knee stable

KU taking confidence to Pontiac

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Confidence was the key word as the Kansas Jayhawks departed Wednesday night for the semifinals of the NCAA Midwest Regional in Pontiac, Mich.

"We're playing well and we're playing together," forward Mike Maddox said. "It's going to be a challenge up in Michigan, but we're not really nervous. We're just really excited."

The Jayhawks, who will play Vanderbilt Friday night, practiced for two hours Wednesday at Allen Fieldhouse.

"We don't want the season to end — not for another two weeks at least," said guard Kevin Pritchard.

Pritchard practiced with his right knee in tape. He sprained the knee playing against Oklahoma State in the opening round of the Big Eight Tournament.

He missed the semifinals against K-State, but recovered quickly to play in the sub-regionals of the NCAA tournament with a fitted knee brace. Pritchard shed the brace Tuesday and played without any support for his knee.

KU trainer Mark Cairns said Pritchard's knee was stable and needed only to be taped for Friday's game.

"I'm still not back in shape," Pritchard said. "I sat out for a week and you can get out of shape that way."

Despite Coach Larry Brown's dislike of the zone defense, the Jayhawks practiced the zone Wednesday in preparation for Vanderbilt's 7-foot center Will Perdue. The Jayhawks also are anticipating that the Commodores will use the zone against forward Danny Manning.

'Frantic': Title misses target

Action disappointing, dull

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reviewer

Frantic, as defined by Webster's Collegiate Dictionary, is something that is "... marked by fast and nervous, disordered, or anxiety-driven activity."

Movie Review

"Frantic," as defined by a movie of the same name, is a slow and boring way to kill two hours and at least as many dollars.

It is the perfect example of a very mistitled movie.

If you go expecting to see a typical Harrison Ford picture — the kind that has made him one of the highest grossing movie actors in history — you will be disappointed.

In other words, if you go expecting action, you will be disappointed. On the other hand, if you go expecting laughter or romance, you will also be disappointed.

Ironically, the thing that makes the movie bad — the failure to meet the expectations given by the title — is also a refreshing aspect of the movie. It is refreshing because of the unexpected performance by Harrison Ford.

He does not play his usual tough guy who always controls the situation. He is a loving family man who has lost his wife and just wants to get her back. No clever gimmicks. No Mr. Macho.

The story line revolves around the kidnapping of an American tourist in Paris because of a mix-up with her luggage. The tourist unwittingly ends up with a suitcase containing smuggled merchandise. Ford's wife is the kidnapped tourist, and Ford is supposed to be the one who is frantic.

But nothing in this movie is ever frantic.

I expected a movie titled "Frantic" to include high-speed chases, fist fights and a lot of suspense.

What I got was a movie that took too long getting started, and once it got started, took too long to end.

Watching "Frantic" is like trying to teach your goldfish to speak — you keep waiting for something to happen, but it never does.

One other positive aspect of the movie is the premiere of Emmanuelle Seigner. This beautiful woman adds the only excitement and intrigue to the movie as she tries to make what she can — financially — out of Ford's misfortune. She is a splash of color in an otherwise gray film.

I give this film a D for dull.

If you are a big Harrison Ford fan, I suggest you use the price of admission to rent one of his other blockbuster movies. It would be a much wiser investment.

State considers new DUI penalty

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Members of the Senate Transportation and Utilities Committee heard testimony Wednesday on a bill that supporters say would give the state another way to penalize people who drive while legally intoxicated.

The bill would allow the Department of Revenue, which issues driver's licenses, to suspend the license of a driver who fails a blood-alchohol test or refuses to take the test when stopped by a police officer. The legal intoxication level in Kansas is 0.10 percent.

Now, only a court can suspend a driver's license, after a person is convicted of driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs.

The bill, part of Gov. Mike Hayden's proposals to toughen drunken-driving laws, is designed to get drivers off the road by suspending their licenses before a court could hear their cases.

"It can be dealt with more quickly through administrative procedures rather than going through the courts," said Jim Keller, an attorney with the Department of Revenue.

However, some committee members said they think only courts should have the right to punish people who drive under the influence.

"What's the reason behind it, other than you just want to harass people?" Sen. Robert Frey, R-Liberal, asked Keller.

Under the bill, if a driver had his license suspended by the Department of Revenue for failing a test, the driver still could be charged criminally with DUI, and if convicted, given additional criminal penalties.

Keller said the bill would not deter prosecutors from charging drivers with criminal DUI, especially if it is the driver's second or third offense.

Because most first-time offenders in Kansas are granted diversion agreements by courts, the bill would not reduce the number of people criminally charged for a first offense, Keller said. Under diversion agreements, a driver is not convicted if he successfully completes a community or rehabilitation program ordered by the court.

Sen. Bill Morris, R-Wichita, told committee members he's heard from the governor's office that some parts of the bill need to be changed.

Hospital loses funding

Recordkeeping below standards

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Federal officials have formally decertified Topeka State Hospital as of March 2, a measure that will cost the state about $354,000 a month in federal funding, according to a state official.

The federal Health Care Financing Administration notified state officials earlier this week that the 400-bed facility was below standards and would not be eligible for further Medicaid and Medicare funds, said Al Nemec, the state commissioner of mental health and retardation.

State officials have appealed the decision, Nemec said, and are taking steps to bring the hospital back into compliance.

Federal investigators were critical of the way the hospital kept its medical records and of the number of registered nurses on staff. They warned state officials during a visit Feb. 29 and March 1 that the hospital probably would be decertified.

After that warning, the Senate amended an appropriations bill to add 16 registered nurses to Topeka State Hospital's staff.

"We've begun recruiting on those," Nemec said. "I don't think we can get recertified until all those are on board. They (federal officials) advised us that a good-faith effort will not do. Budgeted positions will not do it."

HCFA officials have not told the hospital officials exactly how many new staff members they need to hire to meet federal requirements.

During the the last inspection by federal officials, the hospital also was short one psychiatrist, a position that has since been filled, Nemec said.

Nemec said in the past few weeks, the hospital has hired nine new nurses, including three additional nurses budgeted by the Senate and six others to fill existing vacancies.

The University News service has fall openings for student associate writers to cover campus news.

This is not a PR job. It's eight to ten hours a week of solid news experience.

If you have newswriting skills and want to hone them by working with professional news editors and assisting Kansas and national media—and get paid for it—we'd like to hear from you.

Call University News at 532-4614 or pick up an application form at 9 Anderson Hall.

THREE BASIC skill instructors: teach language arts, math and computer literacy. June 6-July 22. $2,000 position for seven weeks. Qualifications: MS/graduate student in related subject; minimum of one year teaching experience; certified by Kansas BOE. Position description available. Send letter of application, resume, name/phone number of two references to: Upward Bound Program, 202 Holton Hall, Kansas State University, Manhattan, Kansas 66506. Application deadline: April 1, 1988. KSU is an AA/EOE. (120-121)

While you polish your design and editing skills in a real-world, professional environment.

University News is looking for an exceptionally talented graduate student with solid newswriting and editing skills and a demonstrated flair for publication design to serve as editor of In-View, the university's twice- monthly faculty/staff newsletter.

We'll provide you with a $20,000 budget, state-of-art desktop publishing system, clerical and office support and the counsel and assistance of our professional staff. You'll manage the budget and design, write, edit and publish what we want to be one of the best and brightest newsletters around. We think it will take you about 20 hours a week to get the job done.

If you have the skills and whether you can start now, this summer or at the beginning of the fall term (candidates who can start earlier will be given preference), we'd like to hear from you right away. Pick up an application at University News, 9 Anderson Hall.

■ and four appearances in the Final Four.

Holthus delivered one fact that gives the underdog K-State fans something to think about.

"If you want to get pumped, if you want to dream, then take this fact and start to dream. The last time the Final Four was held in Kansas City the year was 1964. The four teams that were involved were UCLA, Michigan, which is still in the tournament this year; Duke, which is still in the tournament; and a team that is still in the tournament this year — the Kansas State Wildcats," he said.

Coincidentally, the NCAA Final Four will be in Kansas City, Mo., again this year on April 2-4.

Collegian sports writer Tom Morris contributed to this report.

Monday, took place. A reported breach apparently did not affect the talks to end the six-year-old war.

The Voice of Nicaragua radio report said Contras ambushed an army truck at 2 p.m. Tuesday near Mulukuku, in the northern province of Matagalpa, killing two soldiers. It did not appear to affect the negotiations.

A government source, who had no details, said Maj. Ricardo Wheelock had reported an exchange of mortar fire along the northern border with Honduras in the Bocay region, where soldiers and Contras fought last week. Wheelock, chief of military intelligence, is a member of the Sandinista delegation.

Matamoros told reporters "there could be isolated" truce violations, "but there is a clear will from both sides to respect that decision."

U.S. troops in Honduras again held military exercises staged as what officials called a show of force against Nicaraguan aggression. White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the withdrawal would be "gradual." Pentagon officials said they expected it to come next week.

When the talks resumed Wednesday, Sandinista and Contra negotiators seemed closer than ever to an agreement ending Nicaragua's six-year war.

The proposals they had exchanged Tuesday agreed on many major points, but there appeared to be key differences on verification and on rebel disarmament.

The Sandinistas wanted an international verification commission. The Contras offered one run jointly by Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo, the Roman Catholic prelate of Nicaragua, and Joao Baena Soares, secretary-general of the Organization of American States.

returned to K-State to work on her masters, she applied for a job with the co-op.

"When I looked at the program, I saw that it was something I could use for my daughter. She deserves the best care she can get," Reed said.

Other child care services may be less expensive, she said, but they are lacking in security.

"My child was ready for more than a babysitter. Quality child care that is flexible and accessible includes teachers, a good environment and philosophy to meet the children's needs. The co-op provides that for my child," Reed said.

Dennis McCall, a junior in elementary education, works at the co-op.

"This is an administration concern, but it is also a student concern. The co-op spends about $52,000 a year in student salaries," McCall said. The center currently employees 32 students.

Nancy Bolsen, director of the cooperative, said instructors and parents from day care centers in Manhattan were informed of the rally to show that K-State's cooperative is not the only one facing financial problems.

Over the years, the national debate surrounding child care has changed, said Barry Michie, instructor of anthropology.

"Whether there should be child care or not is no longer the question. Now the question is funding. It has become a bread and butter issue," he said.

The cost of providing infant care is more than the cost of a college education, said Esther Gray, assistant director of the co-op.

Some families spend 30 percent to 40 percent of their income on child care, Bolsen said.

Arnold is also enrolled in the K-State program, and he attends classes at Chanute Community College. He will be certified to teach chemistry after he completes the program.

Although teaching is a big drop in pay from his previous salaries, he believes the career change is worth it.

"I like the flexibility of it," Arnold said. "I always knew that I could get by on less money. I have no fears that I couldn't get by (on a teacher's salary) and live like we have."

Teaching offers more stability than a career in geology, he said, adding that staying at home and spending time with his family is important to him.

Arnold said that students who are planning to graduate with a degree in geology are facing a "pretty tough" situation.

Kruger

roots. The man doing the hiring at Texas is none other than DeLoss Dodds, a former K-State track star, coach and athletic director.

Just as Kruger repaired a slumping K-State basketball program, Dodds resuscitated a badly demoralized K-State athletic department that had been devastated by an NCAA football probation.

Then, with his credentials firmly in order as one of the country's brightest young athletic directors, Dodds accepted career advancement and greater opportunity at Texas.

Will history repeat itself? K-State fans take comfort in the fact that Kruger and his wife are building a big new house in Manhattan.

"We enjoy Manhattan," Kruger says. "We enjoy the people. We're having a great time doing what we're doing. We think it's hard to beat."

Some information in this article was provided by The Associated Press.

ter job of COACHING than Kruger?

Anyone that saw K-State's 69-62 win over Oklahoma at Ahearn Field House would probably tell you that Kruger coached the pants right off of Tubbs. Yet Tubbs, with his run-and-gun Sooner team shooting for 100 points even when it had a 30-point lead, still won coach of the year. Try to figure.

Meanwhile, Kruger just kept tending to business his own low-key style and the Wildcats now carry a 24-8 record into Friday's NCAA tournament game against Purdue.

Maybe Travis could have hired someone with no ties to K-State like former Georgia Tech assistant and now South Carolina coach George Felton or Fort Hays State's Bill Morse. And maybe one of those guys would have done a great job, too.

But Kruger has something none of the other top applicants had nor would they be able to get, no matter how hard they tried.

Kruger is a K-Stater.

When Kruger was making his pitch to recruits that first year like Richmond, Henson, Charles Bledsoe and William Scott, he could talk with intelligence and sincerity about K-State and what the university has to offer.

Where other coaches would likely spend more time trying to sell themselves and the potential of the rebuilding program, Kruger could talk about K-State and Wildcat basketball in a way few others could — from firsthand experience.

Aside from his obvious ability to coach and communicate, it is Kruger's experience, his ties to K-State, that have made him and the basketball program such a success.

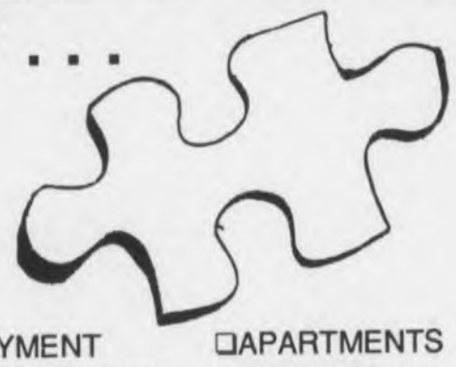
it was going to pass otherwise. We're working to pass it next year," Hayden said.

During his visit to K-State, to participate in the Classified Employee's recognition ceremony, Hayden was asked about the Kansas Senate Ways and Means Committee's Tuesday endorsement of funding above his recommendation for the Margin of Excellence.



Hayden said he had no specific comment about the committee's action at that time.

Hayden said, "We're still reviewing the senate committee's action. As you know, the Legislature has spent a lot of money this session."

"We'll be working with the Senate and House conference committees," Hayden said, to provide a balanced budget for Kansas.

During Hayden's visit he spoke with many senior citizens individually.

Gephardt must have victory in Michigan to stay in campaign

By The Associated Press

Democrat Richard Gephardt, who has fallen on hard times since his Iowa victory 45 days ago, will quit the presidential race unless he scores an upset victory in Michigan this weekend, aides said Thursday. George Bush, meanwhile, headed for Connecticut expecting to pad his huge lead on the GOP side.

Gephardt said he'd made no decision to drop out, declaring, "My mother always told me to cross one bridge at a time." But the scramble was already on to pick up supporters who would be freed if he withdrew.

"There's no question there are some union leaders who are now supporting Dick Gephardt who would find Paul Simon the most attractive of the alternatives," said Illinois Sen. Simon at an appearance in Kalamazoo.

Simon, who is in fourth place in the Democratic delegate count, just ahead of Gephardt, spoke of getting "back in the ballgame."

Among the Republicans, former Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole, wife of Bush's main rival, Sen. Bob Dole, said in Oshkosh, Wis., that her husband now has merely a "long shot" chance, but she added, "He's got the grit and determination needed to keep him in the running."

She said neither she nor her husband have discussed the possibility that one of them might be Bush's running mate for the general election. "I'm really not seeking to be on the ticket. I'm going 12 hours a day just trying to carry Bob's message," she said.

Vice President Bush, holding a commanding lead in the battle for Republican convention delegates, was traveling to Connecticut, saying he was taking nothing for granted in the primary there next Tuesday.

However, public opinion polls give him a big lead over Dole in the state where Bush grew up and where his father once served as a U.S. senator.

Bush said at a news conference that it would be premature to discuss pardons for any of the defendants in the Iran-Contra affair, and that he did not think fallout from the arms-for-hostages deal would hurt his campaign.

The closing of Carousel clothing store and others in Aggieville is only a part of a greater change all Aggieville stores are going through recently. Despite the closings, the overall trend has been one of growth for most Aggieville merchants.

Competitive spirit of Aggieville remains despite slow business

By Robert Short
Collegian Reporter

Although several Manhattan businesses experienced an initial drop in sales after the completion of the Manhattan Town Center Mall, the overall trend is growth and expansion for merchants in Aggieville, according to Lisa Reed, executive director of the Aggieville Business Association.

The recent closing of the Benetton and the Carousel clothing stores represented only a part of the greater change that Aggieville is currently going through, Reed said.

Losing businesses to financial failure and gaining others in their places is nothing new to Aggieville, she said.

Reed said the Aggieville merchants responded to the building of the mall the same way they would for any type of new competition. Markets are constantly changing and area businesses will need to respond aggressively in order to stay open.

"It is up to the managers and owners to have an upbeat attitude and to change with the times," she said, adding it is important for people to understand that location of a store in the mall has been no guarantee for success.

Greg Harris, manager and co-owner of The Sound Shop in Aggieville, said he saw a definite downswing in sales during September and October of last year when the mall opened. However, competitive pricing with the Musicland record and tape store in the mall has brought many customers back.

"Although our sales are still slightly down, we have been noticing a steady increase from last fall," said Charlie Bell, manager and co-owner of The Sound Shop. "The newness (of the mall) has worn off, and the novelty is gone.

"The mall's honeymoon is over," he said.

Stacey Russell, manager of the closed Benetton store, said the closing of the clothing store could be attributed almost entirely to the competition for customers created by the opening of the mall.

"It has been the (Manhattan Town Center) mostly. There wasn't the walk-in traffic anymore," Russell said.

Reed said the space previously occupied by the Benetton store will not stay vacant for very long. A women's shoe store, Standing Room Only, will be occupying the building.

There has been a substantial increase in inquiries for renting space in and around Aggieville in the last several weeks, Reed said.

Betteanne Iandolo, assistant manager for Scot's clothing store in the mall, worked for the Carousel in Aggieville that abrubtly closed Jan.

Oil rig explosion burns 15 people

By The Associated Press

NESS CITY — An oil rig exploded Thursday night near this western Kansas town, creating a fireball that burned 15 people, authorities said.

The explosion sent a "big ball of fire" toward a group of men, women and children who were gathered at the oil rig about 10 p.m., according to Ness County Sheriff Gary O'Brien.

The two most seriously injured were men who suffered burns over 90 percent of their bodies, a spokesman at Ness County Hospital said.

Helicopters from Wesley Medical Center in Wichita were en route to the hospital about 11:45 p.m. The number of injured that would be transported to Wichita for treatment was unknown, the spokesman said.

About four of the victims suffered severe injuries, and one was in critical condition at the hospital. The hospital normally treats about six to eight patients daily, the spokesman said.

The injured were transported to the hospital by private car and ambulance.

O'Brien said he did not know whether the fire started at the rig or at the doghouse, a small building that stands near the oil rig.

Blocked sewer line backs up, leaks into Farrell

Books, resources remain undamaged; operations moved to Anderson Hall

By The Collegian Staff

A blocked sewer line that had water and raw sewage backed up into the basement of Farrell Library forced the closure of the building Thursday afternoon. It is expected to reopen at 7:30 this morning.

Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said the water began leaking into the basement about 1 p.m. and that several inches of water accumulated before it was pumped out by machine.

"The information we have is that the main sewer line from the library is blocked outside the building," Hobrock said. Based on a recommendation from public safety director John P. Lambert that the library be closed, Hobrock decided to close it shortly after 2 p.m.

The line was cleared at about 2:50 p.m., said Jack Watson, director of facilities maintenance. The line was backed up to Bluemont Hall, Watson said, adding that there would be no reason to dig up the line since it had been cleared.

Hobrock said no books or any other library resources were damaged by the water.

"As far as our operations are concerned, we're talking about (damaged) carpets," he said.

Gunile DeVault, assistant director of the Registrar's Office, said the area for dropping classes was moved Thursday afternoon from the basement of Farrell to Anderson Hall to accommodate those students dropping classes. Today is the final day this semester to drop classes.

Big Mac attack hits Yugoslavia

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Communism suffered its first Big Mac attack Thursday as McDonald's opened a restaurant in Yugoslavia, and police were called in to keep customers from getting too unruly under the golden arches.

"I just wanted to taste genuine American hamburgers," said Milica Nikolic, a high school student who waited for three hours to taste her first Big Mac.

People curiously examined the renovated restaurant's plush interior and the back-lit signs depicting the hamburgers, french fries, milk shakes and other fare more familiar in the West. It also featured amber-colored tables and floors, pastel-colored upholstery, modern art paintings and discreet illumination.

The fast-food outlet, located on a downtown square, had drawn crowds in recent days, and they began gathering long before it opened Thursday.

Police kept watch on the lines of customers snaking around the block, and they regulated the number who came inside to avoid overcrowding.

"No opening of a restaurant in Belgrade has created such a sensation as this one today," one policeman said.

Well rescuers divided on movie

MIDLAND, Texas — For 58 hours after a toddler tumbled into an abandoned well, hundreds of rescuers worked together to free her, but now an effort to bring their heroism to television has divided them.

Two groups — one mostly volunteer rescuers and the other city officials — are negotiating separately with different TV producers for a movie of the story that captured the nation's attention as it unfolded live on television.

Both groups are awaiting the endorsement of Chip and Cissy McClure, whose 23-month-old daughter Jessica became stuck in a 22-foot-deep well for 58 hours in October.

One volunteer rescuer, Bruce Peeler, said he is remaining neutral in the dispute. But he said he wonders whether the story could be told properly in any case.

"I am wondering if a unified group got together ... if a really true, accurate picture of what took place could ever be put on the screen," said Peeler, president of Midland's Airmaster Equipment Corp., which contributed drilling materials for the rescue.

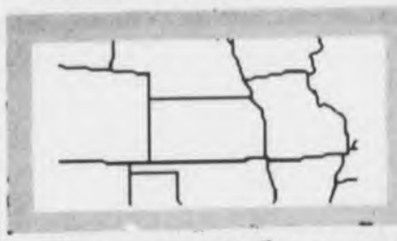
The effort brought praise and a spotlight to Midland, an oil town of 97,400 people in western Texas.

"It was a special event. There was so much effort, and everyone had their own story. Maybe it should be kept special like that," he said Thursday.

Woman sits on pole 517 days

INDIANAPOLIS — Clutching a feline named Pole Cat, Mellissa L. Sanders climbed into the bucket of a hook-and-ladder fire truck and returned to earth Thursday after a record 517 days sitting atop a 43-foot pole.

"My knees are wobbly but I feel great," said Sanders, who was embraced by her mother, Mauri Rose Sanders. "Without the cat, I would never have made it."



Sanders, 19, broke the world record Feb. 25 when she overtook the 488-day mark set by Mark Sutton of Victoria, British Columbia. She now is in the Guinness World Book of Records.

Her fiance, Keith Seal, 25, of Monterey, Calif., greeted her on the ground. They met after Seal read an article about her effort to raise money for cancer research and telephoned her. They announced their engagement in August, before meeting.

"I've been waiting a year for this," he said.

About 1,000 people gathered to watch Sanders' descent from the shack she called home for 1½ years. Some handed her bouquets, others made contributions for her cancer fund-raising efforts.

Sanders said her first activity would be to "drive around town, then take a good long walk."

Homemade candy fits season

McPHERSON — With each new season there are changes in the decor at the home of Harris Terry, the McPherson County sheriff. Now that it's spring, the house has blossomed with chicks, ducklings and Eastern bunnies, some in pastel hues and others in a rich, chocolate brown.

They are the confectionary creations of Barbara Terry, the sheriff's wife.

Word has spread around the community about the quality and flavor of Terry's chocolate and mint-flavored confections. The words are "delicious" "smooth" and "never tasted any chocolate I liked better."

The candies Terry makes are packed in seasonal boxes, so her table is now filled with egg-shaped tins and wooden containers. She already had more than 20 orders for Easter creations.

Candy raises funds for highway

TOPEKA — Rep. Jim Russell is doing his part, bit-by-bit and jellybean-by-jellybean, for one of his favorite projects — the Southeast Kansas Highway.

And, the Coffeyville Democrat points out, the "Southeast Kansas Highway Fund" that he's established by selling jellybeans from a coin-operated dispenser on his statehouse desk is nothing to scoff at, though as of Tuesday it had netted only $44.39.

"That's more money for southeast Kansas highways than we raised in the entire special session," Russell observed.

The special session last September was called to consider a $1.71 billion statewide road program proposed by Gov. Mike Hayden.

Panel discusses goal of market's function

Professors give lecture preview

By Paula Selby
Staff Writer

Consumers can rely on the marketplace as long as they educate themselves, according to speakers at Thursday night's pre-lecture panel.

Michael Oldfather, professor of economics, said that the economic system relies on intelligent decision making by the public.

"There is a need for consumers and households to know about how economic principles work on them, and they on it," Oldfather said.

The panel introduced the topic, "The Marketplace as an Arbiter of the Public Interest," that Stanley Cohen will discuss at 7:30 p.m. March 29 at the Lou Douglas Lecture in the Union Forum Hall.

He predicted that in 43 years, an average family's income will be about $8 to $12 million a year. These figures will require more sophistication and intelligence from the manager of the family's income.

Oldfather said that these changes will cause problems in the future such as an increase in the frequency of career changes and an increase in the flow of money to be managed.

In the future, people will need to be ready to jump from one job market to another. And more importantly, Oldfather said, they need to educate themselves in how financial markets work.

"Information is not free. Educating yourself is going to take time, effort and a lot of work," Oldfather said.

Roger Trenary, professor of economics, said the free enterprise market works on three basic assumptions.

"First, we assume the goal of society is to make people, primarily consumers, as well off as possible," he said.

The second assumption is that individuals are the best judge of what is good for them. The remaining assumption is that all people are rational. Because of this, people who are given sufficient information will choose the appropriate way to achieve any given goal, he said.

In the ideal marketplace, businesses would have incentive to supply products that consumers desire, and people would buy the desired items. Therefore, the businesses would make a profit, and the consumer would be satisfied, Trenary said.

The market falls short of the ideal situation in four areas. It fails when fair competition is not maintained, when people are misinformed, when one person's actions adversely affect another's, and when there is a problem within a joint public good, such as public education.

By breaking up monopolies, Trenary said unfair competition will be controlled. However, he said, natural monopolies should be allowed because they save the consumer money. An example of a natural monopoly is that Manhattan only has one gas company. This is more economical because it eliminates the need for two pipe networks for each home.

To solve the distribution of misinformation, Trenary said that the quality and quantity of information should be improved. Then, in a competitive market, businesses have the incentive to be honest.

"If lying is outlawed, companies with good quality products will speak up about the product, and companies with poor quality products will keep quiet," he said.

Joseph Bellizzi, professor of marketing, said the "consumer-dollar votes decide what is produced."

It is more difficult, he said, to supply what people don't want, than what they do want.

"(Businesses) follow the path of least resistance," he said.

The marketplace operates in the public interest, but has five basic problems, Bellizzi said.

- It offers products that may hurt consumers. Despite the consumers' awareness of the dangers, they continue to buy the product.

"Cigarettes and fatty hamburgers aren't forced on anyone, but people continue to buy them," he said.

- Markets also offer products that may be harmful to the consumer, but the consumers are unaware of the danger.

There is definitely a market for low-price merchandise, he said.

"Small cars are efficient and inexpensive, but sometimes they're dangerous — especially when they run into a bigger automobile," Bellizzi said.

- There is unequal sharing of market segments.

Some people prefer lower-quality merchandise at a low price. Others prefer a high-quality product, and they don't mind paying the additional cost. The problem arises when budget constraints limit the consumer's choice, so not everyone can share in these choices.

- Satisfying one customer may create ill effects for others.

One example, he said, is a fast-food restaurant using Styrofoam containers for their sandwiches. Customers are satisfied because they can wait until they arrive home to consume the sandwich, but disposing of the Styrofoam is difficult. Its burning pollutes the air and may harm many other people, Bellizzi said.

- There is more of a demand for private goods than for social goods. More consumers want to spend money on microwaves and clothing than they do on schools.

Bellizzi said solutions can be found through the government, the consumer and the business.

The consumer can supply the government with enough funds to support social goods, he said. And, the public can ask the government to restrict or abolish harmful products — to outlaw Styrofoam.

KU Senate splits AIDS vote

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE — Members of the University of Kansas Student Senate split 20-20 Wednesday night on a proposal to participate in a study to determine the percentage of college students who have tested positive for AIDS.

The senate voted to put the matter to a referendum by the student body.

Dr. Charles Yockey, chief of staff at the student hospital, said he wanted a decisive opinion from students as to whether they want the university to take part in the study, conducted by the American College Health Association and the Centers for Disease Control.

"That kind of decision (the 20-20 vote) doesn't help us," said Yockey, who heads the staff at Watkins Hospital. "Either way we go we don't have a feel for what the student body wants."

At issue is whether KU should be one of 20 universities that would send 1,000 blood samples to the CDC in Atlanta by January. Officials at student health centers would take random samples from students who had their blood tested.

The tests would be anonymous as researchers would have only age, sex and race to identify each sample.

Yockey said Watkins would receive $5,000 for participating in the study to cover costs associated with the research.

KU has until April 1 to decide whether it wants to participate. But it has until April 12 to make a decision if the ACHA still needs universities for the research. At that time, a student body referendum could decide KU's participation.

On at least 1 airliner, flights are smoke-free

It's about time.

For the past 20 years, airlines have faced increasing pressure to stop passengers from smoking.

On Wednesday, Northwest Airlines — the nation's fifth-largest — became the first major airline to ban smoking on all domestic flights.

Last year, Congress mandated a ban on smoking on all domestic flights of two hours or less, to be effective April 23 of this year. Northwest, which has about 20 percent of its domestic flights being more than two hours, took that mandate a step further.

Northwest officials should be commended for such a decision. While the action is bound to infuriate some, it will benefit everyone from a health and safety standpoint. And many people — even smokers — favor flights without cigarettes.

In a recent survey, Northwest found that 85 percent of its business travelers supported a smoking ban, while 35 percent of the smokers surveyed favored flights without cigarettes.

If the smokers don't even want to sit in smoke, why should non-smokers be subjected to it?

For those who can't go more than two hours without a cigarette, smoking will still be allowed on overseas flights, including those to Hawaii.

Now it's time for other carriers to follow suit. A National Academy of Sciences study in 1986 recommended a smoking ban on all domestic flights because of health risks to non-smokers. Four of Northwest's competitors have said they will obey the federal law, but they currently don't plan to ban smoking on longer domestic flights.

Said a United Airlines spokesman about Northwest's decision: "Only time will tell if that policy is a wise one or not."

Wake up, people. A policy that protects the health of others at little expense to the majority of the population can't be considered anything but wise.

Open House provides opportunity to shine

Another tradition at K-State will continue Saturday, this time in the form of Open House, the University's annual showcase of all it has to offer — and a fun time, to boot.

To begin with, Open House is a wonderful recruitment tool for the University.

Students from all over the state will either drag or be dragged by their parents to K-State in order to view all the sights the University has to offer. Undoubtedly, what they see and experience while visiting will affect any impression the visitors may have of K-State.

Open House is a wonderful opportunity to impress all visitors with the University's atmosphere — the events, the knowledge and the experiences that are shared in one way or another at K-State.

In this one day, visitors will be able to get a small taste of all the mysteries and attractions that a diversified institution of higher learning such as K-State has to offer.

And maybe that small taste will serve to whet the appetites of potential college students.

But Open House is useful in other ways.

Students who are already enrolled at K-State but have not yet declared a major have the same opportunity as other as visitors to see what is offered by the various colleges. What they see at Open House may aid their final decision — and maybe even contribute to a higher retention rate at K-State by way of a greater feeling of security with their initial decision to choose this university.

They're bright and they're brainy, but how happy are today's whiz kids?

The 47th annual Westinghouse Science Talent Search ended recently. Of the 40 finalists, 10 high school seniors were declared winners of $140,000 worth of scholarships. The top prize of $20,000 was bagged by 16-year-old Chetan Nayak of Stuyevesant High School in New York City. Nayak labored on an obscure project dealing with the variational principles for the "Already Unified Field Theory."

It is not my intention to report the details about the winners and their projects. These can be found in most newspapers and magazines. Instead, I want to look at some characteristics of these purported top 10 hopes of the future scientific leadership. Along the way, I wish to express some opinions and draw some generalizations, realizing fully that generalizations are dangerous.

Nayak was born of parents who are immigrants from India. Children of Indian immigrants have constituted the largest number of the competition's finalists during the last decade. Nayak's parents exposed him to chosen programs on the Idiot Box only three or four hours a week. Now he watches little of what he wants to, as he does not have time — which is not an intelligent reason to shun the formidable box.

I have mixed feelings about this whiz kid's interest in reading about and watching sports. This activity gives him time off from feeding on obscure subjects like tensor analysis. However, it is a passivity and he should rather go out in the field and get some fresh air.

Janet Tseng, also from Stuyevesant High, is of Taiwanese descent. At a tender age of sweet 17, she is already researching on AIDS. As a child, she was forced by her mother to solve advanced math problems. When girls her age are reading magazines like "Seventeen," her favorite mag happens to be the "New England Journal of Medicine!" It is a pity that she has no time for leisure. She is so engrossed in studying that she even studies on the subway shuttling between home and school. As an aside, my office-mate (who is from Japan) says the reason no Manhattan High School student made it to Westinghouse is the absence of a subway in Manhattan, Kan.!

Benjamin Abella, the third on the list, is a true scientist in the making; in third grade he pricked himself to look at his own blood under a microscope. He is somewhat of an all-arounder, which is a departure from most of the one-track-minded top 40 finalists. One wonders why he is a pessimist, in his own words. He is already worried about the tough competition for graduate-level reasearch posts.

The computer nerd Vijay Pande was born of Indian immigrant parents, too. Whatever he undertakes ends up becoming a computer program. I hope his interest in computers will last a lifetime and not fizzle out as happens to most computer whiz kids.

Seventeen-year-old Brian Conrad works on "Inverted continued fractions" (Wow!), his goal being to become a mathematician. He has correctly realized that it is asinine to watch the Idiot Box, unlike most American children. (Many an American child who watches television will go down in history; not to mention math, geography and economics, too.) However, it is a pity that he finds literature contrived. Moreover, history turns him off. Most science whiz kids do not realize that liberal arts and humanities are as important (if not more) to life as the natural sciences.

Bronx High School senior Weiva Yu Shieh is of Chinise descent. She is the fourth foreign immigrant offspring in the top six. Educational achievement is a passport to success in America for most immigrants. Weiva seems a down-to-earth type who has time to enjoy a good suspense movie or cuddle up with a good book on philosophy. She is one of my kind, except I would never work on rats.

The blonde and beautiful Stacey Beaulieu is from Florida. This middle-class girl derived great pleasure from observing dead bugs and snakes, of all things. She is already worried about "begging for grant money" to conduct her research. Incidently, she bets that diet pills will be nutritionally sound in the future — any takers?

Geomorphology (what in the world is that?) freak Kurt Cuffey is No. 8 on the list. At 18, this whiz kid is already overworked. He has difficulty staying awake. This workaholic feels the need for five more hours to be added to the day.

Brian Hooker is the only black student on the top 10 list. Like Cuffey, he already feels stressed out. He is afraid of burning out or running into something which will destroy his drive. He is so involved in studying that he refuses to socialize with his friends. On the brighter side, he sounds like someone who would display a bumper sticker on his Porsche, saying "My other car is also a Porsche."

A way to ruin your day? Here's a start...

Stolen cars can try one's patience

Commentary

BECKY LUCAS
Collegian Columnist

It wasn't there.

I closed my eyes and looked again. No — unless it had been shrunk by some incredible shrink ray, my car really wasn't where I was sure I had parked it the night before.

So, I did what any intelligent almost college graduate would be sure to do. I went back inside the house and decided to go outside and try again. It was early (almost 8:30 a.m.) and you never really can believe what's going on until noon.

I carefully locked the door to the house and walked outside. No, it was still gone. I then looked in the garage to make sure it hadn't somehow snuck in there. And then, wondering if the brakes had failed during the night, I walked to the end of the street thinking I would find it smashed against some tree.

No, still no car.

Well, I was quickly running out of ideas. Maybe Mom or Dad had taken it to the shop to be repaired, even though nothing was wrong with the car.

I called Mom, and no, she hadn't seen the car. And yes, she had wondered where it was when she left, but she was running late and thought that I'd already left. Try Dad, she said.

Dad was another matter. By the time I got through to his secretary and explained why I needed to talk to him, I was way too late to go to class.

She finally found Dad. He called me back, and no, he didn't know where the car was, but he too had thought it strange that it was gone this morning when I was still at home.

"Well," he laconically said, "I guess it must have been stolen."

Stolen? I thought, are you serious? We live in a very respectable middle-class neighborhood where nothing exciting, strange or unpredictable ever happens.

If something had to happen, why me?

Once we had determined the car had been stolen, I really did not know what to do, so I called Mom back.

Of course she said she'd be right home. I was to call the police.

I called the police and they said they'd dispatch someone immediately.

Ten minutes later I saw a police car drive past. It drove past our house and then backed up. I met the officer outside, and he was walking up with my dog in tow.

"Dusty," I called to the dog (not the police officer). "Get in the house right now."

The officer looked at me and asked if I knew the dog.

I said yes.

Well, he'd have to call the animal control department and tell them there wasn't really a dog loose — animal leash laws and all that.

That would have been nice — in addition to a stolen car, I almost had a lost dog in the pound.

The officer came in and got the vital statistics about the car. Name, age, date of birth, parents' names, identifying characteristics, you know the list.

It was then I realized how little I really knew about my car. I knew what color it was, and knew it had a few bumper stickers, but were they on the left or right side of the bumper? That I didn't know. I vowed to get to know my car better if I ever saw it in one piece again. I even promised to wash and wax it.

Mom arrived, promptly letting the dog out without a leash. So much for leash laws around the policeman.

She answered the officer's remaining questions and he was off.

If they found my car, they'd call. If not, well....

So there I was. I went back out to the curb and looked at the spot where my car had once silently stood. It really was a nice car — it had only been in a few accidents and had never gotten a speeding ticket. I felt like a piece of me had been taken away.

In addition to that, I had no means of transportation and I needed to get to school. That irritated me.

But, wait a minute, what was that lying on the ground? It looked like the ugly, puke color of the interior of my car. It appeared to be a plastic, metalic combination.

That's it. It was a piece of the steering column and the only piece of the car that was no longer in my possession.

I had one happy thought about the loss of my car.

It was on empty. If the thieves were going anywhere they'd have to pay for the gas, even though they hadn't paid for the car.

However, my car was found shortly after I discovered it was missing, and life is back to normal — at least until the next crisis hits.

Senate postpones proposal on council member selection

By Janelle Larson

After more than 90 minutes of debate, Student Senate voted to postpone indefinitely a proposal from the Business Administration College Council to change the way council members would be selected.

Under the proposal, 10 members of the council would be elected by the students in the college and five would be appointed by the council. The goal of the revision was to increase the diversity of representation on the council.

"The best method is an open election — everyone has the opportunity to vote," said Greg Weisenborn, Senate vice chairman.

"This (appointing members) is a reasonable and viable way to enhance representation," said Justin Sanders, graduate student senator.

The main argument against the bill was that a non-voting adviser should be on the selection committee to ensure an unbiased selection procedure.

Having only students on the selection committee could lead to the committee considering irrelevant issues, said Todd Johnson, agriculture senator.

We need to have an adviser as a non-voting member of the committee to ensure all applicants a fair chance, Johnson said.

Troy Lubbers, student body president, and Doug Folk, Student Senate chairman, traveled to Washington, D.C. ,during spring break to meet with students from Minnesota State University and congressmen to review current issues facing higher education.

Lubbers and Folk met with Reps. Dan Glickman, Jan Meyers, Jim Slattery, Pat Roberts, Pat Whittaker and Sen. Nancy Kassebaum as well as a representative from Sen. Bob Dole's office.

Lubbers and Folk discussed lobbying techniques and cooperation with Minnesota State University with representatives from that university.

Dave Whetstone, chairman of the Athletic Ticket Sales Task Force, reported that the task force has been researching the ticket sales policies of other universities and speaking with Larry Travis, athletic director, and Lon Kruger, head basketball coach.

"We've looked at several other policies, including a lottery and a first-come, first-served policy, which

County's crime rate increases 8.5 percent

By Alison Neely
Staff Writer

Although the number of violent crimes and incidents of stolen property increased 8.5 percent in Riley County last year, a Riley County Police Department official said the increase isn't considered unusual.

Capt. Larry Woodyard said the rise in the number of violent and property crimes from 1,542 to 1,673 is not regarded as alarming considering that Manhattan's crime rate fell drastically during the years 1980 to 1984 — from an average of 2,668 to 1,601 reported crimes per year. Since then, from 1985 to 1987, it has risen an average of 130 crimes per year.

The figures cited are for all Part I offenses, including murder, rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, theft and auto theft, he said. However, the figures for simple assaults — those which are not performed with a deadly weapon and those which do not produce, or have the potential to produce, bodily harm — are not included.

Several factors have influenced the increase in reported rates, Woodyard said.

One of the key factors in the past three years is the increased awareness the public has gained about crime prevention programs, he said. Through the programs the public has learned to report crimes committed against them.

"If we don't know about (the crime), we can't do anything about it," Woodyard said. "So we encourage people to report crimes."

Availability of victims is another factor, he said. Students and military personnel living in Manhattan are the prime target and easy to find because of the abundance of apartment buildings.

They have been increasingly victimized recently because they have the third factor which influences an increase in the crime rate: high-technology equipment such as radar detectors and quality stereos, Woodyard said.

"That kind of equipment is expensive and can be very profitable in resale," he said.

Students' plays highlighted

Playwrights gain opportunity, experience

By Lori Ingmire
Collegian Reporter

College students do not often encounter the perils of the "real world," but this weekend they will have the opportunity to view reality as interpreted by two K-State playwrights.

Plays by Stacy M. Smith, graduate student in English, and Primus Singleton III, junior in journalism and mass communications, are being presented by The Ebony Theatre Company in the Purple Masque Theatre, which is located in East Stadium.

The company, a group of 24 black K-State students, gave the initial performance of the two plays Wednesday and will also be performing today and Saturday at 8 p.m., in addition to Saturday at noon.

A $2 admission fee is being charged for the event, with tickets available at the door and in advance at the Minority Affairs office in Holton 201.

Smith's play, "Wait 'till Morning," will be presented first, followed by Singleton's "Across the Tracks." Both playwrights wrote their works for courses in which they were enrolled last semester. Also, both plays have been entered in the American College Theatre Festival contest.

"Wait 'till Morning" is set in the South during the late 1950s. The play focuses on the way a college-age girl, Marie, deals with the fight for civil rights and how Marie's mother reacts to her daughter's actions.

Smith, who received her undergraduate degree from Stephen's College in Columbia, Mo., said this play is the first of three in her master's thesis.

"The overriding theme of my thesis is that reality is a concept unknown to most," Smith said. "My inspiration for this specific play was my desire to convey the experience of being black and trying to show the black woman's struggle for identity."

Smith began writing "Wait 'till Morning" last September and said the play is still not completed. The words are still not perfect as she continues to write and re-write until the work is perfect.

"When the script is the way I want it, I will try to publish it," Smith said. "Someday, I would like to see it performed by a professional company."

Smith said she writes plays not only because of the enjoyment, but also because this is how she intends to make a living. The playwright of the second play to be performed, however, has a different outlook on the task.

Singleton said writing plays breaks the monotony of journalistic writing.

Sometimes, journalistic writing gets too formulated and structured, he said.

"Writing plays is structured, but it allows more freedom to create in comparison to journalistic writing," he said. "I have found something here that I really enjoy."

Singleton's play is set in present-day Philadelphia. The script focuses on the lives of three young men growing up in the streets of the city.

The turmoil and obstacles affecting these men are portrayed, Singleton said.

The playwright, who is a Philadelphia native, said he has not lived the situation he wrote of in his play, but he said he has seen it happen.

"By relaying this reality through the production, I want to show both black and white Kansans what's going on in other places around the country," he said. "I wanted this work to portray the lives of young, black men on the streets."

Upon initial completion of these two plays, the works were called to the attention of The Ebony Theatre Company. The company then decided to perform the plays, with the two productions presented as an entire show.

Auditions were held in mid-February, followed by the beginning of rehearsals at the end of the month.

The Ebony Theatre Company is in its 10th year at K-State, although it has not been active during that entire time. Last fall, Shirlyn Henry, sophomore in speech and theater, and Barbara Baker, graduate student in speech and theater, made efforts to re-establish the black theater on campus.

Gaining residency topic of reception

By Kenny Harrison
Collegian Reporter

Ways to establish residency will be one of the main issues addressed at a reception Saturday for prospective K-State students from Nebraska and Colorado.

Julie Schuler, admissions representative, is a co-organizer of the first-time reception, which will be from 7:30 to 9 a.m. in Union 212.

It will address issues of concern for students from Nebraska and Colorado who are considering transferring to K-State.

Campus representatives from financial assistance, housing and admissions will attend the reception to answer questions relating to their specific areas.

Most of the questions will concern financial assistance and how a transfer student can gain residency in Kansas, Schuler said.

Even with a $1,000 difference between in-state and out-of-state tuition, many students are not affected by the cost difference, she said.

"(For) students from the Colorado area ... f they would go to their state university, it would cost about two times what our tuition would cost. So they would usually look at an out-of-state school," she said.

K-State, which Schuler said is one of the most reasonably priced universities in the Big Eight Conference, also has many other areas that attract students to campus.

Academic programs, friendliness of people on campus and the personal attention students receive are what Schuler thinks attract most students to K-State.

"We are the smallest in the Big Eight Conference, and that way (students) get a lot of personal attention that they would not get at a larger university. They still get the Big Eight experience," Schuler said.

Michelle Shasteen, a transfer student from Southeast Community College in Beatrice, Neb., and junior in journalism and mass communications, came to K-State because it was close to home and the people were friendly.

Fort Riley soldiers can complete degree through education program

By Mary Strafuss
Collegian Reporter

While the missions of K-State and Fort Riley are expressly different, the two institutions come together for the continuing education of soldiers.

K-State's Continuing Education program extends to the armed forces by offering night classes at Fort Riley in eight-week sessions. Basic courses in English, math, sociology, psychology and speech are offered each term, said Ruth Stanley, Fort Riley coordinator.

"We are here for the military," Stanley said. Classes usually consist of 50 percent military and 50 percent civilians, including K-State students.

Fort Riley soldiers can receive tuition assistance that will pay 75 percent of the total fee required for the courses. The military had paid up to 90 percent for qualified soldiers, but budget cuts have reduced tuition assistance.

K-State offers an associate's degree in arts and sciences and business, Stanley said. Also offered are master's degrees in adult occupation and public administration. A recent addition has been a bachelor's degree in criminal justice for soldiers, Stanley said.

All requirements for degrees are offered in a two-year period, she said. For those soldiers who are transferred before completion of a degree, K-State offers the opportunity to finish degree requirements at another institution and send back the requirements. K-State will then award the degree to the soldier.

K-State students are welcome to take courses at Fort Riley, Stanley said. Since Stanley has been in her job for the past three years, she has tried to publicized the opportunity for students to take more credit hours.

If there are 13 paying students and the course is a base class, full-time students can obtain a fee waiver which will allow the class to be taken at no additional fee, Stanley said.

"Most of the instructors have at one time taught on campus," Stanley said. The off-campus classes are more structured toward the students' individual needs, she said.

For each K-State semester, Fort Riley will have two sessions.

"This appeals to me to be able to take more credit hours," said Jackye Kelsey, junior in journalism and mass communications.

"I like the smaller classes and the more individual teaching," she said. "The teachers bring a more relaxed atmosphere."

Besides smaller classes, the majority of the students are older, which adds more variety, Stanley said. Geography teachers like to teach at Fort Riley because the places being discussed have been visited by many of the soldiers.

"The instructors enjoy dealing with the different breed of older students," Stanley said.

"You just get a better perspective to be in a class where the older students bring in so much knowledge," Kelsey said.

The next session is scheduled to begin at the end of May, Stanley said. Information will be available on courses and times in about three weeks.

These classes work well with students who have daytime jobs, Stanley said, adding that one problem K-State has that Fort Riley does not is available parking space.

Racers predict time to win run

By Melinda Tiemeyer
Collegian Reporter

Participants in the second annual Prediction Run won't be using stop watches. Rather, the runners only need good judgment — or a lucky guess — if they want to win the two-mile race.

The race will start at 9 a.m. Saturday in front of Justin Hall. Its course will not be announced until then.

"It's more fun this way because no one can go out and practice," said Heidi Ryan, junior in nutrition science and race organizer.

Race participants predict how long they expect it will take them to complete the race. Those who finish the race closest to their prediction will be declared the winners in their age group, Ryan said.

First-place winners in each of the six age groups will receive ribbons. Plaques will be given to the overall male and female winnera.

Ryan said 40 entries have already been received for the race, an improvement over last year's 35 entries. Entries will be accepted until the start of the race.

The entry fee is $5, which includes the cost of a T-shirt for each participant, regardless of whether they walk, run or do nothing at all, Ryan said.

"The entry fee money will go toward covering the cost of the T-shirts and any other expenses," she said. "The total cost of the race is around $200. The money comes from Open House student funds. The Graduate Association also contributes by covering advertising costs."

About 20 student volunteers will help organize the race.

ESP

Members: Mike Goodwyn, vocals; Todd Weber, bass; Ken Heaton, guitar, keyboard and vocals; and Bruce Hoisington, percussion.

Ken Heaton, guitarist—keyboard player, works on a song during a practice session. Heaton, who has been with the group since its origin on Oct. 15, 1985, is one of the two original ESP band members.

Local rock group releases 2nd album

ESP started just a few short years ago in an old, rented building in Manhattan, Kan. It began as a studio project among friends. From the beginning, our goal was to write and share musical ideas. Over a period of time the band has changed and evolved in many ways.... The contents of (this album) reflect the style and energy of our own brand of rock 'n' roll. We're proud to be from the Midwest and we're proud of the music on this album. The music is for you. Rock on!

— ESP's second album, Comin' At You"

It's a common dream of young Americans — to grow up and become famous rock 'n' roll stars. Essential Sound Project — ESP — is a group of K-State students who kept that dream as they grew older.

While not actively seeking fame and fortune, the members are pursuing their musical interests beyond singing in the shower, recording a song at the local mall, and even beyond bar and party performances.

ESP, which is described by the members as a straight-ahead midwestern rock 'n' roll band, has recently released its second album.

Ken Heaton, co-founder of ESP, said the overall gross sale of the album, which was released on March 11, is about 300 copies.

"Comin' At You," as well as the band's first release, "Standin in the Spotlight," are available at Wizards, The Sound Shop and Musicland. Local radio stations also have copies.

Beginning at 11 tonight, KSKT-95.3 in Wamego — "The Kat" — will play "Comin' At You" in its entirety.

Local ESP fans and anyone wanting to know about the group will have a chance to "Meet ESP" from 2 to 5 p.m. Saturday at Musicland in the Manhattan Town Center.

"(ESP members) will be available for signing albums," said Denise Kieffer, assistant manager of Musicland. "We have their album and tape on display behind the counter and they are listed on our local events board."

The album is very much a product of its members. Heaton, who was the sound engineer for the album, has owned his own production company, Trilogy Productions, for three years and owns the label, Trilogy Records, under which "Comin' At You" was produced.

Heaton,the only member who is not a full-time student, is the general manager of Bio Research Products and is enrolled in a few classes at K-State.

Mike Goodwyn, senior in graphic art, designed the cover for "Comin' At You," as well as various promotional posters.

Band members are also promoting ESP.

"Now that the new LP is done, we're trying to promote it," Heaton said.

Goodwyn, lead singer of ESP, is from Wichita and plans to give a copy of the album to KICT-95 in Wichita. Heaton, who hails from Kansas City, Kan., will send a copy of the album to KYYS-102 in Kansas City. And Aaron Herzon, who graduated in December with a degree in electrical engineering, took a copy of the album to KSHE-95 in St. Louis. Herzon was the band's bass player at the time the album was recorded.

"These stations can all be described as progressive popular rock because they play popular, upbeat music which is new and different," Heaton said. "They aren't restricted in what they can play."

Heaton described ESP as being a "progressive rock 'n' roll" band.

The name — Essential Sound Project — which was first used by the group shortly after the members got together in October 1985, was Goodwyn's suggestion because he thought ESP was more of a studio project than a live band at the time.

Now that the album is finished and released, the band members plan to play live again, which they have not done since they began working on the album. Before the album, ESP had played at Mannequin's and the Blue River Pub. It was also the second place band in last semester's Battle of the Bands, sponsored by Union Program Council's Eclectic Entertainment Committee.

Heaton and Goodwyn are the only original members of the group. Bruce Hoisington, senior in business administration, became the band's percussionist — better known as the drummer — almost a year ago.

Hoisington was a member of YYZ — a local band which played at Charlie's, Rip & Mo's, Blue River Pub, Holidome and fraternity parties — before he left to join ESP.

"I liked the music because it was original," Hoisington said. "The album idea sparked my attention even more. I gave up performing to do the studio work."

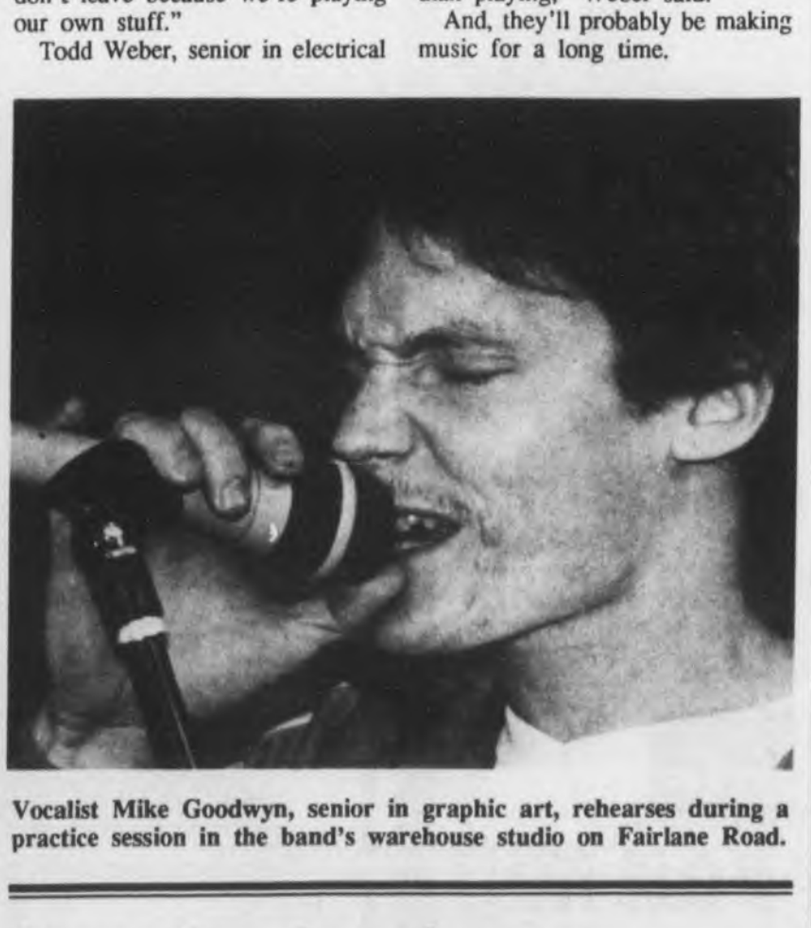
All of the songs on "Comin' At You" were written by band members.

"There aren't very many bands that play two-thirds original stuff and get away with it," Goodwyn said. "We don't have people knocking down doors to see us, but people don't leave because we're playing our own stuff."

Todd Weber, senior in electrical engineering, is the bass player who joined ESP a month ago after Heaton saw an advertisement in the Cottonwood Ads.

"I saw an advertisement — a guy wanted to sell a bass guitar," Heaton said. "I called and said we were looking for a bass player. Todd said, 'Great.'"

Heaton, Goodwyn, Hoisington and Weber are realistic about the future. They know that it is common for bands to break up, especially when members graduate from college, and that music-making may never be the sole means of support for any of them.



But, these musicians aren't about to give up the dream.

"There is nothing I enjoy more than playing," Weber said.

And, they'll probably be making music for a long time.

Heaton adjusts the mixing board at his home in Manhattan. Heaton started Trilogy Productions and also owns the label Trilogy Records, under which the album was produced.

Vocalist Mike Goodwyn, senior in graphic art, rehearses during a practice session in the band's warehouse studio on Fairlane Road.

Event to feature animal judging

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

One of the longest running events of K-State's Open House will feature K-State students Saturday in the annual livestock fitting and showing contest of university-owned animals.

The 60th annual Little American Royal, to be held in Weber Arena starting at 1:00 p.m., is co-sponsored by Block and Bridle Club and the Dairy Science Club. The contest is run completely by students from the sponsoring clubs with Dave Nichols and John Shirley, associate professors in animal science and industry, as faculty advisors.

An opportunity for K-State students to fit and show university-owned animals, the event began in 1928 as a parade and exhibition of university-owned animals, four years prior to the first show.

The Little American Royal is open to any K-State student. This year's show has drawn 140 contestants, with 75 beef entries representing the largest species category.

"It is good to see people getting involved," Susan Reid, assistant instructor of toxicology, said.

Entrants are responsible for cleaning, clipping and show preparation of their animal. The contest is judged only on the students' abilities to show the animal, not on the animal's conformation. Contestants started working with their animals as early as Feb. 24.

Students pre-registered for their top three species preferences of either beef, dairy, horse, swine or sheep. Contestants "drew" for their show animals to ensure fair competition. According to Susan Reid, senior in radio and television, most first choice requests were filled this year and no student received a third choice.

This year's show is being dedicated to Del Allen, former K-State animal sciences and industry professor and now consultant for Excel, Inc., a meat processing company.

Area experts representing each species will serve as judges for the contest. Grand champion awards for each species, with the exception of dairy, are sponsored by the American Royal Association of Kansas City.

'Vice Versa' theme exhausted

By Jeff Schrag
Collegian Reviewer

Even if you haven't seen "Vice Versa," you may have a premonition as to what it's about.

It starts with a parent and child who each think the other one leads an easier life. Then, by a freak accident, they switch bodies. During the following days, each of them learns to understand the other much better. And, of course, they become much more sympathetic toward each other.

This theme has been done several times, under such titles as "Freaky Friday" and "Like Father, Like Son."

Neither of those projects were great movies. "Vice Versa" is no different. But whether it is the best of its type (the parent/child exchange movie) is debatable.

Movie Review

If nothing else, the movie is an opportunity to see Judge Reinhold give a memorable performance as a 10-year-old in a 35-year-old body.

Reinhold's characterization as a man/child is the movie's high point, especially when he is at an executive board meeting and out on a date.

However, it is not so incredible that it turns the movie into a "must see." Instead, it adds a little seasoning to a movie plot so familiar and predictable that the result is like eating scrambled eggs every morning for a decade — without salt or pepper.

I just don't understand what is so compelling about this plot to cause moviemakers to produce it over and over again. A similar movie starring Tom Hanks has also been released recently.

I believe that the American Indian proverb — "Don't judge another man until you have walked a mile in his moccasins" — is good, solid advice. But I don't find the moral behind the parent/child exchange theme as applicable to real life.

Parents and children have different agendas. Only when the child becomes a parent in his own right will the agendas be similar — unless, of course, the two could change places. Then everything would be hunky-dory.

Another aspect of this movie which puzzles me is the time and attention given in attempting to make the audience think exchanging minds is a believable act.

Why can't the moviemakers either hire Steven Spielberg — who could make anything look believable — or stop trying to insult the intelligence of the audience?

There are some funny moments in the film and a few good scenes. But the key words here are some and few.

Since they were using a plot that has been used so many times before, I would think they could have perfected it by now. But, they haven't.

I give it a "C minus." If other parts of the movie were better, the Reinhold's performance would have made it a fabulous movie.

If you are a die-hard Reinhold fan, try to catch a matinee or, better yet, have a friend open the theater's side door for you. This movie is certainly not worth shelling out any more money than is absolutely necessary.

Town Center offers community numerous activities

Staff/Brad Camp
Chris Heavey, general manager of the Manhattan Town Center, stands at the end of the Picnic Place inside the mall.

By Chuck Horner
Staff Writer

One of the newest and perhaps the most visible landmarks and points of reference in Manhattan is the Manhattan Town Center.

In operation since Oct. 27, 1987, this facility is anchored by two major department stores — Dillard's and JCPenney — and currently has 43 other specialty stores with merchandise spanning the spectrum from the latest fashions to the latest music, and a plaza offering a variety of food, said Chris Heavey, general manager and leasing agent for the center.

"Manhattan is a very changing community. We are starting to see, with the center's influence on the trade area, how retail is going to be different inside of Manhattan," he said.

If the mall management and marketing did nothing, the center would simply be a building with stores in it. That, however, is not the case, he said.

"Manhattan Town Center is in many respects traditionally aligned with what is called a community center. For example, we're going to host the (Manhattan High School) prom in the center this year, the Boy Scout Jamboree will be held inside the center and we have K-State open house activities going on inside the center," he said.

There are many things that can be done to create an experience for the customers and that is a major goal, he said.

"We've created a thing called 'Community Hour,' an event that takes place between 10 and 11 a.m. every Saturday morning. I don't care if it's baton twirling to stamp collecting, any community event that we can hold inside our area and attract people to that event is a good," he said.

The center has the capacity for 80 stores, but because of variance in store sizes and the ability to divide into many configurations, the expected final total will be 65 to 70, he said.

Heavey said there are plans under consideration to develop a "sports" bar and an upscale restaurant/bar in the mall, in order to develop a "night crowd" in the downtown area.

"We also expect a third anchor store in the fall of 1989. It hasn't been announced yet, but I wish it would," he said.

"My relationship with Poyntz Avenue and all of downtown is that if they fail, and I succeed — I fail," he said.

The mall is here as a part of the redevelopment of Manhattan. That is the sole purpose of the mall being where it's at, he said.

"We, as the Manhattan Town Center, are very committed to the development of downtown, Aggieville and west side as a whole," he said.

"This is a unique experience where they have leveled a part of downtown and a regional mall is connected to downtown shopping," he said.

The downtown has got to rejuvenate itself over a period of time, he said.

"We've got two choices. We can let the market do its due, and the market will do its due, or we can, by some brainstorming group, come up with what's the best use to complement the center, and who are the parties we need to contact in order to fill the spaces, and I suggest the second alternative," he said.

Mall radio, 1580 AM, is being expanded to include all downtown activities and merchants, he said.

"If five shoe stores in the downtown want to buy time on mall radio and the shoe stores in the mall choose not to advertise on mall radio, no big deal. That's competition," he said.

Heavey said the mall currently employs about 350 people and will probably employ about 600 when it's all done.

"It's diffucult to put a figure on how well we're doing. I'm pleased that the numbers being done by the business in the center make it possible to pay overhead, rent, every charge and cost and make some profit. (It's) maybe not the best profit, but it is covering everything," he said.

One of the stores in the center, Scots Limited, moved out Monday night after the center closed for the day.

The move came as a complete surprise to the center management, Heavey said.

"The closing of Scots had nothing to do with the Manhattan Town Center, but rather was an internal problem of Scots parent organization," he said.

"Three other Scots stores elsewhere closed at the same time and the parent organization is filing action under chapter 11," he said.

According to a local lawyer, Chapter 11 is a form of bankruptcy, typically for corporations. It involves the development of a plan to reorganize and pay debts while still continuing to operate.

Group forms coalition chapter

By Erwin Seba
Government Editor

Six people gathered Thursday in a meeting room of the Ecumenical Campus Ministries building to form a local chapter of the Rainbow Coalition.

The Rainbow Coalition is a national political organization started by the Rev. Jesse Jackson during his 1984 presidential campaign.

Charles Meek, interim state chairperson of the Kansas Steering Committee for the National Rainbow Coalition, congratulated those present for their work in winning seven delegates for Jackson's 1988 presidential campaign out of a total of 12 available in the Riley County Democratic Caucus.

"You did well," Meek said. "Seven out of 12, that's incredible."

The Rev. Al Zimmerman, campus minister and chairman of the meeting, said the purpose of the local organization would be to work on issues of interest to the group.

David Kingsley, graduate student in adult occupational education, said the organization needed to build on the success of the county caucus victory.

"I hate to see us lose the momentum we've built up," Kingsley said.

Meek told the group that while the coalition was started by Jackson, it was not it's sole purpose to see he is elected president this year.

"We can't endorse candidates. You've never heard us endorse Jesse," he said.

But, members of the coalition at the national, state and local levels do work for Jackson and officers of the organization, as individuals, have endorsed him for the presidency, he said.

Meek said "it alienates too many people" for the coalition to endorse political candidates.

Zimmerman said the local coalition could work for the campaigns of local candidates, following the same guidelines that Meek described.

"(The coalition can work for) anybody who is for the same issues as the coalition," Zimmerman said.

One of the local issues Zimmerman said he would like to see the coalition work for is continued funding for the KSU Childcare Cooperative.

Currently, Meek said, other coalition groups around the state are working to educate Jackson delegates from the county caucuses about the delegate selection process at the congressional district and state convention levels.

Lecturer discusses NASA

By The Collegian Staff

Space environment, research and space shuttles were the topic for the Bioserve Space Technologies presentation Thursday night.

Dale Bremmer, aerospace specialist for National Aeronautics and Space Administration and adjunct associate professor for Oklahoma State University, performed experiments throughout the presentation to illustrate how the properties of inertia, gravity and thermal conductivity relate to space and scientists' problems in launching the shuttles.

The first space vehicle was launched Jan. 31, 1958. From that, the space shuttle evolved. During his lecture, Bremmer discussed the space program's history and some of the problems it has encountered since 1958 including the space shuttle Challenger's accident.

"It's kind of tragic that it took a thing like the explosion to get us back on the right track, but now we're heading there. There's more interest in space study now than there has been in the past 10 years," he said.

The technology used with the shuttles is far more advanced than that used 20 years ago, he said. Almost all of the shuttle's parts are reuseable.

"We have to be careful. We never drop anything on populated areas, or in the unfriendly territory," Bremmer said.

Although technology is far more advanced than in the earlier days of space exploration, astronauts manning the shuttles still develop physical problems while in space, he said.

While in space they experience zero gravity and float around, he said. After returning to earth it is common for them to need a three to four day adjustment period to learn to walk again.

Other physical problems include dehydration and depletion of calcium deposits. The only real prevention of calcium depletion is completing four to six hours of strenous exercise per day, Bremmer said.

Students meet with legislators

By Susan Rouse
Collegian Reporter

Student Body President Troy Lubbers and Student Senate Chairman Doug Folk went to Washington, D.C., during spring break to discuss student concerns with members of Congress.

"We hit several concerns with (Congress members) and accomplished a lot, but the main thing is we gained credibility with the people in Washington," Lubbers said.

Students from other regents schools and Mark Tallman, legislative director of Associated Students of Kansas, traveled with Lubbers and Folk.

Tallman said it is difficult for students to communicate their message to national legislators, which is why they took the trip.

"We think it is important to get the message to members of Congress," Tallman said. "We were able to talk face to face with them. They need to hear from students."

The main concerns the students discussed were the guaranteed student loan default rate and the state student incentive grant, Lubbers said.

The default rate for loans is a problem created by students not paying back their loans when they leave college, Tallman said. Officials of the federal Department of Education said that if schools have a certain percentage of defaults they will not be able to give out any more loans. Tallman said this hurts the students who stay in school and need the money.

"These are the students who need the money but won't be able to finish without that money," Tallman said.

Lubbers said the default rate makes it hard for even qualified middle-income students to get financial aid.

Tallman said they are trying to prevent the problem from getting worse by speaking with legislators and voicing student opinions on the problem.

President Reagan has not proposed money in the budget for a state student incentive grant, Tallman said. It is the only federal aid program that goes straight to the state, he said.

This program allocates matching funds to the state of Kansas. Tallman said this gives scholarships to students based on need from the state.

The students lobbied for the program.

"I feel comfortable that we got our point across. They seem to understand what we had to say. We left a good feeling with them," Lubbers said.

Animals protected by law

Guidelines establish conditions

By Paul Branson
Collegian Reporter

Many people think of mice, rats and other rodents as a nuisance, a scratching noise in the wall. Others see them as pets.

Jerry Weis, associate professor of biology, sees these animals as an important responsibility.

Weis is in charge of small animal care for the Division of Biology. His job is to make sure that animal care in his division meets requirements set up by federal and campus agencies.

"Animals are used in all different types of research," Weis said. "Some are involved in behavior studies, others are kept in their natural state just to see how they do what they do."

Weis said animals are also used in research involving nutrition, psychology, disease and immunology.

"No matter what you do, there are strict regulations and guidelines that a researcher must follow," Weis said.

Animals are often treated better than the people caring for them.

"The environmental factors are very strict. When we cut back on energy usage here and the temperature gets down to 62 degrees or so in my office, the animal rooms upstairs have to be kept at 69 degrees to 70 degrees," Weis said.

"I'm sure some of the faculty wouldn't mind moving in with the critters sometimes," he said.

Weis said researchers must file a plan of what they are going to do with animals. The plan must be approved by the Animal Facilities and Care Panel before animals are released for experimentation.

Robert P. Lowman, associate dean of the bureau of general research, is the chairman of the Animal Facilities and Care Panel. Lowman said the panel reviews research procedures to make sure they are within the guidelines set down by various agencies.

Lowman said he was impressed by the concern of researchers at K-State for their animals.

"This concern comes from a need for healthy animals for good research results," Lowman said.

Weis said the guidelines set down by the USDA and the National Institute of Health involve requirements for space, temperature, humidity, feeding, watering and cleanliness.

"If I had to eat a jelly bean dropped on the floor of my office or a jelly bean dropped in one of the animal rooms, I would most certainly pick the jelly bean dropped in the animal rooms," Weis said.

Weis said his animals are kept in better conditions than many people's pets.

Though some of the mice kept by the Division of Biology are native animals, many would never survive in natural conditions.

"These mice have been inbred over several generations. Many of them have lived in a cage all of their lives," Weis said. "If you put a field mouse out on the sidewalk, he'd head for cover so fast that he'd leave smoke. One of these inbred mice, though, would just sit there until somebody stepped on him or he became dinner for something else."

After an experiment, some animals are able to be re-used and some are put to death. This area of animal research is also heavily regulated by federal agencies.

"We have precise guidelines as to when to anesthetize an animal and how to do it," Weis said.

Weis said animals are an important and essential tool in research.

"Many times we can run tests on cultures of cells, and an animal is not used. But sometimes, cells behave differently in a system and sometimes we need to use an entire system in research," Weis said. "This is when we use animals for research."

Purdue also improved since first matchup

'Better chance' awaits 'Cats in Pontiac

By Tom Morris
Sports Writer

Both K-State and Purdue, opponents tonight in the NCAA tournament Midwest Regional semifinals, say forget the game between the two teams earlier this season when the Boilermakers handed the Wildcats a 101-72 defeat.

"That was the low point of our season, but I think we've got a better chance this time. Things can be improved primarily because we're playing better now than we were in December," K-State coach Lon Kruger said.

Senior Ron Meyer added: "It's hard to see how Purdue looks at it. There's no way they can expect to see the same team they did in December.

"Right now we're playing with a lot of confidence ... and everyone's having fun. Everytime we go out we say we need to take care of our responsibilities because if we don't, there is no tomorrow."

Purdue coach Gene Keady was also quick to point out his team has gone through some changes also.

"We have improved in some areas as well," Keady said. "Our free-throw shooting has gotten better, as has our rebounding and half-court defense, and our bench is stronger. We're more confident and believe if we can get the ball inside, we can play with anybody in the country."

Senior forward Todd Mitchell agreed with Keady.

"We're a better team than when we beat them," said Mitchell, who is second on the team in scoring at 15.8 points per game and leads in rebounding at 5.7. "We've done a lot to improve ourselves. People thought we couldn't get past the early rounds."

Tipoff for tonight's game is set for 9 p.m. from the Pontiac, Mich., Silverdome.

The first and second rounds of the NCAA tournament were Purdue's stumbling blocks in each of the past five seasons under Keady. Victories over Farleigh Dickinson and Memphis State last week at South Bend, Ind., ended that streak.

"People said we haven't played well in tournaments, and some never thought we'd be here," said guard Troy Lewis, the Boilermakers' leading scorer at 17.8 ppg. "Now we have an opportunity for a special type season."

But the earlier matchup betweeen K-State and Purdue played in West Lafayette, Ind., is on the minds of some of the 'Cats — especially senior forward Mitch Richmond's. In the previous game, Richmond played just 27 minutes due to foul problems, and had 14 points — his second lowest outing of the season.

"At that point, I was lost," Richmond said.

After that loss, Kruger admitted his attempt at running and pressing was nothing more than an airball. Still, the new and improved 'Cats will have a tough task overcoming a 29-point difference, Kruger said.

"Frankly, I don't think they have any weaknesses. We'll need a little help from them," he said. "I think anytime you play one of the top teams in the country, you have to hope they don't have just a great, great day to give yourself a chance to win."

To defeat Purdue, Kruger said the 'Cats can't concentrate on one area. Plus, the Boilermakers are big and physical — the epitome of Big Ten Conference basketball.

Said DePaul coach Joey Meyer in South Bend last week: "When they took to the floor against Memphis State, I thought it was the Chicago Bears out there."

The defense of Meyer, Fred McCoy and Charles Bledsoe inside could be the crucial key to victory.

"You've got to try and keep them from getting second-shot opportunities, and you've got to try and keep their big people from setting up so deep," Kruger said. "If they set up real deep, it becomes more of a volleyball (game) around the basket, and we can't win that."

NOTES...K-State leads the series 4-2, but has dropped the last two games...in the most recent Basketball Times, Kruger was named to a group of five coaches on the rise...Purdue is one of just two teams to defeat the 'Cats by more than 10 points this season...Meyer made all seven of his field goal attempts at South Bend.

Young golf team to face first test

From Wire Reports

K-State's women's golf team will begin its 1988 spring season this weekend by taking part in the North Texas State Invitational in Denton, Texas.

The tournament will include 18 holes of action Saturday and Sunday at the par 71 NTSU Golf Course. At last year's NTSU tournament, K-State finished 10th of 13 teams.

The only returning letterwinner on this year's squad is sophomore Jill Zientara, who posted an 89.9 stroke per round average last spring. Other members of the team include three freshmen, Chris Adams; Keli Blake; and Beth Holmberg and one junior, Lisa Lugar.

This fall, Zientara had the best K-State finish in three of four tournaments, while Adams was the top individual at the Cyclone Classic.

"Jill and Chris were really close in stroke averages last fall," Coach Rob Sedorcek said. "I really think Chris is a much better player than she showed in the fall."

With this youthful squad, the team struggled during the fall season but did gain a lot of valuable experience which should prove important as spring competition is now set to start.

"It will take the women a couple of years to establish themselves and to get used to the competition before they can really make a move."

Royals' streak ends; Tigers take win, 5-3

By The Associated Press

LAKELAND, Fla. — Jim Morrison hit his first home run and Frank Tanana won his first exhibition game Thursday as the Detroit Tigers beat Kansas City 5-3, snapping the Royals' seven-game winning streak.

Tanana, 1-3, allowed three runs on six hits in the six innings he worked, walking one and striking out four.

Floyd Bannister, 2-1, gave up four runs on five hits in four innings for the Royals.

The Tigers scored two runs in the third inning and two in the fourth.

Pedro Chavez doubled in the Detroit third, moved up on Lou Whitaker's grounder and scored when Bannister uncorked a wild pitch while facing Larry Herndon.

Baseball team looking good early

From Staff and Wire Reports

Although the K-State baseball team has yet to play a Big Eight Conference game and the season is only one-third completed, the 'Cats are already making a name for themselves.

The 16-4 'Cats will put their new-found reputation on the line today through Sunday in tournament play in Springfield, Ill., against Bradley, Illinois and Western Illinois.

K-State's 16-4 start equals that of the 1983 team. One has to go back to the 1911 team's 17-3 finish for a better 20-game record.

Individually, K-State is putting some impressive numbers on the board, led by senior first baseman David Chadd. The Wichita Bishop Carroll graduate is sporting a .531 average that includes a 16-game hitting streak. He has hit safely in every Wildcat game this season minus one. He has also swatted seven homers to equal his 1987 total and he is second on the team with 28 runs batted in.

On the other side of the infield, third baseman Jim Donohue, who only hit .204 a year ago, is also off to an impressive start. He was named the Most Valuable Player in the KASK-Centennial Invitational Tournament in Las Cruces, N.M., where the 'Cats finished first. In six games in the tourney, he slugged four homers and drove in 14 runs. One of his home runs was a game-winning grand slam. Currently, Donohue is sporting a .345 average with seven homers and a team-leading 32 RBI's.

Scott Spangenberg is holding down the fort at shortstop, and along with his glove, has added a .426 batting mark after 20 games. Center fielder Kent Gleason is also over the .400 plateau at .418.

Coach Mike Clark, who posted a 28-24 record in his first year in Manhattan, would probably name pitching depth as the most improved area on his second team. After injuries left the 'Cats with just five pitchers to throw against Big Eight competition, 10 pitchers have already seen action in the 20 games of the 1988 season.

The starting corps is led by Yates Center senior Zack Kimbell. His record stands at 2-1 with the only loss coming to fifth-ranked Arkansas. Kimbell's 3.18 earned run average is the team's best. Starters Jeff Peterson, Darryl Rowley and David Hierholzer are all 2-0.

The talented arms, however, are not just limited to the starting rotation. Bill Schafer, a junior college transfer with a bevy of pitches, leads the team with a 4-0 record and a save out of the bullpen. Jim McClellan, another juco transfer, is 2-0 and has also picked up a save.

After the trip to Illinois, K-State will travel to Creighton to meet the Bluejays Tuesday before hosting Emporia State Thursday. The 'Cats will spend Easter weekend in Stillwater, Okla., as they open Big Eight play against the No. 1 ranked Oklahoma State Cowboys.

OU, Nova victorious in Southeast regional

By The Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Doug West and Mark Plansky keyed a late first-half run, giving Villanova a lead it never lost as the Wildcats upset sixth-ranked Kentucky 80-74 in the NCAA Southeast Regional semifinals Thursday night.

The lone Big East representative remaining from the six who started the tournament turned aside favored Kentucky with a nearly flawless performance.

Plansky scored five points and West four in a 14-3 burst in the last 4:30 of the half to create a 43-32 lead. Villanova, 24-12, built its lead to 49-36 early in the second half and withstood a pair of surges that twice saw Kentucky get within four points.

The victory sent the sixth-seeded Wildcats, who won the national championship in 1985, into Saturday's regional title game against Oklahoma, who beat Louisville Thursday night.

Kentucky, finishing 27-6, first got within four at 63-59 with just under nine minutes remaining, but a 3-point basket by Kenny Wilson ended that threat.

The Southeastern Conference champions got within 74-70 with 2:04 to go, but Villanova milked the 45-second shot clock and West, who finished with 20 points, converted a 12-footer.

Plansky and Wilson each hit two free throws in the final 33 seconds to create eight-point leads as Villanova went 17 of 17 from the free throw line in the game.

Rex Chapman led all scorers with 30 points, including five 3-point baskets.

Oklahoma 108, Louisville 98

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Harvey Grant scored 34 points and Stacey King 24 as fourth-ranked Oklahoma won a fast-paced shootout over Louisville with a 108-98 victory in the NCAA Southeast Regional Thursday night.

The Sooners, topping the 100-point mark for the 20th time this season, surged to an early 11-point lead in the second half, saw Louisville close to 76-74 midway through the half and then pulled away again.

Grant hit his first six shots of the second half, including the team's first four baskets to help build a 64-53 lead with 17:22 to play.

Louisville, 24-11, made a run on two baskets by substitute Mike Abram and another pair by Herbert Crook, cutting the lead to 76-74 with 9:54 to play.

The Sooners wasted little time in asserting control again.

The setback snapped a four-game winning streak for the Cards and also ended their string of eight consecutive victories in the NCAA tourney, dating back to their 1986 title run. It ended Louisville's quest for a fifth Final Four appearance during the 1980s.

Duke, Temple win in East regional

By The Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Kevin Strickland scored 11 of his 12 second-half points during a 22-10 spurt that brought Duke from behind for a 73-72 victory over upstart Rhode Island in the NCAA East Regional semifinals Thursday night.

Duke, 27-6, led by as many as 13 points early in the first half, trailed 51-46 with 15 minutes left in the game.

The Blue Devils, looking to make their sixth trip to the Final Four, responded with their 22-10 spurt in the next 13 minutes, with Strickland hitting two free throws to make it 68-61 with 2:13 left. He also hit Duke's only 3-pointer during the rally.

Rhode Island, which finished the season 28-7 after upsetting Missouri and Syracuse in the sub-regional, closed the gap to 68-65 on two free throws by Kenny Green with 1:10 left.

But Robert Brickey, who scored 15 points, hit four straight free throws in the final 1:04 and grabbed a key rebound off a missed free throw by Strickland with 50 seconds remaining.

Brickey's two free throws with 13 seconds left made it 73-69. Rhode Island rushed the ball upcourt without a timeout and got a 3-pointer from Carlton Owens, the Rams' only 3-point goal of the game, with seven seconds to go.

Duke quickly inbounded the ball, and no Rhode Island player could stop the clock with a foul before the game ended.

Danny Ferry led Duke with 17 points, Strickland finished with 14 and John Smith 12.

Temple 69, Richmond 47

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Mike Vreeswyk scored eight of his 19 points in a 20-8 spurt midway through the second half as No. 1 ranked Temple defeated Richmond 69-47 Thursday night in the NCAA East semifinals, ending the Spiders string of postseason surprises.

The victory was the 18th straight for the top-seeded Owls, 32-1, and moved them into Saturday's regional championship game against second-seeded Duke, which defeated Rhode Island 73-72. The teams have not played this season.

Temple, which went into the game as the No. 1 ranked team in defensive field goal percentage at 39.5 percent, rarely was threatened against Richmond. The Owls' stingy matchup zone constantly forced the Spiders to shoot from much farther than they wanted.

Richmond, the champions of the Colonial Athletic Association, stayed close for about 24 minutes. Then the Owls took over behind Vreeswyk and sensational freshman guard Mark Macon, who scored 24 points.

Leading 39-34, Macon hit a 15-foot jumper to start the Owls on their big run, and Vreeswyk followed with two free throws. Point guard Howard Evans converted a layup off a steal, and after Steve Kratzer hit a layup for Richmond, Evans followed with a 3-point shot for a 48-36 lead.

Vreeswyk added a pair of 3-point field goals late in the run and Macon finished it with a turnaround jumper from 15 feet for a 59-42 edge.

Tim Perry and Evans both finished with 11 points for Temple.

Budget crunch causes Extension hiring problems

By Jackie Brazzle
Staff Writer

Freezing has taken on a new meaning for the Kansas Cooperative Extension Service since an increase in costs and a decrease of in-coming funds has led to a freeze in the hiring of new employees to fill vacancies.

In addition to the hiring freeze, Extension will be implementing a statewide restructuring plan for county staffing of specialists and agents.

Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture and director of the Extension service at K-State, said money targeted for specialist positions has had to be converted to operating funds.

"What these budget-tightening measures mean to Kansas clients is that from 1981 to 1987 — to keep up with increased costs — we've had to convert money for 32.9 specialist positions to operating funds," Woods said.

Woods also said that the hiring freeze has meant the loss of additional staff positions.

"Since a hiring freeze Jan. 1, 1987, we lost an additional 20 administrative and specialist positions," Woods said.

Woods said the restructuring plan will result in a 12 percent to 13 percent reduction in county staffs.

"When the dust finally settles, we will have reduced county agent staffing from 279 (employees) to 246," he said.

Extension receives funding on the county, state and federal levels, as well as from grants and fees. Woods said a large percentage of federal and state funds go toward staffing.

"Approximately 86.4 percent of federal funds and state appropriations for Extension is committed to salaries and fringe benefits of specialists, agents and classified staff," Woods said.

Woods is concerned that decreased funds could mean increased costs to the state. He said federal funds have been level or have decreased from year to year.

"With no increase in federal funds, each one percent increase in salaries for specialists and agents would require $32,400 in additional state funds or compensating cuts in operating expenses or existing programs," he said.

With the restructuring comes a reallocation of funds. Woods said current state and federal funds for Extension are used to cover fringe benefits and retirement packages for agents and specialists. He said more than one-half of the funds that must be reallocated are targeted to support county agents.

"We had little choice but to restructure. The internal reallocation of $800,000 more this year and next year caused us to lose 33 county agents and an additional 20 specialists," Woods said.

Woods said raises in salaries have traditionally come from funds allocated to positions left open for some reason.

"Raises over the last two years for faculty on federal funds came essentially from salaries in positions left open by retirement, death and people moving out to other jobs," Woods said.

Woods said he thinks these budget cuts will continue.

"Furthermore, it looks as if the budget crunch isn't something that will go away, at least in the foreseeable future," he said.

Nicaraguans hopeful as cease-fire is arranged

By The Associated Press

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Nicaraguans on Thursday reacted with hope tempered by memories of war to an agreement between the government and Contra rebels that may bring peace for the first time since 1981.

Both sides kept their guns silent by mutual consent. A business leader said the cease-fire accord signed Wednesday night was a miracle.

During three days of negotiations in a border town that resulted in an agreement Wednesday night, both sides had said it was the last chance for peace in Nicaragua. The formal cease-fire is to begin April 1.

Virgilio Godoy, president of the opposition Independent Liberal Party, said Thursday: "I believe that the agreement is a hope. .. . It is not a question of saying now who won and who lost in the agreement, but that Nicaragua and thousands of mothers who have sons in the war won."

Alonso Moreno, who owns a shoe store and has three nephews in the army, said: "This is the most important thing that has occurred since 1979 when the Somoza dictatorship was overthrown."

In a broadcast Thursday, the rebel Radio Liberacion said, "The (Nicaraguan) Resistance has taken an initial step to end the hostilities in Nicaragua, a very significant step."

El Nuevo Diario, a pro-government newspaper, asked a question in its banner headline: "Cease Fire! Peace Explodes?"

Enrique Bolanos, president of the private enterprise council and staunch government critic, called the pact "a miracle," and added: "Perhaps the Sandinista Front will finally comply with its word."

During the negotiations at Sapoa, on the Costa Rican border 90 miles south of Managua, President Daniel Ortega made a suprise visit and said it was time "to bury once and for all the military confrontation."

Rebel leader Alfredo Cesar told journalists at the meeting: "It is not just a chance to achieve peace and harmony, but the only chance."

Leaders of the Sandinistas and the U.S.-sponsored Contras stood side-by-side on a makeshift dais Wednesday night in Sapoa, sang the national anthem together and signed the cease-fire.

During the three days, both sides retreated from hard positions, especially the Sandinistas, who stand to gain the most from an agreement that would virtually end the insurgency.

The Contras agreed not to accept military aid and to receive non-lethal supplies exclusively from neutral organizations. The Reagan administration, which has financed the rebels since they began fighting in late 1981, has been seeking congressional approval of more funds.

Provisions of the agreement meet requirements of the regional peace plan signed Aug. 7 by all five Central American presidents — ending the fighting, granting political amnesty and restoring democratic freedoms.

Opponents of the Sandinistas say they promised democracy when they overthrew rightist President Anastasio Somoza in July 1979, but instead established a Marxist regime.

Although the cease-fire does not begin officially until April 1, both sides said they would continue the battlefield truce they declared on Monday, the first day of negotiations.

Beginning Monday, also in Sapoa, negotiators will draw the lines of areas to which rebels will go during the first two weeks of the official cease-fire.

Nothing is said in the agreement about the Contras laying down their weapons, so that may be another subject taken up in next week's meetings. In past negotiations, the rebels insisted on keeping their weapons until provisions of any accord were carried out.

Also not mentioned is a reduction of the 80,000-member regular armed forces, largest in Central America. The government claims to have 300,000 people under arms, including army, reserves and civilian militia.

Gradual amnesty is provided for Nicaragua's 3,300 political prisoners, beginning Sunday. The deal also guarantees "unrestricted freedom of expression," demanded by the rebels, and permits all exiles to return home.

Committee hires consultant

By Angela Hale
Collegian Reporter

After hearing presentations from four consulting firms last week, the Big Lakes Regional Solid Waste Committee voted Thursday night to contact Franklin & Associates/Kaw Valley Engineering to negotiate a contract for completion of a five-county solid waste plan.

The solid waste committee chose to contract the Prairie Village, Kan., firm of Franklin and Associates instead of Black & Veatch, Kansas City, Mo./ Schwab & Eaton, Manhattan, after reviewing references for each comapany. These firms were the top preferences of the committee after last week's presentations.

In discussion about the two firms' qualifications, committee members said that references were more enthusiastic in talking about Franklin and that it was a smaller firm with expertise in waste disposal.

Darrell Westervelt, chairman of the Solid Waste Committee, said that with Franklin there would be no political ties after the project was completed. The firm would have nothing vested in the project, so its association with the project would end when Franklin finished, Westervelt said.

In the previous presentations, the committee evaluated each firm's biases, alternatives and public input approaches, said Monty Wedel, Riley County planner. The committee has not selected the actual solid waste system for the five counties.

On July 17, the Kansas Department of Health and Environment ordered the Riley County Landfill to close by June 1990. Leakage from materials in the landfill were causing ground water contamination.

The new form of waste disposal will depend on the study done by Franklin, Wedel said. Possible solutions include a recycling or an incineration system, although "it's likely we're going to need a landfill someplace," he said.

Wedel said the committee has not discussed the cost of the study with the firm. He said the committee wanted a firm "based on qualifications and experience" and that the price will be negotiated. The maximum amount that has been committed by the five counties is $60,000.

is essentially what we have now," said Whetstone.

"We don't think a lottery is in the best interest of the students," said Whetstone, "but we're still looking at possibilities."

Whetstone said there will be an Open Forum on ticket sales at noon Thursday, March 31, in the Union Courtyard. The committee will present its final recommendation to Senate on April 24.

In other action, Speech Unlimited, sponsored by Lynne Ross, asked Senate for financial support in order to send the speech team to Bradley University in Peoria, Illinois, for the national speech tournament.

Last year, the team was funded through the Arts and Sciences Council which is unable to finance the team this year due to budget constraints.

Last year's team placed 21st out of approximately 150 teams. This year the team will be taking eight members as opposed to last year's five to participate in the 13 events for which the team has qualified.

During the last ten years, the team has been ranked in the top 25 college speech teams in the nation as well as winning the national championship in dramatic interpretation last year. The team should do as well as last year, said Brad Atchison, junior in speech and a Speech Unlimited member. This year's team has two returning members from last year's winning squad.

21. Carousel closed its doors without announcing any close-out sale to the public and allowed the other more-successful stores in the chain to absorb the extra merchandise.

Iandolo said these are hard times for all clothing stores in Manhattan, regardless of their location.

Many of the clothing stores in the mall are selling much less merchandise than they were expecting to by this time, she said.

"There is a lot of competition because there are so many junior clothing stores in this area," Iandolo said.

The changes continue, as Scot's Ltd. moved out of the mall.
